"A reciprocal arrangement with Canada for free paper and free pulp is advisable to insure the continuance of the present supply of free logs from Canada. The threatened retaliatory export duty upon logs to be imposed by Canada would ultimately fall upon the newspaper consumer. The present consumption of pulp wood by the pulp and paper mills of the United States, including manila, book, and writing, is stated, upon authority of the Paper Maker, a paper trade journal, at 2,000,000 cords per annum, which consumption requires the entire stripping of pulp timber on 625 square miles per annum.

"Our spruce wood supply is limited. We therefore urge that the commission should take advantage of the present opportunity and immediately secure a sufficient supply of spruce freed from tariff complications.

"The trust, in furtherance of its policy of stifling competition and controlling prices, has increased its timber holdings since this Hatch & Foote statement of July 15 was issued, and that ownership is more than sufficient to give it a wood supply for a long period of years on present production. There are no considerable water powers beyond the control of the trust which can be utilized to operate large plants in competition with the trust, so that all that might be done in the United States toward the enlistment of capital, the development of new enterprises, or the conversion of manila mills to news, or the extension of pulp or sulphite mills to news production, would be inconsiderable in comparison with the wiping out of the duty on paper and the opening of Canada to our relief.

FREE TRADE IN PAPER WOULD PROTECT OUR FORESTS.

"The enlightened policy of New York and other States in protecting forests should be encouraged by putting Canadian pulp and paper on the free list. If consideration be given by the commissioners to the inflated securities issued upon the trust paper mills, then consideration should also be given to the capital invested in newspapers, which represents at least twenty times the capital actually invested in paper mills. If the commissioners feel that the labor employed in the paper mills ought to be protected, then we submit that the labor employed in the newspapers affected by this tariff, numbering forty times the force employed in the paper mills, should also be considered.

A MONOPOLY OF WOOD AND WATER POWER.

"Every increase of a quarter of a cent per pound in the price of news paper adds $34,000,000 to the value of the trust securities. While the enlistment of capital in American enterprises may exercise a slightly deterrent influence on the paper trust, the effect can not be material, because the trust owns the largest and best powers in localities where spruce wood is cheap and from which transportation is prompt and cheap. A successful and energetic competition can not be maintained within the United States. The outside mills that do or can make paper are not equipped for the economical manufacture of news paper. We must look to Canada and the foreign countries where ground wood can be produced at a cost of $7.50 per ton and where news paper can be produced for 1 cent per pound. Free paper is, therefore, the only strong and permanent assurance of protection from this combination. The commissioners should consider whether they are justified in furnishing protection to a combination organized in restraint of trade and intended to extort excessive prices from a representative industry.

"The question of protection and free trade has nothing to do with the question of free paper or free pulp. The tariff duties on these articles have been availed of by a monopoly to obtain an unfair advantage, and the issue is not one of revenue. The duties are not needed to protect any paper or pulp mill in competition with foreign rivals.

TAKE THE TAX OFF INTELLIGENCE.

"The duty on paper stops cheap books and cheap newspapers. It taxes intelligence, because the newspapers are the people's school and their library. All taxes upon paper are taxes upon reading, upon knowledge, upon the dissemination of information. Under any government such a tax would be oppressive and proscriptive. In a government based, as ours is, upon the intelligent and resultant virtue of the people, it is anomalous and monstrous. To make newspapers artificially dear is wantonly to restrict the number of readers and so increase the sum of ignorance. When this is done or proposed to simply add to the profits of a monopoly, the injury to public interests becomes a matter demanding the intervention of the Government."

TRUST PRICES.

In regard to prices, Mr. John Norris, the business manager of the New York Times, testified before the Industrial Commission on April 12, 1901, as follows:

"The news print paper mills received an average of about 1.75 cents per pound, or $35 per ton, under the old form of contract for paper prior to the consolidation, and they are now receiving, I am told, an average of $41 per ton for paper under the new form of contract. One of the officers of the International Paper Company, in a statement to the paper trade, issued November 1, 1900, said 2.25 cents per pound, or $45 per ton, was a low price for paper. The difference between the two forms of contract, equaling $2 per ton, when added to the $6 difference of average quotations, makes an increase of $8 per ton within three years on an estimated output of 600,000 tons per annum, $4,800,000 per annum, which is the additional price now paid for news print paper by American newspapers. The International Paper Company shares in this gain to the extent of about 66 per cent, or $3,500,000 per annum. I know of two newspapers that are paying an increase of $150,000 per annum for their paper supply, or $300,000 per annum for the two.

"The daily output of the various producers of news print papers may be enumerated as follows:

	Tons per day.
International Paper Company	1,300
Great Northern Paper Company, with a present output of	225
Nine outside mills in the East, average	280
Eight western companies	250
Average total	2,055

"In this computation I have omitted a few Pacific companies and southern paper mills which are not factors in this computation.

"The western paper companies are practically united in the General Paper Company, and an offer was recently made to unite all of the outside mills of the East in a scheme to maintain prices at the figure quoted by the International Paper Company. Sufficient evidence to show collusion is not forthcoming, but publishers who apply for quotations realize that in some intangible way the source of their supply has been predetermined for them, and that the price they are to pay has been prearranged for them. In each case the publisher finds that all bids but one are at a prohibitory price. He also finds that he has no remedy against the supply of inferior paper.

"You ask if the consolidation of the mills has curtailed consumption. I can say that as a result of the increased price of paper many newspapers have reduced in size. At one time the New York daily newspapers curtailed 80 tons per week in their consumption. I am told that Philadelphia newspapers took similar steps. * * *

"The present excessive price of paper was made possible by four incidents: First, the Spanish-American war, which created an extraordinary demand for news print paper; second, the South African war, which deflected the Canadian output of wood pulp to Great Britain; third, the phenomenal drought of 1899 and 1900; fourth, the adoption by the International Paper Company of the policy of attempting to check competition, and thereby marking up the price of wood upon itself and upon all other mills.

SUMMARY.

"The duties on wood pulp and paper are indefensible from any point of view.

"In the first place, the duties on pulp and paper compel the 20,000 newspapers of this country to use paper made from our limited supply of wood, instead of from Canada's practically unlimited supply. The effect is to devastate our forests, injure and destroy many industries dependent upon cheap wood and a steady rainfall and water supply, and to injure the health of millions living along our streams, which now overflow in spring and dry up in summer and fall.

"The duties produce no revenue worth considering. They simply foster a monopoly, or trust, which is not an infant, but is now exporting paper to Great Britain, Australia, and Japan, at the rate of 1,000 tons a week. To the extent that these duties enable the trust to charge American consumers higher prices for paper, they injure those consumers, who are forty times greater in number than are the producers. Because paper is used as a medium for conveying news the taxes upon pulp and paper are taxes upon knowledge, and injure the whole American people."

THE SALT TRUST

HAS RAISED PRICES ON SALT 100 PER CENT SINCE 1897—DINGLEY PUT DUTY ON SALT TO ENABLE MANUFACTURERS TO FORM A TRUST—AN ADJUNCT OF STANDARD OIL COMPANY—IT "DEAD RENTS" AND CLOSES PLANTS TO RESTRICT OUTPUT—ITS MONOPOLY ON COAST AND RIVERS IS DEPENDENT UPON TARIFF DUTY.

Salt was on the free list of the Wilson bill, in force from August 28, 1894, to July 24, 1897. Under the McKinley and Dingley bills the duty on salt in bags or barrels was 12 cents, and in bulk 8 cents per 100 pounds. These duties vary from 30 to 100 per cent and will average about 50 per cent.

Before salt was put on the free list the manufacturers appeared at Washington, declaring that such a proceeding would practically ruin the business. Thus Mr. Thomas Molloy, secretary of the Onondaga Coarse Salt Association, told the Senate Committee on Finance that "when salt shall be admitted free, * * * our even now struggling industry shall be paralyzed or destroyed in an unequal competition with the cheaper product of foreign cheaper labor. We will then soon be made to pay to the English Salt Union the price which it exacts elsewhere."

Contrary to predictions, we both produced and consumed more salt from 1895 to 1897 than ever before, as is shown by the following table of production and imports:

Consumption of salt in United States.

SALT ASSOCIATIONS AND TRUSTS.

The salt manufacturers have always had an affinity for selling agencies and price agreements. In 1866 the Michigan manufacturers were uniting. The Michigan Salt Association began in 1876. It takes the product of all members and sells it, thus avoiding much competition. It has been renewed every five years since 1876, and has generally controlled about 90 per cent of Michigan's product, which is one-third of our total product. Since 1890 New York has produced more salt than Michigan, and the two States now produce 70 per cent of our product.

Other similar selling agencies were in operation in New York and Ohio, and each had alliances and agreements with the others. As, however, previous to 1898 but little was done to restrict production, the permanent effect upon prices was not great.

On March 18, 1899, the National Salt Company, a New Jersey concern, was incorporated with $12,000,000 capital, $5,000,000 of which is 7 per cent preferred stock. It immediately acquired fourteen plants in New York, for which its predecessor, the National Salt Company of West Virginia, was the distributing agent. Those plants were said to manufacture 90 per cent of New York's product, and to have made net profits in 1898 of "not less than $450,000." By October this company had purchased many of the best plants in Ohio, West Virginia, Michigan, and Kansas, had leased other plants for five-year periods, and had contracted for the output of other plants. Thus in the Pomeroy, Ohio, district the trust appears to have bought and closed one plant, closed three other plants, which it had "dead rented" for five years, and contracted for the output of three more plants. In Michigan it has contracted for the product of the members of the Michigan Salt Association.

The prosecuting attorney for Meigs County and the attorney-general of Ohio proceeded against this trust to test its power to own and close furnaces which have been running for thirty years.

The United Salt Company, an Ohio corporation of 1890, appears to have been the local trust which prepared the way for the National Company. Both of these organizations are said to be officered by Standard Oil people and to be practically adjuncts of the Standard Oil trust. The headquarters at New York were, until 1902, in the building of the Standard Oil Company, and Standard Oil attorneys in Ohio defended the National Salt Company.

A WORLD SALT TRUST.

In 1901 the International Salt Company of New Jersey was formed, with $30,000,000 capital and $12,000,000 bonds. This new company acquired the properties of the National Company and of the Retsof Mining Company, miners of rock salt, and has also acquired or will acquire the securities of salt properties in Great Britain and Canada. Thus this Rockefeller world trust in salt has an almost complete monopoly (begging Senator Hanna's pardon for using the word) of salt in America and an incomplete monopoly in the rest of the world. This does not mean that the trust can charge unlimited prices for salt at the seashore, because salt can be made from sea water, if necessary. It does mean, however, that the trust can charge at the seashore what it costs, including the duty, to lay down foreign salt there, and in the interior of the country the trust can and does charge about the seashore price, plus cost of freight, although the salt mines are in Michigan, Ohio, western New York, West Virginia, Kansas, and Texas. On this point the president of the salt trust, Mr. Archibald S. White, left no doubt when he testified before the Industrial Commission, April 11, 1901. He stated freely that they got all they could for salt at all points. He said:

"We do not put a price on salt and say if we can not get that price we will quit business, but we meet competition. We make such prices as the conditions warrant, always trying to get a profit, but sometimes selling at a loss. * * *

"Q. (By Mr. PHILLIPS.) Where you have competition at one point, do you sell lower at that point in order to meet it?—A. We have to or we do not sell at all.

"Q. When in competition at that point you sell lower, do you also reduce the price at other points?—A. Not unless we have to. We are governed by the same general laws that govern all business.

"Q. That is, where there is competition you sell low, and you recoup yourselves off the general markets?—A. Certainly.

"Q. Is that fair to the competitor, do you think?—A. We are not looking out for his interests.

"Q. Is it fair to the community?—A. I think it is. It is only a teeter board, where it evens up on the average.

"Q. Doesn't the public get the worst of it?—A. No; they can not get something for nothing. * * * We do not in any one of these districts have a complete monopoly. We do not own all the salt producing capacity in Kansas. There is somebody else there, and we can not put the price up in Kansas to an extravagant point to kill off the competition that we may have in New York or make up to us for the price there."

President White's "teeter board" may average up all right for the trust, but to a bystander it looks as if the trust and the temporary small competitors were on top of the board and the consumers were under it and supporting it.

On the subject of inspection he said:

"Well, there is a fake inspection in Michigan. * * * The barrels are branded before the contents are put into them."

He said the salt was supposed to be inspected in the bin, "but the law isn't carried out."

PRICES BEFORE AND AFTER THE BIG TRUST.

President White produced figures showing that the price of salt per barrel in Michigan was 48⅞ cents in 1895, 40⅛ cents in 1896, 41 cents in 1897, 43⅞ cents in 1898, 38⅛ cents in 1899, 47 cents in 1900, and 55 cents in 1901.

Mr. Christian Klinck, a meat packer, of Buffalo, also testified on salt on May 16, 1901. On the subject of prices he said:

"Q. What has been the general course of prices of salt?—A. (Reading.) We buy all our salt by the ton. These prices are delivered at the packing houses in Buffalo: In 1891, $3.25 per ton; in 1892, $2.85 per ton; in 1893, $2.50 per ton; in 1894, $2.50 per ton; in 1895, $2.50 per ton; in 1896, $2.50 per ton; in 1897, $2.50 per ton; in 1898, $4.05 per ton; in 1899, $4 per ton; in 1900, $4.50 per ton; and in 1901, $5.70 per ton.

"Q. What, in your judgment, was the cause of this very rapid increase in the price of salt from 1898 on?—A. I presume it was on account of the trust. I do not see any other reason."

The following prices of salt were taken from Mr. Klinck's books:

PRICES OF SALT AT BUFFALO.

Year.	Coarse, per ton.	Fine, per barrel.	Year.	Coarse, per ton.	Fine, per barrel.
1891	$3.25	$1.18	1897	$2.50	$0.71½
1892	2.85	1.00	1898	4.05	1.17
1893	2.50	.76	1899	4.00	1.17
1894	2.50	.76	1900	4.50	1.20
1895	2.50	.76	1901	5.70	1.56

SALT WORKS CLOSED TO RESTRICT PRODUCTION.

Mr. Klinck gave more interesting testimony:

"Q. (By Mr. PHILLIPS.) Did the National Salt Company shut down any of the works that they purchased?—A. I think they shut down a majority of them.

"Q. (By Senator KYLE.) Where are their different plants located?—A. There are some in Warsaw, some in Seneca Lake. There is the Crystal Salt Company, not far from Warsaw.

"Q. Are there some in Kansas?—A. Yes; there are some in Kansas. Why, they own salt works in California and all over the country.

"Q. All the salt works in the United States were in the National Salt Company, were they?—A. There are only one or two in New York—the Worcester and the Chauncey—outside.

"Q. (By Mr. PHILLIPS.) Is there, to your knowledge, much complaint in your city in regard to this advance by the National?—A. Oh, there is complaint all over by the dealers. There is naturally a good deal of complaining about the high price of salt.

"Q. Is the grade of salt as good as it was formerly?—A. They do not make the grade of salt as good. They sell more moisture with it than formerly.

"Q. You had to buy it just as they offered it?—A. We had to buy anything they gave us.

"Q. In that ten years did Michigan ever come into the Buffalo market to compete?—A. They would not let Michigan, or Ohio in. You could not buy a pound of salt from Michigan, or Ohio, or Canada. You either had to buy the salt of the National Company or import your salt from Europe.

"Q. Were there any attempts made by the Saginaw people or others to get into that market during the ten years or before?—A. I do not think so. I have tried frequently to buy from there. The last six months salt was sold cheaper in Cleveland than in Buffalo, and Buffalo parties ordered salt in Cleveland—barreled salt. But it was found out that they were shipping salt from Cleveland to Buffalo, and the National Company told the man who shipped the salt down that if he did not stop they would stop selling him.

"Q. (By Mr. PHILLIPS.) They actually told him that?—A. Yes; so I was told.

"Q. Is there any imported salt?—A. Not that I know of. I read in the paper that some was imported. It is very expensive. It costs a great deal more than the National salt; it is claimed to be better, but it costs a great deal more. There is a heavy duty on it."

The salt trust has, because of freight rates, a natural monopoly in salt in many inland States and an artificial tariff monopoly in many of the coast States. It controls foreign companies and, aided by the tariff, prevents big importations and competition from abroad. With due regard to the little competition it must meet in some places, and with no regard for cost of production or the wishes of the consumers, it sells salt at all points at the highest possible price, even closing up half its works to bring consumers to terms. On an average, it has probably advanced the price of salt from 55 cents per barrel to $1. This advance on a consumption of 22,000,000 barrels a year means monopoly profits of $10,000,000.

The abolition of the tariff on salt would not break this monopoly, but it would weaken it and probably reduce its profits by one-half. The freight on imported salt varies from about 75 cents to $1.60 per ton. The duty is $1.60 per ton in bulk. The duty, then, is a greater obstacle to importation than are freight rates.

The only classes that have thus far avoided the trust are our fish packers and our exporters of meats. These only enjoy the special privilege of getting their salt free and cheap. Is there any sound reason why others should be compelled to pay tribute to this trust?

SOME CHEMICAL TRUSTS.

ALL PROTECTED BY NONREVENUE-PRODUCING DUTIES—WOOD ALCOHOL EXPORTED AT PRICES FAR BELOW THOSE CHARGED TO HOME CONSUMERS—PARIS GREEN TRUST VERY PECULIAR—COMES AND GOES IRREGULARLY AND DISAPPEARS AT THE END OF POTATO-BUG SEASON—PRICES NEARLY DOUBLED DURING MAY AND JUNE OF MANY YEARS—TARIFF PREVENTS IMPORTS AND HELPS TRUST.

Although we now manufacture and supply our own market with hundreds of articles which formerly were imported, and although we obtain no revenue from the duties on these articles, yet it is a mistake to conclude, as many have done, that duties on such articles are dead letters and are not effective. It is these nonrevenue-producing duties that are most effective in protecting trusts.

Thus the duties on drugs and chemicals, with few exceptions, produce little or no revenue, yet protect hundreds of trusts. Chemical manufacturers and chemical dealers take to trusts as ducks take to water. Combinations, associations, agreements, and understandings are common throughout the entire trade. Manufacturers in similar lines sell by the same schedule of prices; jobbers practically do the same; retail dealers have uniform prices. Druggists in most cities, villages, or counties have their associations, which fix prices on most of the important articles dealt in. Free and open competition, if it ever existed, is a thing of the past in almost every branch of the chemical trade. Chemicals being mainly raw materials or medicine, protective duties upon them are almost certain to become "instruments of extortion."

Some of the "heavy" chemicals which are controlled by substantial trusts are borax, linseed oil, and white lead. Some others controlled by agreements, selling agencies, etc., are Paris green, ultramarine blue, bromine, etc. Nearly everything in the acid line is under control. Thus acetic acid (wood alcohol) is controlled by a monopoly, Manhattan Spirits Company, which sells in this country at nearly double cost prices. In March, 1900, the price was 90 cents per gallon for what was estimated to cost less than 50 cents. The trust was then exporting its surplus at prices but little above cost. Present (1902) prices are from 60 to 65 cents per gallon.

In "fine" chemicals there are numerous trusts, composed of cliques of manufacturers, which, by means of some form of agreement or understanding, control production and prices of scores of articles. Thus four of our largest manufacturers of chemicals, two in Philadelphia, one in St. Louis, and one in New York, each manufactures about 350 articles. Each firm has its own catalogue, but they might as well sell from one catalogue, for their prices are uniform.

Some of the articles manufactured by these firms are iodoform, citric acid, bismuth salts, mercurials—such as calomel, corrosive sublimate, etc.—chloroform, resublimated iodine, and iodide of potassium, bichloride of potash, bichromate of soda, santonine, strychnine, Rochelle salts, etc.

The duties on all of the above and on hundreds of similar articles are prohibitive and serve no purpose except to protect the trusts formed to take advantage of these duties. As usual, the members of these protected trusts are very wealthy, and much of their great wealth has been filched out of the pockets of the people by means of these worse than useless tariff duties. According to the New York Tribune Almanac (see "American Millionaires"), William Weightman, of Powers & Weightman, one of the four firms mentioned above, is "considered by many the richest man in Philadelphia."

Many chemicals are exported and often at prices considerably below our home prices. But for our inordinate duty and internal-revenue tax of 700 or 800 per cent on alcohol—the most necessary and costly supply in chemicals—our chemical industry would probably lead the world.

PARIS-GREEN TRUST.

The Paris-green combine will serve to illustrate many of the chemical trusts and will be of especial interest to farmers. It is a peculiar trust. It is intermittent and comes and goes so irregularly that it could never be caught by the worst trust-hating attorney-general, armed with the most severe antitrust law. It is as delusive as a will-o'-the-wisp.

While Paris green is classified as a paint, its principal use is as an insecticide for killing potato bugs, cotton worms, and various other insects and worms which prey upon vines and trees. The greatest demand for it occurs during the potato-bug season in April, May, and June. This fact is very significant and important to those who manipulate the prices; also to the farmers who pay the manipulated prices.

About January 1, 1894, the eight or nine manufacturers (all of New York) signed and sent out a circular, saying to jobbers that jobbing prices would be fixed later, and that all who would agree not to purchase elsewhere and who would then order would be given rebates of from 3 cents per pound on orders of more than 10,000 pounds to 1 cent on orders of less than 1,000 and more than 500 pounds. As prices had not in five years exceeded 14 cents per pound, nobody outside the trust supposed that prices would go much higher than formerly. To the surprise of all, prices were marked up to 20 cents about the middle of April, and a month later to 23 cents.

Judging by these prices 1894 must have been a great year for potato bugs, cotton worms, and protected Paris-green makers. The trade, however, understood that the last increase of prices was made to reward jobbers who bought large supplies from the trust and to punish those who had not done so. It was too late in the season for other chemical manufacturers to adapt their plants to make Paris green; and, besides, it would have been difficult to place the article quickly on the market, nearly all the dealers being pledged to sell only the trust's product. These reasons and the duty of 25 per cent prevented the large importations which would otherwise have proved profitable. In fact, but for the duty, importers would carry a reasonable supply of imported Paris green, in order to benefit by sudden great demands and high prices.

The exposure of the methods of this trust in June, 1894, when the Wilson bill was being discussed in the Senate, caused the duty on Paris green to be reduced from 25 to 12½ per cent. In 1897 Dingley yielded to the behests of the manufacturers only to the extent of raising the duty to 15 per cent. This duty, however, serves the purpose of the trust almost as well as did the 25 per cent duty, for it compels importers to sell at a loss every year when prices are not raised by the trust.

The 1894 trust dissolved in the fall, and prices were greatly reduced. In the spring and summer of 1895 prices were again raised to from 17½ to 20 cents. In 1896 the trust thought it prudent not to recombine, and prices varied, mainly from 11 to 12½ cents per pound. In 1897 the Dingley bill was pending during the potato-bug season, and it was not considered advisable by the manufacturers to repeat the mistake of 1894. Hence prices ruled very low. In the East the drug jobbers sold Paris green at 11½ to 12 cents, while in the West, where, as the Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter of January 24, 1898, tells us, the jobbers "very largely operated under local agreements, * * * the price throughout the season was 13½ cents."

The Dingley rates having been settled, the manufacturers got together again in 1898. On February 28, 1898, the Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter said:

"The Paris-green situation seems to partake of much of the uncertainty that characterizes the bug to whose voracious appetite the delectable poison so successfully appeals. * * * Nobody knows when this pest may be expected by the farmer, and nobody knows what it will cost this year to do him up. After the usual annual announcement that, owing to dissensions among competitors, no combination of manufacturers was possible, the makers of green got together a fortnight ago and entered into a selling agreement, the only missing feature of the compact, so far as the public is advised, being the price. Up to date no price has been named, although orders are being booked for delivery later on. * * * Just what that will be is not very clearly foreshadowed, but it is likely to be above the figures of last year."

The trust marked prices up from 11½ to 12 cents on May 2 to 14½ to 18 cents by May 9, and to 14½ to 21 cents by May 23. On May 30 the Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter said: "Not much new business is reported, as the convention's agent is not inclined to sell freely for forward delivery at current prices, which range from 17½ to 21½ cents, according to style of packing. * * * Foreign makes do not cut any ice in this market, and may be quoted nominally at 15½ cents for kegs."

Regarding the situation in 1899, the Oil, Paint and Drug Reporter of January 16 said: "Chief makers are not inclined to sell freely at 9 to 10 cents. * * * The general impression is that when the demand comes in spring, all differences will be patched up and prices will be raised."

By March prices had been marked up to 12½ to 14 cents, where they were held until June 26. This being a bad season and "outside" makers being somewhat numerous and troublesome, the manufacturers did but little in the price-juggling line.

In 1890 prices were put up to from 13 to 15 cents. In 1902 the price was 13 to 14 cents in April and May and 17 or 18 cents in July and August.

The surest and about the only way to injure and possibly to kill this nasty little trust, which has put hundreds of thousands of illegitimate dollars into the pockets of its members, is to put Paris green on the free list.

THE PLATE GLASS TRUST.

HOW "PROTECTION" FOSTERS TYRANNICAL DICTATION AS WELL AS MONOPOLY.

[By Henry W. Lamb, president New England Free Trade League.]

The Industrial Commission has brought out some novel and striking evidence of the manner in which the protective tariff supports "trusts" in their oppression and extortion. In the case of the plate glass trust, alias the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company, the evidence presented demonstrates—

First. That this "trust" has made enormous increase in selling prices.

Second. That it is the protective tariff which makes this possible.

Third. That the trust terrorizes the customers to whom the tariff enables it to dictate.

Fourth. That the removal of protection is the only practical remedy.

Mr. John Pitcairn, president of the Pittsburg Plate Glass Company, gave the Commission an account of the organization of that company, from which it appears that it operates works at Creighton, Tarentum, Ford City, Charleroi, Elwood, Kokomo, Crystal City, and Walton, controlling nearly 80 per cent of the entire output of plate glass in this country.

PRICES RAISED 150 PER CENT.

Mr. George H. Mayer, engaged in the glass business in Philadelphia, presented figures to show that the trust had advanced prices within the last three years 150 per cent. He specified three sizes, which, he said, covered the greater part of the demand, 12 inches by 60, 24 by 60, and 24 by 84. On these the prices were now 150 per cent higher than three years ago. According to Mr. Mayer the average selling prices had been as follows:

	Cents.
From December, 1897, to April, 1898:
1 to 5 feet per square foot	15
5 to 10 feet do	24
10 to 25 feet do	34
25 to 50 feet do	36
From August, 1898, to July 1899:
1 to 5 feet do	30
5 to 10 feet do	48
10 to 25 feet do	68
25 to 50 feet do	72
From August, 1900, to date:
1 to 5 feet do	37½
5 to 10 feet do	60
25 to 50 feet do	90

Mr. Pitcairn claimed that this rise of 150 per cent on the sizes which, as Mr. Mayer testified, constituted the greater part of the demand, was not a fair statement of the general rise. As well as can be made out from his testimony—for he was not definitely pinned down by cross-examination—Mr. Pitcairn admitted an average increase of 50 to 60 per cent on all sizes. He appeared to think that he justified it by claiming an "average increase" of 85 per cent in raw materials (not explaining what that expression meant) and an increase in wages paid to his labor—of what? Well, of 5 per cent; 150 per cent on standard sizes, 60 per cent on all sizes and 5 per cent increase in wages of labor.

In reply to the inquiry, "How large a proportion of the financial product is paid in wages to labor?" Mr. Pitcairn replied, "About 48 per cent." That is, out of $100 received for the goods, $48 was paid to labor. A rise of 5 per cent would amount to $2.40, so that, apparently, while the trust gets $160 for goods it formerly sold for $100, it pays only $2.40 more for labor.

Mr. Pitcairn was not asked what proportion of the cost was paid for the raw materials; yet anyone familiar with the items which go to make up the cost of manufacturing (such as selling expenses, taxes, insurance, salaries, repairs, interest, and other fixed charges) will see at once that, if 48 per cent is paid in wages, the proportion paid for materials will account for only a part of the difference between the $2.40 increase in cost of labor and the $60 increase in price squeezed out of the consumer under the protection of the tariff.

TARIFF DUTIES 50 PER CENT TO 140 PER CENT.

When asked why it was that the plate-glass manufacturers were able to make such an advantageous use of the tariff now in maintaining their selling prices, when they could not formerly under somewhat the same duties, Mr. Mayer replied:

"Because their interests are more consolidated. They have a grasp on the output; they control the output and the distribution of it to-day."

Mr. Pitcairn stated that the tariff upon plate glass comprised the following specific duties:

	Cents.
Up to 16 inches by 24 per square foot	8
16 by 24 to 24 by 30 do	10
24 by 30 to 24 by 60 do	22½
All above 24 by 60 do	35

He said that the management of his company had always favored "reasonable" tariff duties; but it appears from a schedule of Antwerp prices, presented by Mr. Fred G. Elliott, a business man of Philadelphia, that these "reasonable" duties ranged from 50 per cent on the smallest sizes to 100 and even 140 per cent ad valorem on the large sizes. In spite of this, according to the schedule, "polished plate can be imported in cut sizes from 10 to 20 per cent cheaper than the extreme selling price of the plate glass trust today."

In other words, this trust has known how to work the tariff bonus to an extent even greater than the duty. Most protected extortionists have not felt safe in advancing prices quite to the importing point, i. e., to such an extent that their prices equalled the cost of imported goods after the duty was paid. But the plate glass trust audaciously goes 10 or even 20 per cent higher than the importing point, and even then importation fails to give relief from the extortion.

TARIFF A WEAPON TO TERRORIZE DEALERS.

The explanation of this paradox was brought out quite clearly in the testimony. Mr. Mayer explained that it would not be safe to take advantage of the 10 or 20 per cent difference by importing foreign plate glass. "There is," said he, "an intimation that the plate glass trust, if they see fit, could possibly reduce the selling price here, and leave us a lot of glass that we have imported to sell at a loss. They have it within their power on account of the enormous duties." These duties, he explained, enable the trust to make such great profits that it could afford to meet occasional importations in that manner. That would, of course, be a good thing temporarily, for a few consumers, but only a few; and the price even to them would soon go up again, while it would be one out of many cases where the United States Government has put a tariff weapon into the hands of a manufacturer to enable him to drive a former customer out of business. The nature of the "intimation" to which Mr. Mayer alludes may be learned from the following letters sent to reputable and long-established houses in Philadelphia:

TRUST FORBIDS IMPORTATIONS.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., October 27, 1900.

GENTLEMEN: We have just been advised by our general office that any permission which has been given to the jobbers whereby they were allowed to import plate glass must be at once withdrawn; and we hereby beg to notify you to this effect.

We will ask you to send to this office at once a memorandum of any foreign glass that you may have ordered which you have not yet received. Please include in this memorandum that which may already be on the water, as well as the portion that has not yet been shipped from abroad. Kindly give this matter your prompt attention, and oblige,

Yours, truly, PITTSBURG PLATE GLASS COMPANY.

PHILADELPHIA, PA., November 30, 1900.

GENTLEMEN: At a meeting of the manufacturers and "A" jobbers of plate glass in Pittsburg on the 14th instant, it was resolved that no "A" or "B" buyer would be permitted to import plate glass or to purchase plate glass that had been imported into this country. The manufacturers will expect all the "A" and "B" buyers to conform strictly to this resolution.

Yours, truly, PITTSBURG PLATE GLASS COMPANY.

It should be explained that "A" buyers buy "stock sheets" just as finished in the factory, and cut them; "B" buyers purchase standard, or "cut sizes." It should be added that the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company has gone into the jobbing business of paints, brushes, etc., in addition to glass, with offices or warehouses in fifteen or twenty large cities. It sells, apparently, to customers of the "B" buyers and to the "B" buyers themselves at the same price, allowing the latter a "preferential" or rebate of 5 per cent "if they behave themselves," as one of them expressed it.

Is this a free country, where a business man dares not import a part of his goods for fear of losing all his opportunities to sell any of his goods?

INDEPENDENT DEALERS GET UNDER THE MONOPOLY UMBRELLA.

It would take, according to Mr. Pitcairn, two years to build a new plate glass plant. But how about the three so-called "independent" plate glass companies now existing in the United States, for the trust only makes 80 per cent of the output? Mr. Mayer's evidence furnishes the answer:

Q. What is to hinder your getting your supply of glass from them?—A. As I said before, their output is limited, and all of it has been engaged.

Q. If prices are excessive, why do they not enlarge their works so as to supply the demand?—A. That is the natural course of business, but I do not know that it is the natural course of monopolies in restraint of trade. I think the natural course of monopolies is to restrict the output and put up the price.

It is, then, the old story. A gigantic trust, which does not need a complete monopoly to enable it to make exorbitant prices, because the smaller companies, for whom it "holds the umbrella," find that restricting the output is their most profitable policy—and a protective tariff furnishing the opportunity. There is no remedy but the plain, just, common-sense remedy of removing the protection.

FREE HIDES.

[By Hon. William B. Rice, Rice & Hutchins, Boots and Shoes.]

In this country no man raises cattle for their hides. A tariff tax will not increase or diminish the domestic production by one hide. We import South American hides because we need them. Twenty-five per cent of the leather manufactured in this country is made from foreign hides and skins. The tariff upon them is simply and purely a tax, burdening the people and crippling our manufacturers in foreign markets.

By the act of July 24, 1897, the Dingley tariff, a duty of 15 per cent ad valorem was placed upon hides, which had been free for twenty-five years previously. The imposition of this duty has entailed a tax upon the country amounting to not less than $2,000,000 annually, has added from 5 to 8 per cent to the cost of every American-made pair of boots or shoes, and has made it just that much harder to compete in foreign markets. By the same act a rebate of 99 per cent of the duty is given on exports of leather made of imported hides, the effect of which has been to discriminate against American and in favor of foreign manufacturers.

But ten years ago the possibilities of an export trade in shoes were not thought worth consideration. To-day no intelligent person, who studies the situation, doubts our ability to successfully compete for a share of the trade of the world, if we can have equal opportunities with our foreign competitor in the purchase of materials. We pay more for our labor, and it is worth more. We have learned that it is not the lowest-paid labor that makes the lowest-cost product. In our shoe-manufacturing towns generation after generation has studied and practiced the industry, until the great body of our workmen are not merely shoemakers, but educated, intelligent artisans.

This marvelous advance in capacity for production of quality and quantity has outstripped the power of our own country to consume. We can manufacture in nine months as many shoes as our people will purchase in twelve. We have, therefore, reached that stage of development when we should vigorously improve every opportunity to widen our market and when it would seem good policy for our Government to render every aid to a complete development of the possibilities of foreign trade.

In 1895 our export of shoes reached $1,000,000. In 1896 they were $1,500,000. Yet leather exports were $17,700,000 for the same year. Taking fiscal years ending June 30, in 1898 shoes were over $1,000,000; in 1899, $2,711,656; in 1900, $4,276,656, and for 1901 they reached $5,526,290, showing a gain of 200 per cent in the past three years. The exports of leather for the same years, however, are over $21,000,000 a year.

Our American tanneries make the best leather in the world. They use not only the vast production of the hides in our own country, but last year imported hides and skins to the amount of $33,000,000, making of leather from the foreign hides and skins alone more than fifty millions. The Englishman, the German, and other foreign manufacturers buy that American leather to take home and manufacture into shoes to compete with us, and when they take it out of the country, our Government pays them for doing it a bounty, alias rebate, of 99 per cent of the duty that may have been paid on the imported hide, amounting to from 5 to 10 per cent; and no way has yet been found for American manufacturers to get like treatment. The result is that a considerable portion of the upper and much of the sole leather made in the United States from imported hides is sold to foreign manufacturers at a lower price than we can buy it by 5 to 10 per cent.

It may be asked, Why don't you get the rebate of duty paid on the imported leather in exported shoes?

For the reason that there are from fifteen to twenty-five pieces of leather in a shoe, some of which may have been made from imported hide, and others not; and, when once a hide is tanned and cut up into innumerable pieces, and made into a shoe, it is impossible to trace those separate pieces, and prove which are made from foreign hide to the satisfaction of the United States officers.

This hide duty is a serious handicap to the American shoe manufacturer in competition with the foreigner for the export trade. As a revenue duty it is a failure, for the rapidly increasing rebate, together with the cost of collection, will soon absorb the income and the opportunities and temptation to fraud in regard to rebate are numerous. It protects the foreign manufacturer against American, and nobody else. It encourages the tanner of leather for export to buy foreign hides, whenever they can be bought for nearly the same price as the domestic, because he can get his profit in the rebate.

It has resulted in building up the tannery interests of Canada at a corresponding loss to those of the United States. It has increased the cost of footwear and other products of the hide to the people of the United States, while benefiting none, unless it be the great meat-packing establishments; and it is very doubtful if it benefits them.

The hide duty ought to be repealed, not alone in the interest of the great industry of curing and tanning hides and fashioning them into numberless things which are necessities, but in the interest of the consuming public.

THE WORLD'S SUGAR PROBLEM.

Sugar is a very important and most wholesome article of food. Partly because of its wholesomeness and partly because it is a highly condensed food, it is now furnished in large quantities to most modern armies. Soldiers provided with liberal rations of sugar are said to have great powers of endurance.

The consumption of sugar is universal, and sugar is considered almost as much an article of necessity as is bread. In fact, our sugar bill is about as large as our flour bill. Each at wholesale prices, near the place of consumption, are around $250,000,000 a year.

Because it is a necessity and a most wholesome food for all classes of people, it should be as cheap as possible. There should be no tax upon it any more than there should be a tax upon bread or meat. It probably provides more nourishment per pound, or for the same cost, than is provided by either bread or meat. It is, therefore, naturally the poor man's food.

Nature and natural laws, however, have not been left free to produce beneficent economic results. They have been interfered with by all sorts of legislation. Man has tried to improve the natural order of things in the production and distribution of sugar, as in the cases of many other articles. And what a mess he has made of things! The injurious effect of interfering, by internal and import taxes, with the production of and trade in important articles of necessity are well illustrated by the results in the case of sugar.

NATURAL COST OF SUGAR.

Were there no artificial barriers to trade, such as tariff and other taxes, the people of this round world would be eating sugar that cost them from 2 to 3 cents per pound. Like oranges and bananas, it would be produced entirely, or almost entirely, in tropical regions, because it can there be raised most cheaply. The best of raw sugar would then cost about 2 cents per pound in the Tropics. It is refined at a cost of about one-third of a cent. The cost of distribution to the principal points of consumption would vary from one-tenth to one-half of a cent per pound. The total cost of refined sugar in the principal markets of the world would then be from 2½ to 3 cents per pound. Being one of the very cheapest, most nutritious, and most wholesome of foods, almost the very poorest could then gratify the natural desire for sweets.

THE ARTIFICIAL COST.

Instead we see sugars selling in most civilized countries from 5 to 12 cents, and in exceptional countries from 1½ to 2 cents per pound. In many countries its high price makes it an article of luxury to most people, while in a few countries it is so cheap that at time it is fed to cattle and hogs to fatten them. Strange to say, it is dearest in the countries which produce it most largely and cheapest in countries which do not produce it at all. Not only this, but the very countries in which the price of sugar is so high that the people eat it but sparingly are the countries which supply the cheap sugar which is fed to stock in other countries. As Mr. Hugh Kelly, a New York sugar merchant and planter of the West Indies, told the Ways and Means Committee:

"You may eat German and Austrian sugars in England at less than 2 cents per pound, but you must pay 8 cents per pound for those sugars in Germany. You may eat French sugar in England for 2 cents per pound, but you must pay 10 cents per pound for that sugar in France.

"No such condition as that prevails in the United States. Upon an investigation, made within a day or two, I discovered that more than three-fourths of the sugar produced throughout the world is produced under conditions somewhat similar to those I have described. There is either a bounty, supplemented by a cartel, or there is a prohibitive duty, or there are other conditions or combinations which make it possible for countries to protect themselves against the outside world in the matter of sugar.

"But Cuba has nobody to look to but the United States, and Cuba asks you to take her into your economic system—to make her your ward in fact, as she is in deed to-day—because you have limited her treaty-making powers with any other country."

What are the causes of this anomalous and palpably absurd condition of affairs? Taxes, tariff duties, drawback duties, differential duties, countervailing duties, bounties, export bounties—these, with their concomitants, trusts, syndicates, and cartels, are what have upset and bedeviled the natural and beneficent order of things and are depriving the bulk of mankind of a cheap food. These taxes, duties, and trusts have so changed the economic and political face of the earth and have gotten us so far away from the natural order of things, that the greatest experts on sugar to-day admit their inability to predict what would result from the doing away with all of these artificial barriers to production and commerce. So artificial are conditions now that it is difficult to tell whether beets, which now supply two-thirds of the sugar of the world, would, under free conditions, supply any of the sugar of commerce. How much sugar, in the various forms, the people would eat if it were free and cheap, must remain a mystery until the experiment is tried. It is presumable, however, that we Americans would eat from 50 to 100 per cent more, and that most Europeans would eat two or three times what they now eat.

Let us look at the tariff duties, the selling price of refined sugar and the per capita consumption of sugar in European countries and in the United States. The following table gives the approximate prices of raw and refined sugar in the principal markets of each country, all terms being reduced to United States denominations:

SUGAR AND POLITICS.

This innocent looking table is full of meaning to those who will study it closely. It contains volumes of history—social, industrial, and political. It illustrates the power of organized industry to influence legislation and oppress the great masses by heavily taxing an important article of food. It shows also that tariffs breed trusts, and that a protected infant industry becomes a domineering and dictatorial master as soon as it has become large enough to supply the home market. In fact, during the last quarter of a century the sugar growing and refining industries in Europe and America, petted and pampered by tariffs, bounties, and export duties, have grown and developed until to-day the sugar problem is the political Frankenstein of the western world. International sugar conventions and conferences are held to avert, if possible, the threatened political and social evils due to the legislation which has gradually been forced upon each sugar-producing country by the very sugar industries which have been fostered by tariffs and bounties. Apparently no one country is strong enough to loosen the hold of the sugar octopus.

The sugar drama, Cane vs. Beet, and Both vs. the Consumer, has the political stage in every important civilized country of Europe and America. Political parties, presidents and kings, tremble before this saccharine power.

Examining the table, we observe that there is, apparently, a close connection between the price of sugar and the tax on sugar in each country. The total consumption of each country also appears to be fairly well decided by the price or the sugar tax. Putting these countries in order, according to the effective tax, in each we have:

Sugar taxes, prices, and consumption.

Country.	Total effective tax, cents per pound.	Price of refined sugar, cents per pound.	Per capita consumption, pounds.
Italy	8.7	11.1	6
Spain	7.2	9.0	10
France	7.0	8.5	25

Switzerland	.9	2.6	60
United Kingdom	.9	2.6	90

[a] Including duty of 1.95 cents and countervailing duty from Germany of 31 cents per 100 pounds.

Thus in each country the tariff tax (or the tariff plus the excise or consumption tax, where the latter must be paid in addition to the tariff tax) determines very closely the selling price of sugar. In a general way the tax also determines the amount of sugar the people can afford to eat. The tariff is certainly a tax in the case of sugar, and apparently it is paid by the home consumer and not by the foreigner. It is a tax even where (as in the cases of most of the great European countries) a country produces much more sugar than it consumes. In all such cases trusts and monopolies appear on the scene and collect the full tax from the people and turn over to the Government only the amount of the excise tax. That is, the trusts absorb the surplus tariff tax, if there be any surplus over the excise tax. An unnecessary tariff tax is reasonably certain to fatten some trust. It attracts trusts as sugar does flies. A trust is as certain to appear where there is a surplus tariff as are maggots on a decaying carcass. Whenever and wherever a protected industry has made such advancement that it can produce as cheaply as its foreign competitors, a trust appears to neutralize the possible good results and to prevent the people who have for years been paying the protective taxes from reaping the supposed benefits of protection. The protected countries of Europe are cursed by these tariff-fattened trusts. They have different forms, but they accomplish their own greedy purposes in all cases.

GERMAN SUGAR TRUST OR "CARTEL."

The German sugar trust is a three-headed affair. It is very complicated, but very effective, not only in depriving the people of cheap sugar, but in strengthening itself politically. It divides its ill-gotten profits between the beet growers, the manufacturers of raw sugar, and the refiners. While the refiners get the lion's share of the profits, the manufacturers, of which there are about 400, and the beet growers of which there are thousands, get sufficient of the spoils to make them an organized political force for tariff duties and bounties. The following from the Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal of February 27, 1902, is perhaps the simplest possible explanation of the complex "cartel:"

"In Germany there are two sugar syndicates and one cartel:

"1. The German Sugar Syndicate.

"2. The Syndicate of German Sugar Refiners.

"3. The 'Cartel,' or 'combination advantage.'

"1. Consists of manufacturers of raw sugar from the beet, manufacturers of refined sugar direct from the beet, and the manufacturers of refined from the raw sugar.

"2. Consists of sugar refiners from raw sugar and refiners direct from the beet, and this syndicate 2 guarantees to the members of syndicate 1 a certain minimum price whenever the market price of raw sugar falls below a certain level.

"This level, or normal price, is $2.78 per 100 pounds. The guaranty does not extend below a market price of $2.04 per 100 pounds. Below $2.04 or above $2.78, syndicate 1 gets nothing. At a market price of $2.04 or below, syndicate 1 gets the full difference between $2.04 and $2.78 per pound, or $0.74 per 100 pounds.

"Every month the members of syndicate 2 pay into syndicate 2 the amount due under arrangement 4 plus 10 per cent, which 10 per cent is to cover the expenses of conducting the Cartel (3). The entire sum thus collected forms the combination advantage or Cartel (3)."

Practically the syndicate, or "cartel," guarantees a price of $2.78 per 100 pounds to the manufacturers of raw sugar, or of 74 cents above the market price if the price is below $2.04. This guaranty greatly increases the price paid for beets. The manufacturers of raw sugar pledge themselves not to refine any sugar and are under contract not to sell a pound for home consumption or to those not in the cartel. The following extracts from the testimony of Dr. Harvey W. Wiley, chief of the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, before the Ways and Means Committee, January 29, 1902, explains somewhat the workings of this three-decker trust and contains estimates from high authorities of the amount extracted yearly from the German people:

"The most striking effect of the operation of the cartel is found in the relative effect it has had on the price of refined sugars in London and Magdeburg markets. For convenience the comparison is given in our currency for 110 pounds, from the time the cartel began to make itself felt in the world's markets, viz, June, 1900, to December, 1901:

Price of granulated sugar per 110 pounds.

	June 1, 1900.	December 1, 1900.
London	$2.40	$2.10
Magdeburg	6.07	6.82

"No argument could be more convincing than the above comparison. The cartel has enormously raised the price of sugar to home consumers to the extent of 12.4 per cent, and thereby has secured a corresponding reduction in the price to the English consumer, viz, 12.5 per cent.

"According to the Journal des Fabricants de Sucre for December 25, 1901, from June 1, 1900, to December 1, 1901, the total sum extracted from the German people by reason of the cartel is 150,000,000 francs, or nearly $30,000,000. Of this sum about $10,000,000 has been paid to the producers and the rest has remained with the refiners. But this journal adds:

"'But since it (the cartel) has not yet paid over all the bounty due the makers of raw sugar, the benefits are superior to that figure. In fact, the German refiner, like his brother in Austria, is the principal beneficiary of the cartel.'

"Apparently the sugar refiner the world over (and what may be said of him in one country is applicable to id omne genus) looks out for 'the main chance.'

"As a further proof that I have not placed the bounty due to the cartel too high, I will give the calculations of the Journal des Fabricants de Sucre for January 1, 1902:

"'If we consider the bounty en bloc, it can be said that since the beginning of the cartel, June 1, 1900, up to the end of November, 1901, the extraordinary levy on consumption in Germany was 158,898,750 francs. If we compare this sum with the quantity of raw sugar exported during the same period, viz, 1,560,804 tons, it is seen that the cartel has taxed German industry 10 francs for every 100 kilograms of sugar exported. To this bounty must be added the direct premium on the quantity exported, viz, 46,824,120 francs, and the total bounty on the 1,560,804 tons amounts to 205,723,000 francs.'"

Doctor Wiley says that the evil influence of the cartel bounty tends to increase and to become more oppressive, and urges the great sugar-consuming countries to "take such action as will once and forever annihilate all forms of bounty, direct and indirect." He says that:

"The application of import duties on sugar by various countries never tends to reduce the price of sugar in those countries, but always to raise it."

He quotes Sir Nevile Lubbock, the highest expert of Great Britain, as saying that "the cartel is only possible under conditions which the Government only can create, viz, an appreciable difference between the customs duty and the excise duty, or a high customs duty and no excise. The remedy is that exporting countries shall undertake that their customs duty shall not exceed their excise duty." In such countries he thinks that protective tariffs exist only to shelter cartels or trusts, and that "in such a case the Government is not only particeps criminis, but the fons et origo mali."

Because of export bounties, import duties, and cartels or trusts Dr. Wiley says, "The producer in the country whence the sugar is exported not only pays the freight, but also makes a contribution to the family expenses of the purchaser."

Thus, in the opinion of leading experts, not only is the tariff a tax, but it breeds trusts; or, in the words of President Havemeyer, of the Sugar Trust, "the mother of all trusts is the customs-tariff act."

HIGH PRICES PAID FOR CARTELS.

A similar trust exists in Austria-Hungary. In fact, it is older than the German cartel, for which it formed a model. The Austrian cartel is estimated to add $10,000,000 a year to its surplus earnings because of the tariff, besides perhaps half as much more because of export bounties.

Thus the Germans contribute about $25,000,000 and the Austrians $15,000,000 to their sugar cartels, created by their foolish and absurd sugar taxes. Besides they pay about $40,000,000 more a year for the benefit of their government treasuries. This sugar tax of about $80,000,000 a year amounts to nearly $1 per head or $5 per family for these two countries.

FRANCE'S SUGAR TRUST.

In France informal agreements between the six or eight sugar refiners regulates production and exports from month to month and controls prices and keeps them up to near the import point. An agreement to regulate prices is clearly illegal in France. Apparently the French sugar trust extorts about 1.3 cents per pound, or $12,000,000 a year, from the people. How it divides these ill-gotten or tariff profits with the sugar manufacturers or beet growers is not certain. It is certain, however, that the French sugar interests are well organized and represented in the Chambers, and that they will resent strongly any attempted legislation to reduce import duties or export bounties.

OTHER EUROPEAN TRUSTS.

In Russia the Government is in close alliance with the refiners, and regulates the output of each factory and the prices at which refined sugar shall be sold. There are many details, but the result appears to be that the 244 manufacturers licensed to sell in the home market, milk the consumers about 1 cent per pound, or $2,000,000 a year, and pocket the proceeds.

In Spain and Italy, as in Russia, and to a less extent in France and Germany, sugar refining is a semistate monopoly. Government officials are usually stationed in the refineries to supervise production, collect license and other taxes, and pay bounties.

In Belgium the twenty-five refineries in the syndicate are in perfect control of the domestic price. A similar condition probably exists in Denmark. In Holland there is no import duty, and there appears to be no refiners' trust.

CHEAP SUGAR IN NONPRODUCING COUNTRIES.

In the nonsugar-producing countries of Europe the import duty is for revenue only, and is believed to harbor no trusts. The best examples of such countries are Great Britain and Switzerland. These countries are not blessed or cursed with beet-sugar producers, and simply import the sugar, propelled by export bounties out of other European countries, and after making it pay a considerable part of their taxes, eat it at from one-third to one-fifth the cost to the consumers in the producing countries. In 1900, before England put the Boer war tax upon sugar, her people were eating refined sugar at about 2 cents per pound. But for this duty refined sugar would now be sold there at wholesale at 1¾ cents per pound. It is the very low price of sugar, aided by the cheapness of other articles (which makes the cost of living less than in any other country), which has raised the per capita consumption far above that of any other country, and has built up the canning and preserving industries and incidentally the small fruit and dairy interests. But for this duty England would probably now be using considerable quantities of raw sugar (which would sell at 1.3 to 1.4 cents per pound) to fatten stock, as she has done in past years.

STARVED AND SQUEEZED OUT OF EUROPE.

It is Europe's stupid legislation on sugar and on other products that has so increased the cost of living that "hard times" are chronic, even when crops are good, and semistarvation and great suffering prevail when crops are somewhat short, as has been the case for two or three years. Such burdensome taxes and foolish protective duties are driving millions to foreign countries and starving millions who are too poor to leave their native heaths. Why should they not go when in some foreign countries Europeans can eat their native sugar at one-fourth the cost at home?

The blessings of protection are all showered on foreigners; it is death to the stay-at-homes. And yet Europe's statesmen have for years been racking their brains to devise laws to keep their subjects at home.

"What fools these mortals be!"

It is noticed that the present unprecedented immigration into the United States is mostly from the highly protected countries of Europe, and that comparatively few come from Great Britain, although she is now heavily burdened with taxes because of her foolish and wicked war in South Africa. Her taxes are paid largely by those with big incomes, and her duties are but slightly protective, and do not burden industry and starve the people as do protective duties.

UNITED STATES AT THE MERCY OF THE SUGAR TRUSTS.

But we in the United States should not throw stones at Europe. We, too, live in a glass house. For twenty years our protected refiners of cane sugar have made our sugar schedules and have legislated money into their own pockets at every turn. Besides the cane sugar brigands, we have recently been imitating Europe and growing a crop of bounty-fed beet sugar barons. These latter have now become so strong and well intrenched politically that they assume to make our sugar legislation. Apparently the only salvation for our 77,000,000 of sugar consumers, who are not interested in producing either cane or beet sugar, lies in the fact that there is a conflict between these two interests as to what legislation to give us. The proverb that "when thieves fall out, honest men may get their dues," may save us. If the cane and beet sugar disease germs can annihilate each other, like the Kilkenny cats, and give us free sugar, we may be most thankful that we have discovered, or rather cultivated, the beet germ. If, perchance, they learn to tolerate each other's presence, then we are doomed. We will have the sugar disease in its compound and worst form. Unfortunately, the latter is most likely to be our lot.

When the invincible Havemeyer finds his match in the irresistible Oxnard, then will it suddenly dawn upon two great lawgivers that they are "up against it." A general hand shake will be proposed and accepted. Each will congratulate the other on his fighting qualities, and a compromise will be agreed upon and made law before the people have time to fully comprehend the new moves in the sugar game. The compromise will not bring relief to the people, but will be as to the division of the tariff plunder. It is not difficult to imagine a telephone talk between the two Henrys in charge of our sugar infants:

"Say, Henry, I just called you up to say that I fear the people will get onto our game and stop taxing themselves for our benefit if we don't soon stop our scrapping. I am willing to call it a draw if you are, and to meet you halfway in the division of the tariff spoils; but, for heaven's sake (or words to that effect), don't let's disgust the people so that they will stop our tariff pap. Both of our infants would perish. Let's be rational and get together, so that we can have matters fixed up in Washington before it is too late."

"Very well; I have been feeling that way myself. What are your terms?"

"Let's stop our press bureaus at once, close up our Washington offices and recall our Cuban detectives, because I'm certain we can agree on terms. A half loaf is better than none."

OUR REFINERS' PROFITS.

But few people realize how we have been held up and robbed by the sugar refiners during the last fifteen years. A few figures will shed light on this subject. In 1891 Willet & Gray's estimate of the cost of refining sugar to cover all losses and wastes was one-half cent per pound. That is, refiners could afford to sell granulated at one-half cent per pound above the cost to them of 96° raw sugar.

Another high authority, the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin, of New York, made the same estimate as to the cost of refining in 1891. Well-informed sugar experts say that the cost of refining in 1894–1897 was not over four-tenths of a cent, and that in the newest refineries it was only about three-tenths of a cent. In verification of these estimates the margin between raw and refined sugars in important European countries has been, for years, from two to seven tenths of a cent, and in late years has averaged less than four-tenths. This is for 88° beet sugar, where the percentage of loss is at least 8° greater than with 96° cane sugar. A liberal estimate for the cost of refining 96° cane sugar would be five-eighths of a cent from 1884 to 1891 and one-half cent since 1891. The present-day claims of five-eighths of a cent are unreasonable, and not in accordance with the census statistics available, which showed a cost in 1890 of less than four-tenths of a cent, as did also President Havemeyer's figures in 1894. Indeed, for the three years previous to the formation of the trust in 1887, the average difference between the prices of raw and of refined sugar was only 0.754 of a cent per pound.

The following table shows the margins between the prices of raw and refined sugar each year from the formation of the trust in 1887 to 1901; the part that represented surplus profit and the yearly estimates of the surplus profits based upon our total consumption of sugar:

Refiners' margins and profits.

Year.	Consumption (tons of 2,240 pounds).	Prices of sugar (cents per pound).			Margin for refining (cents per pound).		Refiners' surplus profits.
		Raw, 96°.	Refined granulated.	Difference.	To cover cost.	Surplus margin.
1888	1,457,264	5.749	7.007	1.285	0.625	0.633	$20,649,531
1889	1,439,701	6.433	7.640	1.207	.625	.582	19,678,711
1890	1,522,731	5.451	6.371	.720	.625	.095	3,240,372

1896	1,940,086	3.624	4.532	.908	.500	.408	17,730,834
1899	2,078,068	4.419	4.919	.500	.500	.....	.....
1900	2,219,847	4.456	5.320	.754	.500	.254	11,625,941

Thus, even with these figures, the refiners' surplus profits have averaged $16,000,000 a year, or $224,845,677 in the fourteen years of trust domination. But these figures do injustice to the case. Because of reduced cost of refining the surplus margin should be increased by at least one-tenth of a cent. This would add about $5,000,000 a year to the profits. Then the yearly averages are taken from the monthly averages. This makes the yearly average too low, because much more sugar is marketed in the summer months, when the margin of profit is usually greatest. Thus in 1899, when no surplus profits are shown in the table, the margin averaged about seven-tenths of a cent from June 25 to August 20. It would be entirely safe to add $1,000,000 a year on this account to the surplus profits. Another $1,000,000 can be added because the refiners buy the great bulk of their raw sugar in the first four or five months of the year, when the price will average about one-fifth of a cent below the average for the year. In addition, the trust is estimated to have made in 1897 some $7,000,000 or $8,000 000 of extra profit on the sugar imported before the passage of the Dingley bill and sold afterwards at the higher prices. Again, the average prices are given for New York. The margin will probably average about 1 cent per pound more on the Pacific than on the Atlantic coast. In 1893 the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin found that the margin there was 2¼ or 2¾ cents, and estimated the trust's profits on the Pacific coast at $6,500,000 and in the whole country at $28,532,000.

The American Sugar Refining Company has probably refined an average of three-fourths of our sugar since 1887, but it has had a compact during most of this time with the more important of the outside refiners, so that it has dictated prices on nine-tenths of the product. The trust refused to comply with the census laws in 1890, and, as it made no public statements of its earnings or profits, it is a "blind pool." It is supposed to have $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 invested in outside industries—coffee mills, street railways, etc.—and is said to loan millions on call in Wall street, which may, at times, be invested on the long or short sides of the stock market.

It is this refiners' trust, or sugar leech, which has sucked about $20,000,000 a year for fourteen years from our sugar bowls, that now seeks to deceive the people and to get the duty lowered on raw sugar without any reduction of the duty on refined. Not that it would gain much directly by this change, but indirectly it would gain by getting the whip hand on the beet-sugar people, and ultimately, when the Cuban crop had increased to about double its present output, it could get its raw sugar for about 2 cents and sell its refined at from 3 to 4 cents, the lower prices being in the vicinity of the beet-sugar factories. This is the trust that has been paying for the distribution of literature telling us of suffering Cuba, when the fact is that Cuba is more prosperous now than for years, and that many sugar mills have had to stop grinding cane because labor could not be obtained, even at an advance of 50 to 100 per cent over the wages of a few years ago.

Incidentally the trust gives its case away in the following statement from the President's so-called "annual report:"

"It would seem that with an overflowing Federal Treasury there had disappeared any reason for continuing the existing high tariff upon raw sugar. It constitutes a charge upon the consumption of nearly 2 cents a pound.

"This represents an annual consumption of 2,360,000 tons—$85,000,000 a year. Of this, however, only 1,360,000 tons are imported, yielding customs revenues of $49,000,000. The balance, $36,000,000, goes into the pockets of the planters of the following States:

	Tons.	Value.
Louisiana planters	350,000	$12,600,000
Domestic beet	150,000	5,400,000
Hawaii	250,000	12,600,000
Porto Rico	150,000	5,400,000

"A removal of this duty on raw sugar would result in a saving to the consumer of $85,000,000.

"Misleading statements are constantly being made about the benefit to the company of reducing the present high rate of duty. The gain would be increased sales. The lower the prices at which refined sugar can be furnished, the larger is the number within whose reach it can be brought. To this extent there would be a gain to the company, but the substantial benefit of the remission or reduction of the duty would be to the consumer, and the practical question is, whether the public shall continue to pay the enormous amount which the duty requires for the benefit of favored industries, which, according to published statements by those who are specially interested, do not require the protection."

At the special request of the stockholders present for further remarks on the matter of tariff legislation on sugar, Mr. Havemeyer said:

"Sugar is a necessity of life. Were the duty removed, the price would permit of it being used by the poorest people. The people are beginning to characterize the tax on sugar as a hunger tax. This, no doubt, is due to the fact that a surplus exists in the Treasury, and there is no reason for a tax on an article of food. The removal of the tax would be a great blessing to the entire community.

"As far as the beet industry is concerned, the farmers have received no more for their beets since the tax was reimposed than when sugar was free, in the years 1891, 1892, and 1893. What Mr. Oxnard says is of little account. What Mr. William Bayard Cutting attaches his signature to is of account. He has stated over his signature that the beet industry is profitable under conditions of absolute free trade, and that the United States being an agricultural country the industry has nothing to fear even from the annexation of Cuba."

It is as easy, as it must be galling, for Mr. Havemeyer to figure $36,000,000 a year of profits on sugar going to others. His estimates on the sugar crops of Louisiana, Hawaii, and Porto Rico are 160,000 tons above the estimate of Willet & Gray on January 2, 1902. This takes nearly $6,000,000 from his $36,000,000 and leaves $30,000,000, which is probably a fair estimate of the tariff profits of our home and colonial sugar growers. In other words, we present $30,000,000 a year to our sugar growers. This has made them so powerful politically that they can defy the great trust itself and vie with it in relieving us from the trouble of making our own sugar legislation.

But observe what Mr. Havemeyer asks and what is asked by his representatives. In the language of Mr. F. B. Thurber before the Ways and Means Committee, "The greatest good to the greatest number of the people of both countries will be subserved by placing Cuba, so far as our tariff relations are concerned, as nearly as possible on the same basis as Porto Rico and Hawaii, and the same may be said of the Philippine Islands." Stated baldly, this means that without any reduction of the duty on refined sugar and, therefore, without any reduction of the prices on refined sugar, as Mr. Havemeyer has repeatedly told us, the raw sugar from Cuba is to come in free of duty. Here is Mr. Robert Oxnard's estimate of the amount that such action would keep out of our treasury and donate to the Cuban sugar planters, amongst whom are Mr. Havemeyer and numerous others of our protected refiners:

"The crop on the island of Cuba for the coming year is expected to be something like 900,000 tons. If this were admitted free of duty there would still be 460,585 tons to come from other sources and on which duty would have to be paid.

"It is a well-known law of economics that the price of all sugar in this country would be fixed by the cost of these 460,585 tons plus the duty that they would have to pay to get into this country in order to compete with the duty-free sugar.

"The effect of letting Cuban sugar come in free would therefore be to present to the Cuban planters $36 per ton, or, in one year, $32,400,000, which at present goes into the Treasury of the United States. This bonus would increase year after year as the Cuban production expanded and our home production declined, and would be a heavy price to pay to foreigners in order to accomplish our own undoing.

"This sugar beet growing is to-day the most promising crop that is offered to our farmers. This fact is recognized by the continental nations of Europe, who foster and protect it by all sorts of bounties, direct and indirect, realizing that it is the corner stone of their agricultural prosperity. A great deal has been said about our protective system benefiting everyone except the farmer, and it seems a pity that the one industry which our protective system gives him to compensate for his sacrifices in its behalf in other directions should now be threatened with extinction."

THE MILK IN THE COCOANUT.

While this proposition may look like a bald-headed steal to most people, yet Havemeyer and his pals in this Cuban business see no reason—and there is none—why, if we make presents of $5,000,000 and $12,000,000, respectively, to Porto Rican and Hawaiian planters (saying nothing of our similar presents to our own cane and beet sugar growers), we should not present $30,000,000 a year to Cuban planters.

It is to get in on the ground floor with our domestic and colonial sugar growers and to participate in Uncle Sam's generous donations to sugar growers that Mr. Havemeyer began, more than a year ago, to say that "the mother of all trusts is the customs tariff," and that he last year put his press bureau (which includes F. B. Thurber's American Export Association, the Sugar Trade Journal, and numerous important newspapers in various cities) at work telling us of the awful sufferings in Cuba, and of the horrors that would follow if we did not reduce the duty on Cuban sugar at least 50 per cent and at the same time untax an important article of food. Thus, as late as January 16, 1902, the Sugar Trade Journal quoted Miguel Mendoza as saying:

"It will cost you more to feed us later than it will now to grant these concessions. Unless something is done for the relief of this island, and done at once, there will be a condition of suffering, not to say absolute starvation, that only the American people can relieve."

Mr. Louis V. Place, of Habana, pictured Cuba as on the verge of absolute ruin when he appeared before the Ways and Means Committee on January 16. He said:

"I see nothing short of free trade, because we are bound to have free trade sooner or later. We are tied to America by the Platt amendment, and perpetual commercial relations ought to be made, once and forever. * * * As things are now, we have only six weeks to live, and inside of six weeks we are busted."

This was many months ago, and although Congress has not yet opened our Treasury to the Cuban sugar planters, the average Cuban appears to be thriving on "absolute starvation," if we may judge from the following from Habana in the Sugar Trade Journal of April 10, 1902:

"Planters are bitterly complaining of the fact that, owing to the hurry of the works of the new Cuban Central Railroad, as well as in consequence of several constructions of highroads by the military government, thousands of laborers have left the customary field work in the Centrals, passing over to the said undertakings, getting from the same 25 per cent more than the wages earned at the plantations."

Plenty of testimony was adduced before the Ways and Means Committee last winter to show that wages are unusually high in Cuba now and recently, and that labor is well employed. Thus Mr. Edwin F. Atkins, of Boston, merchant, sugar planter, and chairman of the Associated American Interests of Cuba, admitted on January 15 that "labor in Cuba is not sufficient to go around." When asked by Mr. Cooper, "What is the difference in the price of wages there now and the price of wages before the war?" he answered:

"I should think they had increased 75 per cent." Mr. Miguel G. de Mendoza, another sugar planter, said: "There is plenty of work for the workmen in Cuba to-day," and that common labor was receiving $30 a month in some parts of the island. He admitted that the much-talked-of condition of hunger and starvation did not exist then, but he said, "It will exist."

It is impossible to read the testimony of numerous witnesses before the Ways and Means Committee and not reach the conclusion that times are now better in Cuba for the masses than for many years. Mr. Henry T. Oxnard stated the case fairly when, after enumerating the many things that we had done for Cuba (including giving her freedom, the wiping out of her $300,000,000 debt to Spain and the distribution of millions of dollars and rations in 1899), he said:

"And, Mr. Chairman, what has resulted from all this? Peace and prosperity; a greatly rehabilitated country, with railways built and building in every direction, that ought to guarantee a larger population, greater production, and cheaper transportation. Our sanitary work alone is worth millions to Cuba. But we are not bound to support her. We are not bound to guarantee her planters prices that the world's markets do not warrant."

$54,000,000 A YEAR COST OF SUGAR LEECH.

Now, a few more words from the beet-sugar people, who may be supposed to know about the profits of the refiners' trust, and we can get a more perfect idea of the enormous profits in sugar when you have the Government as a silent partner in the business. Mr. W. L. Churchill, president of the Bay City Beet Sugar Company, did some figuring for the Ways and Means Committee:

"Mr. Post testified before you in my hearing that his company could produce 20,000 barrels of refined sugar per day. He testified further that the profits were three-eighths of a cent a pound and the differential between raw and refined was a dollar. Mr. Atkins testifies that in his time raw sugar could be refined for less. So it is safe to say a half a cent a pound is the profit that Mr. Post in his ten refineries is making. They further testify that a barrel of sugar contains 350 pounds, and that at half a cent a pound would represent a profit of $1.75 a barrel. Now, gentlemen, figure for yourselves. These gentlemen are making $35,000 a day out of the sugar purchased from Cubans. Why do they not pay a fair price for their sugar, and not come to this committee and ask the United States to do what? To wreck, demolish, and drive out of existence the beet-sugar business of this country by reducing the tariff.

"Now, Mr. Post testified that Mr. Havemeyer can make 40,000 barrels of sugar per day, which would be a profit of $70,000, or a total of $100,000 a day for these two great trusts.

"In other words, these two institutions are making $100,000 a day, or $36,000,000 per year. Gentlemen, who is the strongest, these trusts or the people of the United States through their Representatives in this room?"

Mr. Havemeyer told us that we are contributing $36,000,000 a year to our domestic and colonial sugar growers. Mr. Oxnard proves by statistics that the two principal aggregations of refiners are robbing us of $36,000,000 a year. Thus, on the testimony of the sugar people themselves, we are donating $76,000,000 a year, or $5 per family, to our sugar infants, and yet they are dissatisfied and are quarreling because each thinks the other is getting more than his fair share of the loot.

That their estimates of our losses and their gains are about right is not difficult of proof. We consume 5,200,000,000 pounds of sugar a year. The duty on refined sugar is 1.95 cents per pound, plus a countervailing duty of 31 cents on sugar from Germany and 81 cents per 100 pounds on sugar from France. It is the sugar from Germany that competes most with domestic refined sugar. On this the effective duty is 2.26 cents. As the trusts keep the price of refined sugar up to the import point nearly every day of the year, the people actually pay a duty of 2.26 cents per pound on all sugar consumed. The duty, then, costs them $117,000,000 per year. Deducting the amount which reaches the Treasury, $63,000,000 last year, and we see that the people are out $54,000,000 a year by the duty on sugar. Undoubtedly this annual contribution from the people is divided about equally between the two rival claimants or pretenders now instructing, begging, and threatening Congress and the President.

PHILIPPINE LANDLORDS ALSO IN THE GAME.

The individuals and syndicates owning sugar, hemp, tobacco, mineral, and other lands in the Philippines are busily at work exploiting our civil and military government here and in the Philippines. Their lands would be far more valuable under free trade or greatly reduced duties with the United States than at present. Undoubtedly the probabilities of free trade with the "mother" country, as well as the establishment, through death, destruction, and fear, of comparative peace, is now rapidly increasing the value of all the lands in the Philippines.

William H. Taft, the civil governor of the Philippines, said that the planters there urged a reduction of 75 per cent in duties on goods imported into the United States. In his report he said:

"If Congress will reduce by 50 per cent the United States duty on tobacco, hemp, and sugar, and other merchandise coming from these islands, it is certain that the trade between them and the United States under the new tariff will increase by leaps and bounds. Such generosity would much strengthen the bonds between the Filipino and American people, and it is earnestly recommended."

In his testimony in January, 1902, Governor Taft, in reply to a question by Senator Patterson as to how much reduction in duty was desired, said, "We want all we can get."

As the Philippines produce about 200,000 tons of sugar a year, free trade with this country would add about $7,000,000 a year to the value of the sugar crop, or $70,000,000 to the value of the sugar lands.

THE CREAM IN THE COCOANUT.

This $54,000,000 a year to the sugar leech is not all that there is in the proposed Cuban reciprocity scheme for the Havemeyers, Posts, Hawleys, and other Cuban sugar plantation owners so anxious to have Uncle Sam display his generosity to suffering Cuba. Tens of millions of dollars have been added to the value of sugar lands in Hawaii and Porto Rico because of the favoritism given these countries in our markets. To give free entry of sugar into our markets would really be to donate $30,000,000 a year or more to the Cuban sugar growers—that is, providing they would get it all. This amount capitalized at 10 per cent would make $300,000,000 of value to be added to the value of the sugar lands. But as the sugar trust would probably reap one-third of the benefits of the free admission of Cuban sugar into our markets, the increased value would not much exceed $200,000,000. The fact that such favoritism might not continue forever would also tend to prevent the full enhancement in value.

Strange to say, this most important consideration has hardly been mentioned by the beet sugar people, although it is an important if not the controlling influence in arousing the sugar trust's sympathy for suffering Cuba. Possibly our domestic and colonial sugar producers live in glass houses.

An inkling of the land, labor, social, financial, and political conditions which prevail in Hawaii is contained in the following, from an important document, The World's Sugar Production and Consumption, issued by the Treasury Department last January:

"On the estate the one thought is how to keep the average quality of land from going out of cultivation. How can expenses be reduced and crops enhanced so as to secure the largest dividends on stock is the object of their existence.

"Such estates are destructive of family ties and home comforts. Single men are always preferred and objection made to the encumbrance and expenses of women and children; hence adaptability of Asiatics to such work, who serve their contract time and then return to China or Japan, or rush to the cities or towns to engage in urban pursuits. Such estates are not conducive to permanent settlers—steady yeomanry, prosperous farmers—which are regarded as the pride and reliance of every nation.

"In the islands a strong antagonism prevails against such estates, and a demand is made that the large areas formerly owned by the Crown and now leased to the sugar corporations shall be divided and subdivided, at the expiration of lease, into homesteads for occupancy by permanent farmers or gardeners. * * *

"On the contrary, it may be stated that there is probably no industry besides sugar that can give such enormous acre yields in money and bear the heavy cost of expensive irrigation plants, steam plows, etc. The exports of the island were last year $22,628,741, of which over $22,000,000 were furnished by sugar. Again, those large acre yields give enormous taxable values to the lands, from which public revenues are raised for public improvements, public schools, etc."

This document informs us that "the sugar production of the Hawaiian Islands has increased over 2,000 per cent under the free admission of their sugar to the markets of the United States." As sugar is produced about as cheaply in Hawaii as anywhere on earth (the yield averaging 10 tons to the acre), the free entry into our markets means a gift of $10,000,000 to $15,000,000 a year to Hawaiian sugar producers. It is not strange that such highly favored lands have enormous value, and that their owners in Hawaii and Porto Rico are urging Congress not to let down the tariff bars and extend similar favors to other lands. And yet this Pacific Ocean $10,000,000 a year pet of Uncle Sam, although perhaps the most prosperous and most valuable spot on earth, according to its size and population, is cursed by the very favors showered upon it. Read what Delegate Robert W. Wilcox, of Hawaii, says in the Washington Times of May 7, 1902:

"I am deeply interested in the bill providing for the division of Government lands into homesteads for the farmers and middle classes, because at present we only have in Hawaii the very rich and the very poor, the poor being the laborers or coolies.

"Out of the population of 160,000 nearly 90,000 are Asiatics, 60,000 being Japanese and 30,000 Chinese. There are also several thousand Porto Ricans, but they are undesirable, as they would rather lie in jail all of the time than go to work.

"The land area of Hawaii is 4,000,000 acres. Of this area 2,000,000 acres are in the hands of seventy men engaged in sugar raising and cattle raising. The other 2,000,000 acres, which constitute the government lands, are rented and leased to the sugar corporations, the leases ranging from five to sixteen years.

"These government lands I want divided up into homesteads, to encourage American farmers to go to Hawaii.

"To give an idea how fertile the best land is, the sugar corporations produce an average of ten tons of sugar to the acre. The rice planters produce two crops a year, aggregating between 5,000 and 6,000 pounds to the acre. The same land is planted with taro, a plant akin to elephant's ears, which is the staple food of the natives, and will produce somewhere between 40,000 and 50,000 pounds per acre, and it sells at one cent a pound."

OUR NATURAL SUGAR BOWLS.

Hawaii, Cuba, Porto Rico, the Philippines, and other tropical islands are the natural sugar bowls of the United States. In these islands sugar can be produced for two cents or less per pound. There is no sound reason why the United States should not avail herself of these natural sugar supplies. She will not do so by putting any two or three of them inside her tariff wall. As long as any considerable quantity of sugar must come over the tariff wall, the price of all inside will be fixed by the price of what comes over the wall. The water above the dam will maintain about the same level whether one-tenth or nine-tenths of the running water goes under or through the dam. If you want to lower the level materially, take away the dam!

A BOON TO FRUIT GROWERS AND DAIRYMEN.

Besides giving everybody a cheap food and reducing the cost of living to every family about $7.50 a year, free sugar would revolutionize many industries now none too prosperous.

Fruit growing would be greatly stimulated by 2½-cent sugar. Canning and preserving factories would be numerous in all fruit-growing sections, and would purchase at fair prices millions of bushels of fruit, which, for want of a profitable market, now rots each year. Not only would such factories give employment to tens of thousands directly, but indirectly thousands more would be employed in growing and gathering the fruit. Millions of workingmen in all industries would be provided with cheap preserves, jams, and marmalades. These are some of the cheap foods that have reduced the cost of living in England and have made possible her wonderful commerce and prosperity during the last half century. Even we, who can raise small fruits as cheaply as they are raised anywhere, find it as cheap to eat English preserves, jellies, and marmalades, after paying 35 per cent duty on them, as to eat our own, and yet England raises no sugar; and "Dundee marmalade," known the world over, is made from imported oranges and sugar. We should be ashamed to eat these foreign goods when we produce both sugar and fruit, and when thousands of bushels of fruit rot each year because we will not permit our farmers and canners to have cheap sugar, glass, and tin. Cheap sugar would add tens of thousands of dollars each year to half the counties in nearly every State. Thousands of farms which would not now sell for the amount of the mortgages on them would become prosperous under free sugar.

Another industry which would be greatly benefited by 2½-cent sugar is that of dairying. Switzerland is one of the biggest exporters of condensed milk because it has cheap sugar. About one-third of the weight of condensed milk is sugar. Cheap sugar would greatly increase our production of condensed milk, and would add much to the value of millions of acres and millions of cows. It would be a boon to numerous other industries in which sugar is an important raw material.

To reduce the cost of the "staff of life" 50 per cent would be a result which should bring imperishable fame to any inventor or statesman. Here is an opportunity to halve the price of as important an article of food as is bread. Shall we not soon have a Congress which will not be owned and controlled by the Havemeyers, Oxnards, and Spreckels of our sugar industry, and which shall legislate for the welfare of the whole people? Shall we continue to imitate the sugar-cursed countries of Continental Europe, or shall we treat our sugar growers and refiners as impartially as we treat the producers of most other farm products and make our sugar industry bless rather than curse us?

DIFFERENTIAL AND COUNTERVAILING DUTIES.

So much has been said about differential and countervailing duties on sugar that an explanation of these terms is necessary. The following is the most important part of the sugar schedule in the Dingley tariff act of 1897:

"Sugars not above sixteen Dutch standard in color, tank bottoms, sirups of cane juice, melada, concentrated melada, concrete and concentrated molasses, testing by the polariscope not above seventy-five degrees, ninety-five one-hundredths of one cent per pound, and for every additional degree shown by the polariscope test, thirty-five one-thousandths of one cent per pound additional, and fractions of a degree in proportion, and on sugar above number sixteen Dutch standard in color, and on all sugar which has gone through a process of refining, one cent and ninety-five one-hundredths of one cent per pound."

As the duty on 75-degree sugar is .95 of a cent per pound, and as .035 of a cent is added for each additional degree of purity, the duty on 100-degree sugar is 1.825 cents. But as 100-degree sugar is, of necessity, refined sugar, the duty on it is 1.95 cents, or one-eighth of a cent per pound more than the equivalent duty on sufficient raw to make one pound of refined sugar. This one-eighth of a cent is the "differential." It is the amount per pound the refiners can collect from consumers over and above the amount of duty which the refiners have to pay on the raw sugar used.

As a matter of fact, the net protection on refined sugar is more than 12.5 cents per 100 pounds. (1) Because refined sugar is not absolutely pure and tests only on an average about 99½ degrees. This imperfection increases the differential between raw and refined sugar to about 14 cents per 100 pounds. (2) Because of the protection hidden in the graduated scale of duties on raw sugar. With a duty of $1.825 per 100 pounds on theoretically pure raw sugar, the duty on sugar testing 90 degrees should be about $1.60, instead of $1.47, as under the bill. In other words, the graduations in the duty are greater than they should be to cover the impurities in the sugar. It is probable that the average net protection to our refiners is not less than one-fourth of a cent per pound, or $13,000,000 a year.

Countervailing duties are duties levied to offset export duties paid by foreign countries. Thus our Treasury Department estimates the export duty paid by Germany at 31 cents and that paid by France at 81 cents per 100 pounds, and assesses these additional duties on sugar imported from these two countries. As nearly all of our imports of beet sugar are from Germany, the rate of 31 cents is the effective rate. That is, if there were no countervailing duties, sugar would sell in our markets for 31 cents per 100 pounds less than at present.

The most of this countervailing duty, as well as all the duty on raw sugar, serves to protect our sugar growers. Our refiners are protected by the amount of the differential and the hidden protection in the raw-sugar duty, and probably also by a part of the countervailing duty.

THE EVILS OF PROTECTED TRUSTS.

(1) POLITICAL CORRUPTION.

The evils of tariff-protected trusts are not entirely measured by the injury inflicted by artificially high prices, as many people assume. These evils extend into political and social life, and even into our colleges.

The protective tariff is responsible for much of the corruption in politics. It is not by chance that Pennsylvania has been for thirty years the worst boss-ridden State in this country. The Camerons and Quays have political power and influence because they serve the protected trusts. It is not by chance that a large portion of the workingmen employed by the protected trusts are ignorant immigrants working under conditions of semislavery. It is not by chance that there are so many millionaires in Congress to safeguard the protected industries. It is because the protected trusts have completely corrupted politics and have sent their agents to Congress, that the protected interests have for years dictated tariff legislation at Washington. As Mr. Henry L. Nelson says: "Since 1875 Congress has not legislated on the tariff; it has simply affirmed or ratified the decrees of the beneficiaries of the tariff. These people have transformed the Government into a socialism, in which they are not merely the favored class—they constitute the only class."

(2) WATERED STOCK.

The tariff is undoubtedly responsible for a large part of the water in trust stocks. Had there been no tariff to enable prospective trusts to pay dividends on watered stocks, trust promoters could not have offered sufficient inducements to coalesce the naturally antagonistic producers in any particular industry. Not only, then, is the tariff responsible for many trusts, but it is responsible for much of the water in the trust stocks. That this is true is evident not only from the fact that the most highly protected trusts are generally the most highly capitalized, but from the fact that promoters have been unable to form trusts in many industries not actually benefited by tariff duties. Thus, though promoters are at work in the piano industry for the fourth or fifth time in the last six years, their chances of success are not flattering, because the conditions in this industry are such that the tariff has for years yielded but little actual protection, and the manufacturers are unable to see how they could by combining take sufficient advantage of the tariff or of any other special privilege to enable them to receive dividends on more than the actual capital invested; consequently, the manufacturers are inclined to laugh at the glowing promises of the promoters and to hesitate to give up control of their own business.

For similar reasons trusts have not been formed in such important industries as those of making cabinet organs, boots, shoes, stoves, some kinds of furniture and agricultural implements, and in practically all of our great agricultural products.

(3) CONCEALMENT OF EXPORT PRICES.

The concealment of export prices is probably responsible for considerable of the difference between the value of our exports and our imports, and therefore for numerous editorials on our "favorable balance of trade."

Ten years ago it was comparatively easy to get the export prices of various protected articles, even though they were then often from 10 to 30 per cent below the home market prices. To-day, when great trusts control prices on most of our exports, it is extremely difficult to obtain export prices. The editors of trade journals will no longer talk on this subject, and as a rule will not keep on file foreign exchanges which quote prices of certain American goods in foreign countries. It is only now and then that an employee of a trust or of some export house can be found who is willing to risk betrayal and almost certain decapitation if he talks on this subject.

The extent to which goods are sold cheaper for export than in the home market is not known to most people, because the trusts—and the protected trusts are the worst offenders—take pains to conceal export prices and practically pledge all parties concerned to keep all such knowledge from reaching the public. The average difference in price is probably 20 per cent, and on our really protected products above 25 per cent. Often we who pay the tariff taxes devoted to nourishing these "infant industries" must pay 50 per cent, and sometimes 100 per cent, more for the products of these coddled industries than is paid by foreigners, who do not pay our nursing taxes.

(4) JUGGLED AND MANUFACTURED STATISTICS.

Another evil is the juggling of prices and statistics, and sometimes the absolute refusal to comply with census laws, when to do so would disclose great profits or unfair or illegal transaction.

Thus the census of 1890 is grossly defective in some particulars, and probably worthless or misleading as concerns the protected trusts. In other words, protected statistics are often misleading or false, and purposely so.

It will be remembered that the sugar trust absolutely failed to comply with our census laws in 1890, and gave no information concerning its business to the Census Department. After four years of failure to compel the trust to produce statistics, the Superintendent of the Census notified the Attorney-General that further efforts would be useless, as the information, even if received, would be too late for publication. No attempt was made to punish the trust officials. Hence the census abstract of 1890 gravely informs us that the value of our product of sugar and molasses dropped from $155,000,000 in 1880 to $123,000,000 in 1890, and that the value of this product in New York State dropped from $71,000,000 in 1880 to $17,000,000 in 1890. As about one-half of the sugar refined in this country was refined in New York State, it is probable that the value of this product in New York was about $100,000,000, instead of $17,000,000, given by our census. Of course, such statistics are worse than worthless. Commenting on the "reticence of the refiners," who were then being guaranteed "profits of $12,000,000 a year" by the United States, the Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of March 23, 1894, said:

"It is about time that this foolishness was stopped. If there is any reason why the refiners are entitled to protection by the tariff, let them show it. There is little disposition anywhere to deny protection where the cost of production in America is higher than it is abroad or where there are other reasons that place the American manufacturer at a disadvantage. But it is intolerable effrontery that these people should refuse to answer the ordinary census questions that everyone else answers and demand from the Government they defy and whose laws they trample on a rate of protection that enables them to divide 22 per cent in a year on their vastly inflated common stock. Let the sugar refiners obey the law or get along without the help of the law."

A leading editorial in the New York Journal of Commerce and Commercial Bulletin of July 29, 1902, is entitled "Manufactured Government statistics." It makes serious charges against the Republican statistical bureaus at Washington. It says:

"It is greatly to be regretted when we see statistics bearing the Government stamp begin to deteriorate and show signs of improper methods of production, as is true of some of the recent publications of the Treasury Bureau of Statistics.

"There is no more serious crime against the public (to say nothing of the interests of science, which require accurate commercial returns) than the publication of statistics that have been 'doctored.'

"Now that the campaign is approaching and that much more than the ordinary use is made of the Government returns, the temptation becomes doubly strong to manipulate information gathered through Government agencies. Perhaps it does not seem very wrong for persons with an intense partisan bias so to represent the matter as to give their side the best end of the argument. If, for example, it is desired to show that under the tariff system our exports are largely increasing and that we are gaining the lead of all other countries, what more natural than to keep some unpleasant facts in the background and to throw others to the front in bold relief, altering their form, perhaps, in such wise as to make them convey to the superficial reader an entirely different impression from that which is gained by more careful study? The true partisan who really holds the ideals he works for justifies such action on the ground that his view is right, all other views are wrong, and that the true meaning of the figures in question is given only by stating them just as he has stated them. * * *

"The truth is that too much can hardly be said of the heinousness of the crime of garbling Government figures. The Government is the only all-embracing agency we have gathering accurate, trustworthy statistics on all subjects. To falsify these is as bad as to falsify the money issued by the Government, and could it be as readily detected, should be visited with penalties as severe."

That the Republicans at the head of the various bureaus in Washington occasionally suppress or distort unpleasant statistics is true. But we can never expect to have reliable statistics while protection is on the throne and can continue its rule only by deceiving the people. Our so-called "balance of trade," about which the Republicans are continually crowing, exists only on paper. Our export figures are far too high, because the trusts are ashamed to give the very low prices charged to foreigners, while our imports are far too low, because of the undervaluations and wholesale smuggling. These are only instances of our unreliable statistics. Another is found in the attempts of the protected trusts to pad their wage roll and make wage-earners feel that they are better off than they really are.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator from Texas printing a portion of the Democratic campaign book in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, nor to printing the entire Democratic campaign book in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. Nor have I any objection, because I suppose that that is considered good partisan tactics, to the Senator raising a question about tariff theories; although it is at a time when we are trying to consider this most difficult question, not as politicians who want our respective parties to win, but as Senators who want, above the prosperity of any party, the prosperity of the country.

It is in that spirit, Mr. President, that I have made my remarks, refraining studiously from any intermixture of partisan politics with a purely economic question. But I think the fact that the Senator has risen and addressed us as the leader of his side, as he has, is perhaps fortunate at this junction, because it so vividly shows one of the great defects that has crept into our system in handling the most delicate, difficult, and serious questions. The best of us, Mr. President, have been concerned not so much in solving them wisely from the view-point of the country as we have been in registering some party advantage on the floor of the Senate. We have been concerned not so much in caring for the future of the nation and the welfare of 90,000,000 of producers as we have in looking out for the next campaign.

Mr. President, it is precisely that spirit which the resolutions I had read at the desk before I began my address were meant to rebuke. The Senator from Texas knows that no man in this country admires him more than I do, and he knows I say that sincerely; but the effort to interject in a nonpartisan and businesslike settlement of this question nothing but partisan tactics, while worthy of him as a political leader of his party, is not worthy of any man as a statesman of his country.

Now, Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the regular order be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator from Texas complimented me, although perhaps he did not intend to compliment me, by saying he was glad to see that I had joined the great army of tariff reformers. No, I will say to the Senator, I have not joined such an army, because I have always belonged to such an army; but I have not joined, and I never will join, any organization which makes of the American tariff the football of partisan politics, and that is precisely the difficulty over which we must get in this Congress. We have got to get away from the time that every great question which comes up in this body is considered by the leaders of either side with reference to what advantage they think there may be in it for their party in the coming campaign.

I will say this further, as an observer, not only to the Senator from Texas, who with such skill and alertness leads his side of the Chamber (and it was one of the wisest things the other side of the Chamber ever did when they selected that leader), but also I say it to the leaders upon our side, that most of the moves we make here that we consider shrewd politics, that we consider a deft playing of the cards of political advantage, and that we plume and congratulate ourselves upon when we leave this Chamber as having gotten some advantage for our party, are absolutely unheard of by the 90,000,000 of the American people. There is no particular advantage in it for your side or for our side. The people never hear of it; they are too busy. The time has come when the old and outgrown method of dealing with public questions should be abandoned, and when we in Congress should be as earnest, as up-to-date, and as nonpartisan, if I may say it, in the doing of the nation's business as the great body of the American people who have sent us here to do their business are the same with reference to their affairs.

Now, the Senator has not shown—I am sorry to say it—that he has carefully studied the tariff question in detail, because he says there is a 45 per cent average on our tariff, as though we ought to have the same tariff on all articles, when, even if he is for a tariff for revenue only——

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator does not mean to suggest that I said a tariff of 45 per cent on all articles, taking the tariff as a whole?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator means the average rate?
Mr. CULBERSON. That is what I said.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. I know; that is what the Senator said.
Mr. CULBERSON. The average is 45 per cent.
Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes; that is what I say. Now, let me point out to the Senator that statement, which is repeated so frequently by men on both sides, who perhaps have not looked into the matter with the care the Senator would look into the matter if this were a law case. The statement was made by the Senator's next candidate for President, Mr. Bryan, in a magazine debate which he had with me on the subject, that there was an average rate of 45 per cent and he would have it cut down to 25 per cent.

Does not the Senator know, if he is really for tariff for revenue only, that we could not have a horizontal tariff; because even if nothing but revenue were to be considered there would have to be the highest duty on the best revenue-producing articles considering the amount of imports? You could not level it even for revenue producers.

There is another thing I call the attention of the Senator to, and I called it to the attention of the whole Senate in the beginning of my speech. If you speak about a purely revenue tariff, such as the Senator seems to champion, I think somewhat ill-advisedly, we must put a duty upon tea, upon coffee, upon chocolate, upon tropical fruits and every other similar food necessity of the people; because if you are raising revenue, if that is what you are doing, these articles are consumed by all of the American people, produced by none of the American people, and, therefore, you have in such articles the best revenue-producers of all imports. That is proved by the fact that Great Britain raises the most of her revenue on those articles.

I will not ask the Senator the question, but if I was going into the matter and having a partisan debate with the Senator, I would ask it, and make him answer, too, whether or not he is for a revenue tariff, and if for a revenue tariff, whether he proposes to the American people to put a tax on tea, coffee, chocolate, tropical fruits, and other similar necessities of the people. That is just what Great Britain does; and it is from such articles that she raises her tariff revenue.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, I was about to suggest that the statement the Senator has just made as to the policy of Great Britain is not very clearly understood by the people. Great Britain is said to be a free-trade country, and yet Great Britain raises her revenue largely from articles that the people must of necessity consume, while a large proportion of our revenue comes from duties on luxuries.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Quite so. That is what I said.

Mr. GALLINGER. The policy of Great Britain is much more burdensome to the consumer than our system of protection.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Undoubtedly. I am much obliged to the Senator from New Hampshire, because that calls my attention to a fact that I must submit to the Senator from Texas. Great Britain, the only modern nation that still clings to a purely revenue tariff, first of all puts a duty on tea, coffee, chocolate, etc., because they are revenue producers.

Mr. GALLINGER. And spices.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Spices and the like; and she is now about to abandon that. I commend to the Senator from Texas the speeches of Mr. Balfour, the late prime minister, which are among the ablest appeals to the people from the hustings that I have ever read, where he says the revenue tariff system of Great Britain is "motheaten" and outworn—that it gives them nothing to trade upon. Therefore, he says (and such is his exact expression) that "it commercially ties our hands," and he appeals to the British people to "free themselves commercially." I saw the other day that the movement was gaining such headway that in one or two years certainly it would win. They want a double protective tariff such as Canada, which is the greatest of her provinces, adopted last year. So I suggest these things and say to the Senator that perhaps his statement does not show that he has carefully looked into this problem.

Of course, if the Senator wants to make the old stump speeches about a tariff for revenue and if we wanted to make the old stump speeches about a tariff for protection, and all that sort of thing, those echoes of the past can be indulged in as much as Senators please. But the great producing masses of this country have passed beyond both. The Senator will have to learn a new speech for the coming campaign.

Now, the Senator talks about articles sold abroad. I think I have read most of the articles, books, and arguments on the revenue side of the tariff question; and there is not a fair advocate of that side, who is advanced as an economist and not merely as a partisan playing politics, who does not admit that that same thing is true of Great Britain. It is true of Germany; it is true of every other country.

If I had supposed that any Senator was going to introduce partisan politics and give a play for the next campaign into this serious economic discussion I would have brought figures I have in my possession showing the prices that Great Britain charges at home and the prices she charges abroad for staple articles, as every economist, every student of commerce knows she has done. So in that respect, although I think there might be some instances where it shows an injury, we pursue no different commercial policy from that of revenue Great Britain or protective Germany, or from any other country.

This other fact may be food for thought for the Senator. The only other countries in the world that now stick to a purely revenue tariff, a single revenue tariff, except Great Britain, are Persia, Abyssinia, Holland, and China. Am I to infer that in the interest of Democratic success in the coming campaign the Senator is going to ask the United States to follow the example of China, Abyssinia, Persia, and other similar modern nations?

Mr. President, I wish to close these few remarks with what I started out to say. I wish to plead with Senators on both sides that in the solution of the very grave and purely economic question of finding out the facts and making classifications, which has nothing to do with the theory upon which Congress shall act upon those facts and those classifications; in that purely scientific matter, each and every Senator shall treat it as I have tried to treat it, in a nonpartisan spirit, having reference only to the facts and to economic arguments. Has not the time come when we should quit, in this great forum and upon this great subject, the playing of little politics? Has not the time arrived when upon this question we should, on both sides, throw off the cloak of partisanship and go at the matter as we would go at the matter if we were directors of a great industry?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I shall pursue for a few moments the idea which I was endeavoring to suggest to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] regarding an improvement of his bill; and I am sure that I will earn the commendation of the Senator from Indiana when I tell him that I intend to confine myself to the economic and not enlarge upon the partisan aspects of this question.

I was struck by the remark made by the Senator from Indiana, that the customs authorities in dealing with certain duties acted as much in a legislative capacity as we do in fixing the duties. If that is so, it occurred to me that we might well shape this bill in such a way as to permit the customs authorities, operating under a rule laid down by Congress, to abate the admitted excesses of the existing tariff.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] has said that the average duty imposed upon imports is about 45 per cent. That may be true, though I imagine with the best of us it is a mere guess, for although I have made inquiry I have been unable to get any accurate statistics upon the subject. But assuming that the average duty is 45 per cent, it necessarily follows that many of the duties are above 45 per cent and that some of them are below 45 per cent.

Now, in operating with reference to the tariff, although I am in favor of tariff reform and tariff revision, I have always realized that no radical action could be taken. These high protective duties have existed for so long a period that they have become a part of the warp and woof of all of our products; and to seriously and instantaneously reduce these duties would necessarily produce disastrous changes in our industrial system. The people of the United States, as a result of this protective system, have been walking on stilts for many years. Our prices for almost everything are on stilts; our wages, as compared with those of the rest of the world, are upon stilts; and to quickly knock the stilts from under both wages and prices would throw the industries of the country into a writhing and seething mass of confusion. In my judgment, there is no sensible man who does not realize that, whatever reduction is made in the future in the tariff, it must not be radical. It must be progressive, and it must above all things be scientific; it should represent the best thought and the mature judgment of men expert in such matters.

But it is said Congress abdicates a legislative function when it intrusts this duty to any other body created by itself. It is true that the levying of a tax is a legislative function, just as it is a legislative function to fix the rates for railway fares and freights.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Of course the Senator from Nevada will remember that the bill which I have introduced does not propose that the tariff commission shall fix rates. I propose to leave that to Congress.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand that, but I suggest that we shall go further, and I propose to point the way.

It is a legislative function to fix a tax; but the tax imposed upon imports, like the rates fixed for railways in freights and fares, can be fixed by an administrative body, provided Congress, in the exercise of its legislative function, lays down the rule by which the tax is to be ascertained.

The difficulty with the proposal of the Senator from Indiana is that it is likely to result in great delay in tariff reform. The Senator states that the commission organized in Germany took two years and a half in the framing of their tariff measure, and then took three years and a half more in consultation with the various states comprising the German Empire and with the various industries affected by the tariff. The people of the United States do not wish to wait for six years or for three years for steps leading definitely toward tariff reduction. They would like to see that reduction inaugurated immediately—a moderate reduction at the start, proceeding progressively until the limit of reduction is reached, according to the best judgment of the country.

This spirit for tariff revision is not confined to the Democratic party; it has spread to the Republican party; and it is fair to say that over one-half of the members of the Republican party to-day desire tariff revision, which means necessarily a gradual reduction in the excessive duties of the tariff. Why should we not, then, in organizing a commission to make an inquiry with reference to the whole subject, give them certain powers determined by a rule which Congress shall assert, enabling them to gradually reduce these excessive duties, so that pari passu with the inquiry into tariff as a whole we shall have a gradual, progressive, and reformative action regarding rates which are now admittedly excessive, duties which are abhorrent to the judgment and the consciences of Members of both sides of this Chamber, for there is not a man on this floor, I will engage to say, Democrat or Republican, who will not declare upon his conscience that many of the existing duties are unnecessarily and excessively high.

In giving this commission power, not only to inquire, but to act, how shall we fix the rule for their action and how shall we fix that rule in such a way as not to involve any abdication of our legislative function? I think it will be admitted on both sides that there should be no duty on any product imported into this country over 45 per cent. I think all would agree to that. Why, then, should we not provide in this bill which provides for this inquiry, that the commission, wherever rates are in excess of 45 per cent ad valorem, shall reduce this excess every year at the rate of one-fifth or more annually until such duties are all reduced to 45 per cent? Congress would thus fix the rule, the mathematical rule, by which the commission is to act. The commission will not usurp any of the functions of legislation in so acting. It will simply exercise the mathematical function of adjusting its action to the rule prescribed by Congress. Then perhaps, having reached a general level not greater than 45 per cent, so that no duty in this country will exceed 45 per cent, even the Republican party might be content to progress further with a reduction in duties at the rate of 1 per cent or 2 per cent per annum until they reached 40 per cent; and then, later on in the same progressive way, further reductions could be accomplished. Indeed it seems to me in this way the aim of the Democratic party could be partially accomplished and the aim of the Republican party entirely accomplished, for if, after making these constant and progressive and gradual reductions for a period of ten years, the country then is in favor of freer trade in the shape of a tariff for revenue only, not in excess, say, of 25 per cent, or in favor of maintaining a protective tariff with no duties above, say, 35 or 40 per cent, the sense of the country could be taken upon the issue. As it is we have taken throughout the years purely a partisan view of this economic question, and we have made no progress. The advance has been steadily in the line of higher duties, simply because we have allowed this question to be determined by politics, and our political action has been determined by the great manufacturing and producing interests of the country. They have dominated these matters and we have had the fight of interests here and interests there to gain a constantly increasing advantage.

We have had during the past forty years four tariffs—the Morrill tariff, the McKinley tariff, the Wilson tariff, and the Dingley tariff. The Morrill tariff was the lowest of all, and yet it was regarded at the time as a high protective tariff. That tariff produced such excessive revenue, and such a surplus in the Treasury, that the Republican party itself, the friend of protection, organized a commission for the purpose of recommending tariff reduction. That commission acted; it reported in favor of tariff reduction. The sentiment of the country apparently was in favor of tariff reduction, and yet the Republican party came into power under Mr. Harrison, and, regarding the defeat of Mr. Cleveland as a warrant for still higher duties, proceeded to pass the McKinley bill, which was higher than the then existing Morrill tariff. An attempt was made in that bill, and made more effectual in the Dingley bill, to subsidize every producing interest in the country and thus make all such interests the effective and permanent allies of the high protective party. So that there is hardly a producing interest, hardly an occupation in which any man is engaged in this country that is not subsidized by existing legislation.

There was a revolt against the McKinley bill, and the Wilson bill was passed, but the duties of the Wilson bill on an average, though lower than those of the McKinley tariff, were as high as those of the Morrill tariff and even higher, for the protected interests were so strong that they exercised their power and their influence even in the Democratic party when it sought to reform the tariff. Then the change came and the Dingley bill was passed, imposing duties higher than those imposed by the McKinley bill. So we find the fruits of the agitation over the Morrill tariff and the appointment by the action of the Republican party of a commission intended to reduce that tariff and to make recommendations to that effect resulted in the gradual increase of duties, through the action of whom? The action of the Members of Congress, unduly influenced by great interests that were potential in election. They were unduly influenced when the Democratic party took action; they were unduly influenced when the Republican party took action; and it must be perfectly apparent that partisan action upon this question will never produce the economic results desired by the American people, whether they belong to the Republican or to the Democratic party.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the wise thing to do would be to select such a commission as the Senator suggests, making it thoroughly nonpartisan by providing that no more than four members of it shall belong to any one political party; by adding to the force of the commission an agriculturist—for that interest is not represented in this bill—and by also giving the commission power, under a rule laid down by Congress, to gradually and progressively reduce the excessive duties which shock the moral sense of the majority of the members of both parties of the country.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I do not rise to make a speech; I do not intend or desire to delay the unfinished business; but I can not permit the reproof that has been administered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] to go unanswered.

This is a partisan question; it is a political question; and it always will be a political question and a partisan question. Men differ as to the method by which the revenue of the country should be raised. Some men believe that a tariff should be levied for the purpose of protection, with incidental revenue. They are the Republican party. Other men believe that a tariff should be levied for the purpose of raising revenue, with incidental protection—one protection with incidental revenue and the other revenue with incidental protection. The Democratic party believes that the tariff should be levied for the purpose of raising revenue, with such incidental protection as may be given. The very fact that these two opposite opinions exist necessarily divides the electorate of the country into parties, and where there are parties it is impossible that there shall not be partisanship.

This has been regarded as a political question and as a partisan question in all the days of the Republic. Pendleton so thought it; Thurman so thought it, and that great Senator from the Senator's State, Daniel W. Voorhees, thought that it was so. McDonald, another Senator from his State, held that it was a political question, and so treated it. On the other side, James G. Blaine and Conkling and Reed and all the great leaders of the Republican party dealt with it as a partisan question. Men who want protection line up on the side of the party that advocates protection, and the men who want revenue with only incidental protection line up with that party that believes in that kind of a tariff. So there will always be this question, and you can not get it out of politics.

If you have your commission, it is to be appointed by a President who is elected because he believes in protection with incidental revenue, or because he believes in a tariff for revenue with incidental protection. It is true you may denominate it a nonpartisan commission, you may put upon the President the duty and obligation to appoint a commission composed of men who have no partisan feeling or no partisan opinions upon this question, but it is as utterly impossible for him to do that as it would be utterly impossible for him to find men competent to discharge the duties on the commission to which they would be assigned who have no such opinions.

It has been asserted but lately that the great head of the Republican party has said that there must be no legislation upon this question of tariff reform until after the Presidential election next November and until after Congress shall have assembled in December of this year. It is admitted by him, and admitted by a large per cent, if not 50 per cent, of the Republican party and the Republican leaders that there should be tariff revision now, but they say that they will not revise the tariff this year because this is a Presidential year, and to do so would disturb politics and unsettle politics in the coming election, by which they mean the prospects of the Republican party would thereby be jeopardized. They are thereby shown to be more solicitous of Republican prospects than they are of the rights and interests of those who pay the tariff. Why? Because they recognize that it is a political question, one of political partisanship.

If I were going to retort, I might say that the party now in power, now controlling the destinies of this country, now having the administration of the Government, recognizing that a large majority of the American people, composing a large percentage of the Republican party, are in favor of tariff revision, want to throw something to them in the way of a soporific to put them to sleep until after the Presidential election. I might retort that this will accomplish the very purpose that was suggested by the head of the Republican party by deferring this matter, but still keeping the people in hope until after the November election, and then giving opportunity to determine whether there shall be a revision of the tariff or not, or whether the present law shall continue until just before another Presidential election and then administer another dose of opiates to the American people.

There can be no getting away from the proposition that this is a political question. When the Senator from Indiana arraigned the Senator from Texas because he put in some suggestion in answer to the speech of the Senator from Indiana, it was on the principle of the boy who called upon his mother to make Bill behave himself because every time he hit Bill on the head Bill "hollered." [Laughter.]

Mr. SCOTT obtained the floor.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I just want to say a word.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well; I yield to the Senator for a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I merely want to say a word, and that is that I was rather astonished to hear the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN] admit that if this bill were passed it would take votes from his party.

Mr. MCLAURIN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I have never made any admission of that kind.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I understood the Senator to say that one effect of this bill would be to keep the people in hope until after the next election; and I inferred from that that the Senator meant that it would not be favorable to his party. Is that inference correct?

Mr. MCLAURIN. If the Senator understood that, his understanding——

Mr. SCOTT. I did not yield for a debate.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. SCOTT. For a moment.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I just want to say—and then I will sit down—that if the votes of the Senator's party defeat this bill, it will rob his party of votes at the next election.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I hope the Senator from West Virginia——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I hope the Senator from West Virginia will allow me to say that the understanding of the Senator from Indiana in reference to my admission is just as much at fault as is his understanding with reference to the partisanship contained in this bill. I made no such admission. I merely stated that if I were disposed to retort I could say that that was the purpose and intention of the introduction of the bill, but that it would have the effect suggested by the Senator from Indiana I never admitted.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I belong to the class of old-fashioned Republicans and I suppose I am put in the category of those who are called "stand-patters," if anyone knows what that term means. As I understand, a "stand-patter" is a man who does not believe in any revision of the tariff at this time. I believe that the present Dingley tariff has done more for this country in the past ten years than any law that was ever written into our statute books. It has done more for the workingman, more for the mechanic, and more for the farmer; and I think, Mr. President, it will be a very sad day for this country when we undertake in any very great degree to amend that law.

Any man who has traveled, as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and many other Senators have, in foreign countries knows the condition of the working people in such countries. We know why that condition exists. It is because of the low wages paid to foreign workmen. A few years ago when I was in Italy it was not uncommon to see women who were paid what would be equivalent to 6 or 7 cents a day in our money pulling the sweep around in the brickyards to stir up the mud out of which bricks were made; to see women carrying them and putting them in the sun to dry; and in Munich to see women carrying hods to the tops of buildings, and all this being done, Mr. President, at a very, very low rate of wage.

In my own business a man working fourteen or sixteen hours a day in Europe—in Germany, I will say—earns 2 marks. A man doing the same work in the factory of which I have the honor to be president working for four hours and a half will earn from two to three dollars and a half. But take the duty off of the commodity which he is engaged in making—and the same thing holds good as to other articles—and what must be the inevitable result? The wages of that workingman must be reduced; his family must live more economically; his children can not be sent to school for nine months in the year as they now are; he can not have any of the luxuries, but he and his family must live in the plainest possible way. I do not believe, Mr. President, that this great country of ours has come to the point yet where we are willing to subject our working people, who deserve all they are getting and more, to any such condition as that. If I had it in my power to do so, many of the schedules would be increased, so that the increase of duty might go to those who perform the work.

Mr. President, I do not believe in revising the tariff after the election; I do not believe in revising it before the election, and I do not believe that any man, when you put it home to him, wants to reduce the tariff on something that he himself has in his State or that he himself is interested in. He is like Mark Twain, who, when asked where was the best place to have a boil, said on his wife's relations. [Laughter.] You want to put it on somebody else. My friend from Michigan would not want the duty taken off of potatoes. West Virginia does not want the duty taken off of coal, steel, tin, pottery, glass, wool, timber, or iron. I am sorry to see that my friend, the Senator from Indiana, has gone out of the Chamber temporarily. He does not want to see the tariff taken off of wool. The time was before the Dingley law went into effect when a great many American citizens were ashamed to look a sheep in the face, for sheep had got to be so worthless because of the late tariff on wool.

I have merely risen, Mr. President, to offer my serious and earnest conviction against a tariff revision. I hold in my hand the last article ever written by that great statesman Thomas B. Reed, and I ask to have it incorporated in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The article referred to is as follows:

WHAT SHALL WE DO WITH THE TARIFF?

[By Thomas B. Reed, formerly Speaker of the House of Representatives.]

The elections for this year have taken place, and we have escaped the one great danger of democracy, which is the decision of great questions without discussion. But we have by no means got rid of the questions. We have now upon us the duty of discussing them with such care as will tend to decide them correctly. We have had a season of prosperity which has no parallel, even in our own remarkable history. There has been a movement of concentration, and business has been carried on on so great a scale that we are ourselves frightened by the tremendous shadow which we cast. We are not only exhibiting remarkable growth, but we are doing it in such fashion as to influence the Old World. In that suprising address which Mr. Carnegie has just delivered at St. Andrews, we can see depicted what the influence of forty nations united in one will be, and that it will force the countries of Europe, after due years and perhaps centuries, to such a union as will banish armies and wars. We may well hope for this, for the story of the world's march from feudalism and distraction to nationality and internal peace amply justifies his prophecies to those who can see that God works unceasingly and has all eternity under His command.

But our problem in this nation is of to-day, and if we do our duty of to-day the nation will find those who can take our places to-morrow.

All that is now happening is in accord with the nature of things. Displacing the old with the new is never without its complications and minor evils, which correct themselves in due time. All good progress, even that which is undoubted, has its temporary sorrows. One example, which takes innumerable forms, of this temporary sorrow which may be employed to illustrate the idea is the invention and use of labor-saving machinery. Upon such invention and use depends the whole material progress of the world. Nothing else could give us the abundance which characterizes our age. Yet, when any new labor-saving invention comes into use the first thing it does is to deserve its name by lessening the number of men who can work. Labor saved is, temporarily, labor lost. Men are discharged; the machine does what they used to do. Do you wonder, then, that men should resent this intrusion upon their sustenance and support? Some are too old to learn new trades, and for them there is no consolation. Yet, in the long run, new occasions spring up which employ this discharged labor, and the world has all it used to have and much besides.

Conservatism, or the unwillingness to welcome new things, has its uses. Most new things are not good and die an early death; but those which push themselves forward and by slow degrees force themselves upon the attention of mankind are the unconscious productions of human wisdom, and must have honest consideration, and must not be made the subject of unreasoning prejudice. Toward such a movement no one has a right to look askance. Above all, no one has a right to presume such a movement wrong. It may be wrong, but when business men all over a great nation pursue the same course, the presumption ought to be that they are right. Nevertheless, the first idea is to make them stop.

The history of corporations can be put into a few words. Men of sense are unwilling to risk their all in one enterprise or business. If they can limit their risks and if by union with others whose risks can be in like manner limited they can make a strong company, much idle money can be utilized and both capital and labor employed. On this basis, and the basis of easier management, corporations were formed and have gradually grown in full proportion to the growth of the world. In our day this growth has taken a new form. That form has been forced upon business men by competition with one another. If a number of concerns united to save expense and the duplication of management, others had to do likewise. These unions of capital have been forced upon the capitalist. This element of force we must all bear in mind if we wish to understand this question. Perhaps you think that men were glad to get into these unions and went cheerfully into combinations. Such was not the fact. Men hated to give up their independence. They and their fathers had built up their business. They were proud of their success and meant to leave their establishments to their children. In the new combination only one could be the head. The others must go out or take rear seats. Then came the task of valuing, which encountered the natural unwillingness to have others do better than we do, until the task of consolidation grew almost impossible. Why was it not absolutely impossible? Simply because of the murderous competition. It was union or bankruptcy. Of course, after there had been a few examples, it became easier. The rising tide of prosperity helped also, because it raised not prices only, but values, and men were reconciled by getting more than they had hoped for, though they got no more than belonged to them. It would be natural here to say, why not let competition go on? What we want is the results of competition—low prices, so that we can buy all we want. The answer to this can be made, and it is worth attention. With small factories scattered around and a country store in every village, competition did insure us low prices, but did not escape the evils we will hereafter speak of. So long as competition could be carried on on the basis of living and letting live, all went well; but, as capital grew in amount and mills in size, competition became more violent and property ceased to make returns. Now, the doctrine of competition, most invaluable in its way, has its limitations. Being human, it is not an unmixed good. Destructive competition is an evil. The world can not afford to have a trade which does not pay a fair profit. Hence, when a trade ceases to offer a fair profit, there has to be a remedy, and the remedy chosen here was in reality not a new one. It is impressive upon us at this time on account of its size. In a small way it has gone on ever since business became business.

But are we to be exposed to the mercy of those people who pile up millions, and have we no remedy by law or constitutional amendment? Yes; we have many remedies on the stump and in the newspapers. But the experience of mankind is universal that Providence has not left us to the stump orator or the newspapers, or even to the statesman. Somehow—after much blundering, perhaps, but somehow—every new movement has in itself the element of protection of the race. For instance, we are all afraid of monopolies; we fear that somebody by some new scheme will squeeze us permanently, and yet that has never happened. But, you will say, what can prevent these great aggregations of capital from charging what they like? The answer is that what prevents them from charging an unfair price is the well-founded fear that they will thereby risk and lose the vast sums already piled up. In other words, the same state of the world, the same general wealth, which enabled one big pile of capital to get together will enable a larger pile to get together and, by means of more modern machinery, to destroy the attempted monopoly. When one set of capitalists of great renown a year or two ago attempted to take control of Pacific business the undertaking was not so vast as to prevent men whose names were up to that time but little known from meeting them and making, at least, a drawn battle. The fact is that every business man now knows that the only monopoly anybody can get, except the temporary one of patents, to which no one objects, is by producing some article cheaper and selling it cheaper than any other maker. Whether such a monopoly is obnoxious and to be stamped out I leave to the wise declamation of the friends of the people.

It would be a good plan if somebody who believes in the efficacy of legislation would sit down and draw his statute and put into words his constitutional amendment and see where he would arrive. "Error," says the wise Latin, "lurks in generalties." To talk of doing something by means of something, if you do not specify the something to be done or the way to do it, is a waste of time.

After all the language which has been used about the great corporations one is a little surprised at the lack of specification. Almost everybody announces that what we need is "publicity." Even this is vague. Do you expect the public to be intrusted with the cost sheets? If you do not, then what will your publicity amount to? If you mean by "publicity" such a statement as will enable the outsider to buy wisely or the stockholder to sell at the true value, I fear we may be going beyond the province of free government, which certainly thus far has left the task of keeping his fingers out of the fire to the citizen whose fingers they were.

But can not we stop this stock watering? Must we not do it? Well, the value of stock is very much a matter of opinion. It will be noticed that the stock of one of our greatest companies can be bought for less than $40. The par value is $100. In the judgment of the world there is 60 per cent water, and in the market the water is squeezed out. Could a legislature do it more effectually? As that same stock sold at 55, there was a time when there was only 45 per cent of water. It is proposed in the new constitutional amendment to specify how often the test for water is to be applied? Are the stockholders to be assessed daily for the variations of each day, or are the directors to be indicted daily? Shall officers of the Government determine the value, or the public in open market?

There is a piece of wisdom as old as the world, which is worthy of all consideration. Let us not be in haste about great matters. When you don't know what to do, don't do it. If the proposition is to press an oak back into an acorn, it had better be carefully considered.

The proposed treatment of corporations, even if something ought to be done, is a fine example of how easily men mistake their wishes for their reasons. It is proposed to repeal such portions of the tariff act as have made these corporations prosperous. Of course, this is not intended to attack the tariff. All we are trying to do is to sap the prosperity of institutions which have grown so large as to frighten us. Why do they frighten us? Because they are great and strong and wealthy. Of course, then, their greatness and strength and wealth are fundamental facts beyond dispute. No tariff law, of course, can be made which does not apply to all. Hence, if the tariff is so reformed that the big, strong, and wealthy corporations go to destruction, how are the small ones to be saved? Really, to the calm and judicious mind this seems like free trade for its own sweet sake.

Protection in some lands may be the subject of discussion and debate. How it can be that in this country, and at this time, passes all understanding. In the United States the policy of protection has had a century and a quarter of alternate triumph and defeat. The triumph has always been followed by prosperity, the defeat by hard times. The last decade has been of striking example. We saw fit to try tariff reform in an act called the "Wilson Act." So prompt were the evidences of failure to meet the hopes of its framers that the country rose as one man, repealed the act, and substituted therefor the Dingley Act, which was the result of care and skill; and immediately there followed a demonstration of the advantages of protection, the like of which was never seen, even in this country. Owing to a combination of circumstances, we found other countries ready to take our surplus; and owing to the fact that we had not fairly started our demands on our own workshops, we had a surplus to send abroad. This large export trade was misunderstood. It only indicated that, with strong prices abroad, with England paralyzed by a strike, and with our own demand only just awakening, we could send many things abroad. It did not mean that we could always do this. It meant that the primacy was in sight, but not yet gained. When our own demand reached its proper increase we found we could not supply it. On the contrary, we used up not only what we made, but in the articles of iron and steel alone we have imported in the last year a million tons. Unfortunately, our exports came at a time when we were expanding, and everybody's mind was filled with the idea that we could supply the world. The free traders seized upon this state of the public mind and declared that we needed protection no longer and that the tariff must be abandoned. This idea that protection is in the nature of medicine, to be dropped as soon as possible, is an idea we had better examine. What if it is food? The medicine notion comes from the early arguments for the selection of infant industries to be fostered and cherished. Time and experience have enlarged that notion of protection. They have shown that protection is not a privilege, but a system. A privilege must be robbery. A system must justify itself by results. The principle which underlies protection is the securing at all times to the American people the markets of America. It means that the work of this nation shall be done by the people of this nation. All wealth comes from the marrying of labor to the raw material. In a country like ours, extending over such vast regions, there can be no lack of materials. Any system which enables our people to do our own work is the system which can give, and has given, the best results. The enemy have all along sneered at the idea that taxes can make us rich. But this is simply to beguile by words. Would it be any less absurd to say that taxes gave us good currency? And yet they did. We tax State currency. We do not raise one cent by the tax; it simply bars out the State currency. We used the tax as a way of accomplishing a result—as means to an end. In like manner, we used the taxing power to create a barrier behind which we could do our own work. All the theorists—the men who thought there was nothing in the world they could not think of—declared that we would be ruined. We have not been ruined, but we are to-day a very lively example of a people who do their own work. What would you say was the ideal industrial condition of a nation? Everybody at work. Just now we have everybody at work. And yet we think we want something else. If we keep on fussing we shall get it. With all the world except England, including her own colonies, of our opinion, with success embroidered on all our banners, we are invited to surrender our views and give place to a beaten world.

Why? Simply because of that human unrest which is part of the history of the race. We, being also of limited knowledge, are much given to be beguiled by generalities. Here is one line of generalities. Is the Dingley tariff bill the end of wisdom? If not, then it can be improved. A tariff bill could be framed, we think, which would be free from all the errors of that celebrated bill and retain its virtues. Where would you enact such a bill? Why, in your own mind, of course. Unfortunately, a bill enacted in the mind has no extraterritorial force. A bill enacted by Congress, like the progress of the world, is the result of a fierce conflict of opposing human interests, and must be so. When men talk carelessly of tariff revision, they talk of a tariff never yet established, and one that never can be. They dream of a tariff which exactly suits them individually, while a real tariff bill is one which measurably satisfies the country as a whole.

But can we not have, sitting in perpetual session, a body of men nonpartisan, judicious, wise, and incorruptible? Yes; in your mind. You can have anything in your mind. Imagination is unlimited, and it is very delightful to wander round among possible impossibilities. Just think of a nonpartisan free trader sitting on a tariff tax! Of course he would be above any prejudice except his own. I saw one tariff commission sit in 1882, and its report was not enacted into law. All its mistakes were, and the result was satisfactory to nobody.

What we had better do is to remember where we are and what our dangers are. Enterprises of business are not entered upon by helter-skelter. They are the result of calculation. One of the first inquiries of the promoter or maker is, How many of our present conditions are to remain? If there are to be uncertainties in the future he will not dare to act. What can you imagine that would dampen a business man's ardor more than to be called on to guess what a new tariff bill would be! The prophetic instinct in the human creature is there beyond its limit.

We ought to let the tariff alone; we ought to defend it against all comers for the good of the nation. We are doing more than well and need not hunt for disaster. That will come in due time.

Meanwhile, let us see what people are trying to do. Nobody dares to attack the tariff directly. Every effort against it is a flank attack. The tariff is to be changed, not because it has not produced prosperity, but because it has produced large corporations. We so hate and fear large corporations that we will destroy prosperity rather than not destroy them. To argue such a proposition would be a discredit to the American people. The most plausible attack has come from the demand for reciprocity. In my judgment, it will be found that, when the glittering generalities of reciprocity are refined down to actual statement of what is proposed, the American people will never have it. The history of reciprocity the world over has been that any treaty thus far devised has been one-sided, and the country losing has put an end to it. We tried it with Canada. Our export trade increased 13 per cent and theirs increased in eleven years 500 per cent. That treaty no longer exists. We had one with the Sandwich Islands, and on the average we gave them $5,000,000 remitted sugar duties a year, and sold them $4,000,000 worth of goods. In other words, we gave them all our exports and $1,000,000 besides. This is what the friends of free trade were trying to do for Cuba when we were so apprehensive that that island would be ruined if we did not give in charity what had no foundation in justice.

Protection, I repeat, is a system, and is justifiable because it is of general application. The whole nation gets the benefit of it. If you will examine reciprocity in detail you will find that, in nearly every case, the national revenue is sacrificed for the benefit of individuals. Hawaii alone cost us one hundred and one millions of unrequited dollars. Perhaps it may be a consolation to know that our own citizens, temporarily expatriated, were thereby greatly enriched. This example has led our citizens in Cuba to hope for like results, and they, too, are eager for remitted duties. But the scheme has been exposed, and Republicans must be blind, indeed, if they surrender any jot or tittle of protection of the beet industry in order to bestow largess upon citizens who expatriate themselves, while we refuse it to farmers who till our own soil. The low price of sugar in Cuba is the same low price which pervades all the West Indies, and is caused by the substitution of the beet, a better sugar producer than the cane. In a word, a great output of sugar lowers the price. Suppose a great grain crop sent prices down. Would we make it up to our farmers out of our Treasury? Of course not. If we can not do this thing to our farmers who stay at home, why should we do so to those who go abroad to develop other lands? When we recall the way in which Congress was made to believe that there was a great popular uprising in behalf of Cuba, and contrast it with the disclosures since made, we are amazed. Cuba had promises. By whom they were made, what they were, and when, nobody could ever tell. Mayors of towns just ready to starve sent us messages, and ruin or immediate action were the only alternatives. The whole year has gone and no ruin has come. This was simply a flank attack on protection, and many men were beguiled who had been its stanch champions. For the Republicans to desert the beet-sugar interest is to desert the farmer in the one conspicuous and clear case where his industry is fostered. Under the tariff as it now is all the sugar needed for this country can be made by the people of this country. That is in accord with our system. It is a part of our system, and should not be abandoned until the rest of it is abandoned. When we throw our markets open to the world in all things, then it will be time to do it for sugar.

Let us put this into a few words of a practical character.

We have a tariff carefully drawn, which has served us well. That tariff is only five years old. It has brought us away up on the hillside of success. It has no connection with great corporations, except what it has with small corporations and individuals. No attack by repealing the Dingley Act can hurt one without hurting all. Any disturbance of that kind would disturb trade in ways with which we are all too familiar.

A tariff bill at any time is not and can not be the creature of one mind. It means the result of a contest by all interests and all minds. Hence, whenever any man thinks of a tariff he would make, he always thinks of a tariff bill which will never be enacted.

There was once a President of the United States, of great power and influence. For four years he had no Congress behind him, and he dreamed of such a tariff-reform law as would suit him. By and by he had a Congress of his own party, and he started in to make such a law as would please both gods and men. There are those who remember the dismal looks of the Members of the House when they yielded to the Senate, and the averted looks of the President as he let the bill pass by, unsigned and friendless. To those men it became apparent, as it should be to the whole world, that the tariff enacted is always different from the act in your mind. Is the Republican party ready to open the box, knowing that, once it is opened, only hope is left behind?

THOMAS B. REED.

Mr. du PONT. Mr. President, among other communications which I have received on this subject is the one I send to the desk, which I ask to have read at the present time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested, in the absence of objection.

The Secretary read as follows:

NEW CASTLE, DEL., February 3, 1908.

At a meeting of the Board of Trade of the city of New Castle the following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas realizing the advisability of removing the subject of the tariff, so far as is practicable, from politics and that modifications in the present tariff laws and schedules have become desirable in the present condition of our foreign commerce and to promote its further development; and

Whereas a bill (S. 3163) to create a tariff commission has been introduced by Senator BEVERIDGE, the composition of which is to be nonpartisan and which shall have ample time and means to thoroughly study the entire subject not only of our own tariffs, but of those of foreign countries, including the matter of the proper protection of our labor; and

Whereas we believe that such a commission will be best able to study, weigh, and recommend measures upon which Congress may act without undue disturbance to business and with justice to all interests: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this board of trade earnestly advocates the creation of a nonpartisan, able, and conscientious tariff commission, as set forth in Senate bill S. 3163, and we urge our Representatives to give their support and aid to its legal enactment regardless of party lines.

Resolved, That the secretary be instructed to forward a copy of these resolutions to Senator Hon. H. A. du PONT, to Senator Hon. H. A. RICHARDSON, and to Representative Hon. HIRAM R. BURTON.

WILLIAM E. ROTHWELL,
Secretary New Castle Board of Trade.

Mr. STONE. Mr. President, I congratulate the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] and the country that the distinguished Senator by his bill and by his speech shows his belief to be in common with that entertained by the Democrats and by a great number of Republicans, that a necessity exists for a reform of the tariff laws, and that this necessity is due to the fact that the operation and effect of the existing law is detrimental to the great industrial and commercial interests of the country. That has been and still is the conviction of the political party with which Senators upon this side of the Chamber are identified. Up until recently the undoubted prevailing, if not unanimous, sentiment of Senators upon the other side of the Chamber and the prevailing sentiment in the great party to which they are attached was that the tariff law known as the Dingley Act was the wisest and the best tariff law ever enacted in this country, and that its effect on the industrial interests has been beneficent in a high degree; and if the sentiment of that party can be estimated from what has been said by its leaders it is still the view entertained by a majority of Republicans. But it seems that a light has broken in upon Republican conception, and a rising revolt is abroad amongst them against the continuation of the schedules of the Dingley Act.

Mr. President, if there be no need of a tariff revision, if the existing law is for the good of the country and accomplishes good results, if it is for the best, if under its operation the industries of the country thrive and prosperity eventuates, why should we change it? Why discontinue a policy or change a law that brings only good to our country? But the Senator from Indiana believes, in common with many other leaders of his party, that to-day the effect of the Dingley schedules is harmful, harmful to our industries, and that therefore a necessity exists for their revision.

Mr. President, not only do Democratic Senators here hold to that view, and Democratic Members of the House, but it is a widespread conviction, a conviction which obtains not alone among Democrats, but among Republicans also; and for this latter I am profoundly gratified. And there is proof abundant that this belief exists outside as well as in the Congress; and it exists among manufacturers as well as others.

I have here a telegram giving an account of the proceedings of a meeting held on May 23, 1907, by the National Association of Manufacturers of the United States. This is an Associated Press dispatch printed in the St. Louis Republic. It says:

NEW YORK, May 22.

The National Association of Manufacturers of the United States went on record to-day as in favor of a revision of the tariff at the earliest opportunity and the negotiations of more reciprocity treaties.

A lively debate preceded this vote upon the report of the committee on tariff and reciprocity. The committee based its recommendations on a poll of the 3,000 members of the association.

Of the total number replying 55 per cent declare for immediate revision, while 20 per cent expressed a "hands-off" sentiment. Eight per cent believe that the time for revision had not arrived and the other 17 per cent expressed indifference.

Now, the point is that a majority, a good large majority of the members of this great manufacturers' association, declare in favor of a revision of the tariff, not some time in the future, but an immediate revision.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Will the Senator from Missouri permit me?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. STONE. I do.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The Senator will permit me to say that I am possibly more familiar with the manufacturers' association's attitude than he is, having been in communication with them. That association, which I suppose is the greatest body of manufacturers in the world, is not in favor of a revision of the tariff by the hop, skip, and jump plan, but is in favor of the immediate appointment of a nonpartisan commission which shall find out the facts, prepare the schedules, and submit them to Congress, and then it is in favor of a revision upon the work of that commission.

I know that the Senator, who is very fair, does not want to leave out any element of fact in any statement he makes. That is the situation.

Mr. STONE. What the Senator says may be true. He says it is true and, therefore, I accept it, because he seems to speak by authority. But that does not concern the immediate point I was endeavoring to make. I was not talking about the method or the best way of revising the tariff, whether by a commission or by an act of Congress in the first instance, or by some other method. I was simply endeavoring to impress a single fact—that a large majority of this manufacturers' association, which the Senator from Indiana says is the largest in the country, if not in the world, demanded according to the terms of its own resolution an immediate revision of the tariff.

Hence some harm must be resulting to the manufacturers themselves from the operation of the tariff schedules, and that harm does result to them I have no doubt. If we were upon a tariff debate proper it would not be difficult to point out some of the disadvantages. That the farmers of the country are beginning to demand a revision also; that there is a rising sentiment among them in favor of it I have no doubt, and that there should be is beyond question.

Mr. President, the farmers constitute as a class the greatest body of consumers, and they are the greatest sufferers from the iniquities of our tariff system. Let me give one or two examples. They are the sole consumers of agricultural implements.

Mr. CLAPP. You do not mean the farmers consume the machines? They use them.

Mr. STONE. That is consumption.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, not necessarily. There is a vast difference.

Mr. STONE. I suppose the Senator from Minnesota thinks "consumption" means eating. In that sense I accept the correction. They do not eat them, but they do use them, and in that sense consume them.

I heard the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH] declaim vehemently here the other day against the harvester trust, a great organization with headquarters at Chicago, I believe, controlling to a very great extent the manufacturing plants of the country engaged in the manufacture not only of harvesters, but of other kinds of agricultural machinery. He told us that by reason of the combination of the manufacturers who constitute the trust they had destroyed competition and were enjoying an absolute monopoly in the manufacture of such implements. He said that by reason of the opportunity afforded by that monopoly they had within a year advanced the price of harvesting machines used in his State and the surrounding States from one hundred to a hundred and fifty dollars. What is true in that particular instance and with respect to that particular machine is relatively true with reference to other agricultural machines, and under such circumstances it seems to me the farmers of the country ought to be in favor of a radical revision of that schedule.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STONE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAPP. Does the Senator attribute the advanced price of harvesting machines to the tariff, which has remained the same in that respect for some years?

Mr. STONE. Is that the Senator's question?

Mr. CLAPP. That is one of them. I have another one to ask after you have answered that one.

Mr. STONE. I think so, very largely.

Mr. CLAPP. Then to what do you attribute the recent decrease in the price of lumber with no corresponding change in the tariff?

Mr. STONE. What has been the recent decrease in the price of lumber?

Mr. CLAPP. There has been a decrease in the last sixty days.

Mr. STONE. I suppose it is due to the lack of consumption.

Mr. CLAPP. Unquestionably.

Mr. STONE. And the lack of consumption is due, if not wholly, in large part, to the excessive prices demanded for lumber. I will speak of lumber in a moment.

Mr. President, I do not contend that the advance in agricultural machinery, the high price that is charged consumers for it, is due wholly to the tariff, but more to that than to anything else or all things else combined. It does afford the opportunity of establishing a monopoly, because the tariff upon such machinery is so high that it prevents importation, and foreign or outside competition is impossible. All that the gentlemen who organized this trust had to do was to get control of the manufacturing establishments in this country and then shelter themselves behind the tariff wall and grind and grind as far as the needs and abilities of the consumer would permit.

See the difference between the policies of the Republicans and the Democrats as to that particular schedule and as it relates to agricultural machinery. In 1894, under the Wilson bill, agricultural implements were on the free list, but in 1897, under the Dingley law, an ad valorem tax of 20 per cent was placed upon them.

Now, my friend the Senator from Minnesota speaks of lumber. Lumber in 1894 was made free. Scarcely had the schedule become operative and its effect well known when the Dingley bill was passed, and a tariff of from $1 to $3 per thousand feet board measure was put upon sawed lumber.

Mr. CLAPP. Does not the Senator misspeak himself? Was not the tariff $2?

Mr. STONE. Yes, $1, $2, and $3. It runs upon a scale. I have the statute here, if the Senator cares to see it.

Mr. CLAPP. You may be right about it, but I question it.

Mr. STONE. I am right.

> Sawed boards, planks, deals, and other lumber of whitewood, sycamore, and basswood, $1 per thousand feet board measure; sawed lumber, not specially provided for in this act, $2 per thousand feet board measure; but when lumber of any sort is planed or finished, in addition to the rates herein provided, there shall be levied and paid for each side so planed or finished 50 cents per thousand feet board measure; and if planed on one side and tongued and grooved, $1 per thousand feet board measure; and if planed on two sides and tongued and grooved, $1.50 per thousand feet board measure; and in estimating board measure under this schedule no deduction shall be made on board measure on account of planing, tonguing and grooving.

And so on along a scale.

Mr. President, this prohibitive tariff made the lumber trust possible. It made it possible for manufacturers and dealers in lumber products to extort almost at pleasure from the consumers. I am in favor, Mr. President, of a revision of the tariff. I am in favor of having it, not at some indefinite time in the future, although I would be glad to have it any time, but I want it now and as speedily as possible. We ought to have a revision now, this session; and after the law is made more reasonable and just than it is we can talk about a commission.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana did not tell us when we could expect a report from this commission and its deliberations brought here for the consideration of Congress. He did not indicate to us when we could hope to have a tariff revision by the means he proposes. I am sure it was not his intention; nevertheless it might be that this proposal could be made an excuse for further delay. The demand from the great industrial interests of the country is for an immediate revision, but I do not see it on the way just now.

I saw in the papers this morning that one of the Senators from Massachusetts and a presiding officer of another legislative body gave it forth on yesterday flatfooted, that the country could not have a tariff commission or tariff revision, and I do not believe, sir, that we can expect any early action or any favorable action on these tariff schedules from the Republican party.

My friend the Senator from Indiana would divorce the tariff question from politics. It is impossible. It is essentially to-day, as it has been throughout our history, a party question. This is so because the parties are radically divided upon the fundamental principles underlying tariff laws. I do not believe a wise or just revision of the tariff will be had now or for years to come if the revision is to be left to the Republican party.

Mr. President, how does the Republican party to-day stand on the question of revision? Here are some expressions which I have from several great Republican leaders showing how widely divergent their views are. On December 5, 1906, Secretary Taft, in a public speech at Bath, Me., said, as reported in the Kansas City Star:

> Speaking my individual opinion and for no one else, I believe that since the passage of the Dingley bill there has been a change in the business conditions of the country making it wise and just to revise the schedule of the existing tariff. The sentiment in favor of a revision of the tariff is growing in the Republican party, and in the near future the members of the party will doubtless be able to agree on a reasonable plan.

Secretary Taft later, on October 27, 1906, speaking at Cleveland, Ohio, said what I shall read, taken from a report of his speech printed in the Washington Post the following day.

> Secretary Taft in his opening speech—
> Says the dispatch to the Post—
> Secretary Taft, in his opening speech in the Ohio campaign to-night, declared in terms stronger than any he has hitherto used for a revision of the tariff. Changed conditions since the passage of the Dingley bill require revision, he asserted, to remove inequalities and excesses, while retaining the system of protection.

Secretary Taft, on the strength of such mild expressions as I have read, has been set down as an earnest and progressive tariff revisionist. The venerable senior Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] is put into the same category. I read from the St. Louis Republic, of August 19, 1906, as follows:

Senator CULLOM is a friend of the "Iowa idea," although probably not so radical in his views as Governor Cummins. Much to the surprise of everyone who listened to his comments, the Senator made his attitude known when replying to a question as to what he thought of Speaker CANNON'S speech before the Danville convention.

"All in all," he said, "it was an excellent speech. However, he went a little too stiff on the 'stand-pat' issue. We must not lead people to believe that there is no hope of ever changing the tariff schedules, or they might put us out of office."

Actuated by that fear, not for himself perhaps, but for his colleagues, he has aligned himself with the so-called "Republican revisionists." The senior Senator from Illinois is also reported in the Washington Post of November 11, 1907, as saying:

If we are to revise the tariff, and there seems to be a demand for it, we ought not to postpone it.

But if the bill introduced by the Senator from Indiana or any like measure is passed, the Lord only knows, if we wait upon it, when a serious effort will be made to revise the tariff.

I have other opinions here from Republican leaders like Governor Cummins, who favor a tariff revision, but I do not care to occupy too long the time of the Senate by reading them.

I have also some expressions from distinguished Republicans on the other side of the question in opposition to any tariff revision. Among them is a reported interview with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], printed in the Washington Herald of July 17, 1907, in which he is reported as saying:

I talked tariff revision with President Roosevelt during most of my visit, and I gained the impression that there will be no tariff revision until after the next Presidential election.

He does not seem to agree with his venerable colleague. On the contrary, he wants to postpone a revision because of the exigencies of politics until after the next Presidential election. This Senator from Illinois regards it as a political question, and the President evidently regards it as a political question or else he would have sent a message here urging us to take up this important legislation at once, instead of procrastinating indefinitely.

Here is something from Speaker CANNON, printed in the Globe-Democrat, of St. Louis, May 24, 1907. The Speaker is reported as saying:

These dispatches have indicated the attitude of Mr. CANNON on the tariff question. It is clear that whatever may be the views of Mr. Taft, who recently made a tariff revision declaration, or of other of the advisers of the President, the Speaker gives no encouragement to tariff revision agitation. Neither did the Speaker assent to a suggestion put forward recently that the next Congress commit itself to future revision by resolution.

Then here is an expression from the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]—it is rather interesting reading—taken from the Washington Herald of July 27, 1907. The senior Senator from Ohio is quoted as saying:

I'm not a candidate for office, but if I should be I wouldn't get the lockjaw. I don't have to hold office to live. Secretary Taft is reported to have said no longer than day before yesterday that he wanted tariff revision. Former Governor Herrick said he wanted it, too. I don't wonder. Congressman Burton, who is said to want my place in the Senate, is another who wants revision. I'd like to know where these men who want to be candidates are to begin to revise. They say Taft is going to run for President. I understand he has come to Ohio to make a speech at Columbus. I hope he'll tell us how he is going to revise his tariff.

So that Senator seems to be among the antirevisionists. I will make one further quotation. This is from the American Economist, the organ of the American Protective Tariff League, of date January 3, 1908:

Nothing can beat Bryan for the nomination. Bryan will be the Democratic nominee upon a platform sufficiently loyal to free trade and hostile to protection to command the support of even the World itself. And Bryan will, as usual, be beaten at the polls, unless, perchance, the Republicans make the fatal mistake of nominating some man like Taft, who will try to meet Bryan halfway on the tariff question. In that event Bryan will be elected, and he ought to be elected.

I read these excerpts from interviews, dispatches, and editorials to show the division of sentiment and purpose among the men who form and direct the sentiment and policy of the Republican party. I have no doubt, as I have already said, that a very large proportion of the Republicans of the country, a majority of them perhaps, are opposed to intermeddling with the tariff schedules. That may be true—I think it is possibly—because of the expressions given by so many of the eminent men of the party. But, on the other hand, that there is a very large number of Republicans in all the avenues of our industrial life who are insisting urgently and persistently for a real revision of the tariff is equally clear. But those Republicans may as well understand now as later that they will get no real revision under Republican auspices.

If the covert threat, aye, the open threat, of the Economist should develop into a reality, if Taft and Bryan should be the candidates of the two parties, as now seems probable, and Mr. Bryan should be elected President, with a Democratic House, then we will begin a safe and conservative revision of the tariff, a revision along wise and well-considered lines, that will take into consideration the rights of the consumers as well as of all others, and do this so as to disturb as little as possible the legitimate business of the country; but, so far as the tariff is responsible, we will make the existence of these monstrous, sinister, and selfish trusts, of which such just complaint is made, impossible.

LANDS IN CARLTON COUNTY, MINN.

Mr. KEAN. I was going to move an executive session, but the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] asked me to yield to him.

Mr. CLAPP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3932) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Minnesota certain lands in the county of Carlton, Minn., and for other purposes.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate as in Committee of the Whole proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 5, after the word "quarter," to strike out "northeast quarter of southwest quarter, south half of" and insert "all of the," so as to make the section read:

That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to convey to the State of Minnesota the following-described tracts and parcels of lands, situate in the county of Carlton, State of Minnesota, and described as follows, to wit: All of section 36, township 49, range 18, except east half of northeast quarter; and all of section 31, township 49, range 17, except southwest quarter of northwest quarter and southeast quarter of southeast quarter; south half of southeast quarter, south half of southwest quarter, northeast quarter of southeast quarter, and south half of northeast quarter, all in section 30, township 49, range 17; northeast of northwest quarter, south half of northwest quarter, all of the southwest quarter, and south half of southeast quarter and northeast quarter of southeast quarter, section 29, township 49, range 17; north half of northwest quarter, southwest quarter of northeast quarter and southeast quarter, section 32, township 49, range 17, upon receipt by said Secretary of the Interior of the sum of $1.25 per acre to him paid by any person or persons on behalf of said State of Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 18, after the word "range," to strike out "seventeen" and insert "eighteen;" in line 22, after the word "seventeen," to strike out "northwest quarter of southwest quarter;" on page 3, line 1, after the word "southwest," to insert "quarter;" in line 2, after the word "northwest," to insert "quarter;" in line 6, after the word "them," to insert "or their heirs;" in line 7, after the word "Minnesota," to insert "upon such allotment being first appraised by the Secretary of the Interior;" and in line 10, after the word "fee," to insert "and the proceeds of such allotment in case of an incompetent Indian shall be held and disposed of as provided by the act of March 1, 1907, 34 Statutes at Large, pages 1015 to 1018," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That all restrictions on alienation as to any allottee or allotment embraced in the following-described lands, to wit: East half of northeast quarter, section 36, township 49, range 18; southwest quarter of northwest quarter, section 31, township 49, range 17; north half of northeast quarter and southeast quarter of northeast quarter, section 32, township 49, range 17; and northwest quarter of northwest quarter, northwest of southeast, section 29, township 49, range 17; north half of northeast quarter, northwest quarter of southeast quarter, north half of southwest quarter, southeast of northwest quarter, section 30, township 49, range 17; southeast of southeast, section 25, township 49, range 18, are hereby removed in so far that said allottees or any of them or their heirs may convey their allotments to the State of Minnesota upon such allotment being first appraised by the Secretary of the Interior, and in that case the trust patent heretofore issued for such allotment shall be deemed and be a patent in fee, and the proceeds of such allotment in case of an incompetent Indian shall be held and disposed of as provided by the act of March 1, 1907, 34 Statutes at Large, pages 1015–1018, or any Indian holding an allotment upon any of the lands described in this section may file with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs a relinquishment of said allotment and have the right to take another allotment of any unallotted lands subject to allotment in said State of Minnesota, provided that such relinquishment be accompanied by the sum of $1.25 for each acre covered by such relinquishment, to be turned over to the Secretary of the Interior and disposed of as hereinafter provided.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BACON. Is there a report accompanying the bill?

Mr. CLAPP. Yes, sir; there is a report, and a recommendation from the Indian Office.

Mr. BACON. If it is not too long, I should like to hear it read, or, if it is long, perhaps the Senator from Minnesota can state briefly what the bill proposes to do.

Mr. CLAPP. I will state it.

These were Indian lands covered by the act known as the "Nelson Act" of 1889, which provided that the timber should be sold and the proceeds placed in the Treasury to the credit of the United States, and then the land would be subject to homestead entry at a dollar and a quarter an acre. There are about twelve hundred acres there that the people of that community want to make into a forest reserve. The bill provides that the Secretary of the Interior may deed the lands to the State of Minnesota for one dollar and a quarter an acre, the Indian, of course, getting just the same as he would had the original law gone forward.

All the land is now covered by contracts for the purchase of timber, as appears by a letter from the Land Office attached to the report. So all there is about the bill, instead of the land now going to individuals it will be deeded to the State and the people there put up the money to pay for it.

Mr. BACON. The Indians get the same as they would get if private individuals bought it?

Mr. CLAPP. Precisely; just the same.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and twenty-two minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 6, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 5, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COMMITTEE ON IMMIGRATION AND NATURALIZATION.

Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization be authorized to have such printing and binding done as may be required in the transaction of its business during the Sixtieth Congress.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act (S. 39) to correct the military record of Otis C. Mooney.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments, bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

An act (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 39. An act to correct the military record of Otis C. Mooney—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. R. 18. Joint resolution appointing a commission to investigate methods of operation of coal and other mines and recent mining disasters in certain States of the United States—to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

JOSEPH C. M'ELROY, DECEASED.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I present the following report from the Committee on Accounts.

Resolution in lieu of H. Res. 164.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, to Benjamin L. McElroy, Jessie Bridgeman, Myrtle E. James, and Joseph C. McElroy, jr., heirs of Joseph C. McElroy, deceased, late Postmaster of the House of Representatives, the balance of his salary for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, from the date of his death, August 21, 1907, to be divided equally among said heirs, and an additional amount for the payment of the funeral expenses of the said Joseph C. McElroy, upon vouchers approved by the Committee on Accounts.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not see the minority Members just at this moment. Will the gentleman please explain the general purport of the resolution? Is this simply for funeral expenses?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. It is for funeral expenses, and also the balance of a year's salary. It is the customary resolution.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That ought to be done, no doubt.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DOUGLAS].

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from West Virginia for giving me a moment of time to say a word in regard to the late Postmaster of the House, whom I esteemed very highly as a warm personal friend. It is also, I assure gentlemen of the House, a matter of very sincere gratification to me that the first words that I should seem called upon to speak in this House should be in behalf of one who was not only, in a way, an appointee, but the companion in arms and the very warm personal friend of the very distinguished gentleman who so long represented in this House the district of Ohio which I have now the honor to represent.

Capt. Joseph C. McElroy was born near the village of Racine, upon the Ohio River, in Meigs County, in the year 1831, and except for three years that he spent in the gold fields of California, and four years in the Union Army, he passed all of his life in or near that village. In 1861 he enlisted in Company K of the Eighteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, a regiment of which Col. Charles H. Grosvenor was the commander. He served with that regiment all the years of the war and took part in the battles of Stones River, Chickamauga, Chattanooga, and the other battles in which the Army of the Cumberland was afterwards engaged, and everywhere he showed the same devotion to duty that he showed in connection with his office here. He came back to his native county and was elected its sheriff, and afterwards ably represented his county in the legislature of Ohio. In 1895, upon the nomination of General Grosvenor, he was chosen to be the Postmaster of this House, and for twelve years, until his death in August last, he served faithfully in that position.

I am sure that to those of you who knew him here he commended himself always by his uniform kindliness, cheerfulness and courtesy, and I believe that the Members of this House, especially those who knew him best, will take pleasure in favoring this resolution. [Applause.]

The resolution was agreed to.

ASSISTANT CLERK TO COMMITTEE ON FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, a sum equal to the rate of $1,600 per annum until otherwise provided by law.

The report (by Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia) is as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred House resolution No. 45, have had the same under consideration and recommend its adoption with the following amendment:

In line 4 strike out the word "six" and insert the word "four."

This resolution provides for the services of an assistant clerk to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, at a salary of $1,600 per annum. If the resolution be passed as amended, the salary will be $1,400 per annum, and it is thought by your committee that this will be a commensurate salary. The Committee on Foreign Affairs is the only committee having jurisdiction of one of the annual appropriation bills which has not the services of an assistant clerk, and the chairman of that committee has convinced us that the work of the committee has grown to such volume and importance as to warrant the employment of an additional clerk. Besides the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill, the committee is engaged in the matter of determining upon the places where new buildings shall be erected for the accommodation of our consular and diplomatic representatives abroad. For these and other reasons presented to your committee, and in view of the fact that all of the larger committees of the House have assistant clerks, the resolution is favorably reported with the amendment indicated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I was engaged in conversation with a Member at the moment and did not hear this resolution read.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I will say for the information of the gentleman that this is for an assistant clerk to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. The work of that committee has increased so much that it was demonstrated to the committee that they needed this additional clerk. This is a unanimous report from the Committee on Accounts.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

MESSENGER IN CHARGE OF TELEPHONES.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I desire to offer a further report from the Committee on Accounts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of a messenger in charge of telephones on the floor of the House compensation at the rate of $1,500 per annum, payable monthly, until otherwise ordered: Provided, That said messenger shall be in lieu of one folder at $800 per annum now provided for by law.

The report (by Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia) is as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to which was referred House resolution No. 135, have had the same under consideration, and recommend its adoption with the following amendment:

In line 4 strike out the word "five" and insert the word "two."

This resolution provides for the services of a messenger in charge of telephones on the floor of the House, at a salary of $1,500 per annum in lieu of one folder at $800 per annum.

In the cloakroom are located four telephone booths, two on the Democratic and two on the Republican side, in charge of telephone pages. They are in constant use during the sessions of the House, and it was found necessary by the Doorkeeper to detail a person to superintend the boys in charge of them. For this duty Mr. A. E. Chaffee was detailed from the folders' roll, and he has performed the work in a highly satisfactory manner to the Members, and it is thought that the responsibility attached to the position and the incumbent's efficiency warrant the creation of the position of messenger in charge of these telephones.

Your committee believes a salary of $1,200 per annum would be commensurate.

We therefore recommend that the resolution be amended as indicated, making the salary $1,200 instead of $1,500 per annum as proposed; and as the position to be created will be in lieu of that of a folder at $800 per annum, the net increase involved in the resolution will be $400 per annum.

Your committee recommend the adoption of the resolution amended as indicated.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Yes.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

INDEX OF PRIVATE CLAIMS.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I also submit the following from the Committee on Accounts:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That during the remainder of the present Congress, or until otherwise provided for by law, there shall be paid, out of the contingent fund of the House, for the services of three persons to continue the preparation, under the direction of the Clerk of the House, of a digested summary and alphabetical list of private claims presented to the House of Representatives, a sum equal to the rate of $1,600 per annum each, payable monthly.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to hear an explanation. Is this the same old thing?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. I do not know what the gentleman means by "the same old thing."

Mr. MANN. Then the gentleman can not be familiar with the history of the past.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. If the gentleman wants to know what this is, I shall be glad to tell him.

Mr. MANN. We have had a lot of clerks who purport to be and perhaps are working on an index of claims, from which you can, in fact, get no information about any claims pending or that have been pending. Is this the same thing?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. This resolution provides for the employment of three index clerks on private claims. This index has been brought up to and including the Fifty-seventh Congress. These three clerks are to be employed to take it from the beginning of the Fifty-eighth Congress to the present time, and to continue the work.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman say whether these indexes are accessible so that you can get information from them?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes; they are accessible, and necessary. The file clerk can hardly get along without them. This index enables the file clerk at once to go and find a claim and find all the papers in connection with that claim, when otherwise it would be almost an impossibility to do so.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman mean a claim that is pending before the House now—that if a claim is now pending, and the file clerk wants to get information about it, he would get it in that way?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. No; claims that have been introduced in past Congresses.

Mr. MANN. I may be mistaken, of course, but my information is that these indexes relate solely to former Congresses, and that they are kept in such shape that, practically, they are not accessible, and that they are absolutely or nearly absolutely valueless. They are permanent positions; why should they be paid for out of the contingent fund?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken; they are not permanent positions. There is nobody now employed in the service.

Mr. MANN. Nobody employed in the service now?

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Not now, and has not been since the appropriation was exhausted at the close of the last fiscal year.

Mr. CURRIER. Will the gentleman permit me? This force is a temporary force.

Mr. MANN. How many years has it been a temporary force?

Mr. CURRIER. We have not had any such force for four years.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from New Hampshire is mistaken.

Mr. CURRIER. The gentleman from New Hampshire is not mistaken.

Mr. MANN. I have been in the room of these people looking over their work with the clerks themselves since that time.

Mr. CURRIER. The work has not been done since the close of the Fifty-seventh Congress. The force was a temporary force, in this sense, that it was expected that the index would soon be brought up to date and then one man could carry it on.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about the work not having been carried on since the Fifty-seventh Congress. I know it was carried on during the Fifty-eighth Congress.

Mr. CURRIER. Our understanding before the committee was the other way—that the work had not been done since the close of the Fifty-seventh Congress.

Mr. MANN. Very likely, but the testimony was erroneous. I think they are at work there now.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The understanding with the committee was that they are not working there now and have not been since the beginning of the present fiscal year.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. The work the gentleman from Illinois alluded to was in bringing the index up to and including the Fifty-seventh Congress, and the resolution now under consideration takes it up from that time and brings it forward.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from West Virginia says they were not working during the Fifty-eighth Congress? He is mistaken about that; they were working during the Fifty-eighth Congress and during the Fifty-ninth Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will excuse me, the Clerk of the House informs me that these clerks were not employed during the Fifty-ninth Congress, but they were employed during the Fifty-eighth Congress; and, inasmuch as the employment is under the Clerk of the House, I presume he is correct.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman from New York is mistaken about what the Clerk has informed him, although I do not propose to enter into any controversy about that. I have no doubt that the Clerk of the House will inform the gentleman from New York that the clerks were dropped the 1st of last July.

Mr. SHERMAN. They were not employed during the Fifty-ninth Congress, but they were employed up to that time, having done valuable work. This is not an index for pending claims, but it covers all claims for a long period of time, as the gentleman knows quite well. Many of these claims are not a century old, but decades old, and every now and then are brought up anew, and this index provides the information under which we can ascertain all that has ever been done or attempted to be done in reference to these claims. Many of them, as I say, are old enough to vote.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken about what the Clerk of the House has informed him. I have communicated with the Clerk and have been perfectly aware of what has taken place. The Clerk undoubtedly informed the gentleman that the indexes have not been brought down covering the Fifty-ninth Congress, and the gentleman assumed that the clerks had not been working during the Fifty-ninth Congress. The temporary clerks have been working years, bringing these indexes down to date, and if made accessible are of value; but they have not been made accessible.

Mr. SHERMAN. They have not been brought down up to date. The gentleman says they are not accessible. I hold a volume of the index in my hand.

Mr. MANN. What is the date of that?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is for the Fifty-eighth Congress.

Mr. MANN. What is the date of the volume?

Mr. SHERMAN. These are accessible to every Member of the House.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman state what the date of the volume is?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is from the Forty-seventh to the Fifty-first Congress, and was published in 1896.

Mr. MANN. That is it; it was not these clerks that did that work at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. It was a similar service; perhaps it was not done by the identical clerks.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, that volume is absolutely of no value to the House. I do not say that the clerks may not properly be employed; I do know about that; but if they are to be employed, there ought to be some way provided by which their information would be accessible to the House. In the last Congress I asked them for information about various claims pending in the House, and I obtained no information from them in any case whatever.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] if he will have the report read on this resolution.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. Yes; I will ask for the reading of the report.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Accounts, to whom was referred H. Res. No. 51, have had the same under consideration and recommend its adoption.

This resolution provides for the employment of three persons, under the direction of the Clerk of the House, to continue the preparation of a digested summary and alphabetical list of private claims, to be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, at the rate of $1,600 per annum each. From the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress until the end of the fiscal year 1907 provision was made in one of the general appropriation bills for the employment of three clerks at $1,600 per annum each to index private claims presented to the House from the Fifty-second to the Fifty-seventh Congresses, inclusive. The resolution herewith reported proposes to continue this index from and including the Fifty-eighth Congress, and the number of persons required and authorized for the carrying on of this work is the same as heretofore provided for—three, and at the same rate of compensation. Therefore this resolution does not differ in any essential respect from those previously adopted in former Congresses.

It was the custom until the Fifty-seventh Congress to carry on this work under authority of a resolution. The index of private claims, embracing as it does the chronological history of every claim presented since the beginning of the Government, is a valuable publication. It is contained in five volumes; the first volume, covering the first thirty-three Congresses, is of unusual size. By the aid of this index the history of a private claim, of whatever nature, can be traced, the number of Congresses in which presented shown, with the number of bills and reports in connection therewith, reference to papers in each case, and the disposition made of each claim.

This index is not only necessary in the work of the file clerk of the House, who has charge of the archives, but is indispensable, for by its use much time and labor is saved in searching for cases.

Following the custom in regard to this work, and believing it to be necessary, your committee report the resolution favorably.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. HUGHES] how much more time will be required to finish this work.

Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia. With three men, it will take one year to get it up. After that one man can continue the work permanently.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the work will be continued and the resolution passed.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15219), the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. PERKINS in the chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, so that the members of the committee may understand where we are at and where they are at, I will say that it is not the intention of the committee to take up the bill for reading under the five-minute rule to-day. Although the time has been limited to four hours for general debate, on account of the requests that have been made for time, it is quite probable that we may have to ask for an extension of that time, but whether we do or not, we will not take it up for reading under the five-minute rule to-day.

I now yield one hour to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I labor under disadvantage because, having been called out frequently during the past two or three days, I have not heard a great deal of this debate. Another unfortunate circumstance is that so many of the speeches have been held back three or four days, presumably for repairs, before they appear in the RECORD. We are having now our quadrennial exhibition on the part of our friends on the other side of the aisle, which always occurs in the winter and spring preceding a Presidential election. With renewed exuberance of spirit, with prophetic sight, they are accustomed during this season of the year to carry the next election, inaugurate their candidate, and divide up the offices. [Laughter on the Republican side.] We hold our election in November, and will be there next November. [Applause on the Republican side.]

My genial and eloquent colleague from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] appears at one of these quadrennial jollifications for the first time in perhaps a dozen years, and adds somewhat to the gaiety of the occasion. He, as I understood him, claimed that the most that was good in the past in the way of legislation had been given the country by the Democratic party, and he went back to the beginning of things to prove his assertion. He denounced Alexander Hamilton as a royalist, and yet, while Alexander Hamilton might have gone further in advocating his ideas as to a Constitution than a Republican would nowadays, still he exerted the most salutary influence during all the time that our Constitution was being framed. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Jackson, he says, discovered in 1832 that this was a nation, and when some Southern Democrats were passing a nullification resolution he sent them word that that was treason against the United States, and so he makes Jackson the first discoverer that there was a nation. But Alexander Hamilton, perhaps at a dinner at which Mr. Jefferson was present, incorporated into the Constitution and into the laws the principle that the debts of the States incurred for bringing liberty and victory to the Federal Arms should be assumed by the National Government, that the National Government should be responsible for the national defense and thereby wrote into the Constitution and the laws the fact that we were a nation. [Applause on the Republican side.] It is reported afterwards that Jefferson said he had been tricked into agreeing to this provision. Well, it was the very best trick that any of our statesmen of those days ever took, if that were true. [Applause on the Republican side.] History seems to point to the fact that it was simply a trade; Hamilton trading the location of the Capitol on the banks of the Potomac for the substantial advantage of making a united nation out of a confederacy. [Applause on the Republican side.]

And so the discovery by Andrew Jackson in 1832 of the fact that we were a nation was simply the discovery of Hamilton's work fifty years before. He seems to think that the Republican party in the sixties were indebted to Jackson for the idea. To whoever they were indebted the Republican party at the beginning of the war with stern resolve determined to fight it out on the line that we were a nation, that the nation had the right to coerce a sovereign State, that the old Jeffersonian idea of a confederacy and a Constitution and a nation was simply a rope of sand, was not the true doctrine of the fathers; on the other side were ranged that Democratic party in the South, and too many of them in the North ready to yield up to the establishment of two confederacies where the United States now are, to let the Southern States depart and form their own government. Lincoln had a different idea and he fought it out on that line. My friend from New York says that the soldiers were Democratic though the leaders were Republicans in that great struggle. All honor to the brave men who donned the blue no matter to what political party they had belonged. [Applause on the Republican side.]

But the truth of history demonstrates that the great organization, the great power that saved the Union, was the Republican organization. [Applause on the Republican side.] I remember a few years ago when my genial friend from Ohio, James E. Campbell, was a Member of the House, he took the floor to prove that there was no Republican party in 1864, when Lincoln was reelected, and he brought in a copy of the Tribune Almanac, which showed that the votes for Lincoln were given under the caption of "Union Republicans," and, he claimed, showed there was no Republican party. The argument of my colleague the other day brought back the fanciful argument of James E. Campbell, I think, way back in the Forty-ninth Congress. The Republican party in behalf of Abraham Lincoln appealed to the Union men in the United States to strike down that party which in their platform declared the war a failure. [Applause on the Republican side.] Mr. Chairman, from the sixties down who can name an important piece of legislation for the good of the people of the United States that was not written on the statute books by the Republican party? [Applause on the Republican side.]

They say we get our party ideas from them; that our President gets his ideas from them, and the "peerless leader" wanders up and down the country and accuses Theodore Roosevelt of grand or petit larceny in purloining his ideas. Well, Mr. Bryan has written the last three Democratic platforms except the one that Judge Parker amended with his famous telegram. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.] And what is his method? He spends the four years in going about among the dwellers in the cave of Adullam hearing every man's complaint and every man's grievance and where there are votes behind the complaints and votes behind the grievance, he immediately champions the man's cause and when he comes to write the platform he follows the precedent of the Democratic party for the last fifty years by putting into the platform something designed to catch the votes of the unwary voter throughout the United States, not with regard to fixed principles, merely a bait thrown out, and sometimes he hits upon a good thing and gets it into his platform, and when anybody else with the same means of information, with the same knowledge on the subject, takes the idea and evolves it into law and puts it on the statute book he places himself among that grand army of men who are going about the country saying, "I told you so."

And my colleague, I am sorry to say, imitating the man he so eloquently opposed in 1896, is falling into the same habit of attributing everything good that has happened in the United States while his party has been out of power to the Democratic party. [Applause on Republican side.] Why, your party has been nothing but a party of negation, lo, these many years, a party of opposition, a party that is against the Government no matter what the Government is doing or what the Government wants. Democracy has been in something of a quandary for some time about Theodore Roosevelt. They have discovered that Roosevelt is immensely popular, not alone with the rank and file of the Republican party, but with the rank and file of their party, and have been questioning among themselves just how far it was best to go in the way of commending and indorsing the President. Mr. Bryan goes about the country and says that he indorses Mr. Roosevelt so far as he goes, and then adds, in order to dilute the indorsement, "He is doing just what I would have done under similar circumstances." And our friends get a little excited about it. My colleague from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] the other day took the floor to eulogize the present President of the United States on his late message, and his speech was largely devoted to encomiums upon Theodore Roosevelt with storms of Democratic applause. He followed a Democrat who had been denouncing the President, and immediately there seemed to be among the brethren a feeling of agitation as to whether they were not going too far, and that when he got into a real election in November next it would not hurt the Democratic party because they so enthusiastically indorsed what Roosevelt had done.

And so the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] when he took the floor called a halt on the enthusiasm that had been exhibited over my colleague's speech, and he suggested what seemed to me an amendment to the speech, and that was that he only eulogized certain things but condemned many things that Roosevelt had done and especially regretted that Roosevelt had not gone far enough to suit the Democracy.

They think that we are disturbed over the President's message. They make my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] say that certain of us are to be run over if we stand in the way of the procession. Well, I have known Theodore Roosevelt a great many years. I have known him well, and have remarked always that he had ideas upon every subject that he studied. Sometimes I agreed with him and sometimes I did not, and I have succeeded sometimes in bringing him to agree with me, and he has succeeded sometimes in bringing me to agree with him; and sometimes we have parted agreeing to disagree. Still, I recognize the fact that Theodore Roosevelt has a warm place in the hearts of the American people, in the hearts of the plain men, in the heart of the intelligent citizen, in the heart of the righteous citizen, of this Republic, such as has never been occupied by any public man in his day or generation. [Applause on the Republican side.] He sent us his annual message, making various suggestions and various recommendations. He sent us a message the other day reenforcing the suggestions of his annual message and our friends on the other side seem to be disturbed because we do not put them all on the statute book at once. They had better read a little deeper into his message, for the President himself realizes that it is a task of years to work out solutions of the problems which he suggests.

It is true that a decision of the Supreme Court nullified the act of the last Congress known as the "employers' liability act." It is also true that in both Houses Republican Members immediately introduced bills to amend this act, or reenact that portion of it which was in accordance with the Constitution of the United States and the decision of the Supreme Court. I hope before the session is closed that a bill will be brought in here amending the Sherman Act, and knowing the gentleman who heads that committee, I believe that that will be attended to. And yet, gentlemen, it is one of the most difficult pieces of legislation to perfect of any that we are called to face—how to prevent the combinations which are bad and not injure the corporations and combinations of capital which are for the good of the whole people of the United States.

It may not be done this year. It may not be done next year, but if the Republican party retain their power in the Executive and in Congress, that question will be thrashed out and a just and equitable solution will follow it, and they will not have to run over anybody to do it, either. [Applause on the Republican side.] Nobody will be hurt unless it hurts the feelings of some of our friends on the other side of the Chamber.

The question of currency legislation comes before this Congress. My friend from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has positive views upon the question of currency legislation. What is his panacea? What is known as the Culberson bill. And what does that do? It guarantees the deposits, or provides that all national banks coming under the privileges of the bill shall guarantee the payment of the deposits in all the banks within the combination where those deposits are subject to check and bear no interest.

Why does the gentleman from Mississippi want to pass this? Why, to prevent panics. In order to prevent panics he suggests a fund of the enormous sum of $15,000,000, and then he says that the failed banks would not call upon the others for a contribution of more than a very small percentage of 1 per cent of their deposits; and yet in 1873 and in 1893 the losses to depositors by banks that failed amounted to more than 1 per cent of all the deposits in all the banks of the United States. The fund is not adequate. What is going to be done with that vast amount of deposits that are on certificate and draw a rate of interest, certificates payable on demand? Look to the statements of the banks in your various towns and you will find that about one-half of the average deposits are on certificates payable on demand and drawing interest if left for a certain time. These are to be left out of account. Suppose a bank should fail, and you call upon the other banks in the combination to pay the depositors in those banks in cash. Would there be no feeling of uneasiness among those depositors? Would there not especially be a feeling of uneasiness among those depositors who put all their money there at interest, knowing that their deposits were not guaranteed? Would there not be a run on the part of those people without further remedy, and thus incite a worse feeling and worse panic?

Now, I see no reason as a business question why a man who instituted a bank with sufficient capital and run it on good business principles should be required to pay the depositors of some other fellow who took the deposit and went wrong with it, perhaps went out of the country and the bank out of existence, or overloaned its deposits to the directors; he might have loaned it nearly all to the directors of the bank, their wives, and other relatives, who used the money of the depositors, and leave it to those people who own sound banks to make good the deposits; he might lose the feeling which very often prevents men from crime and embezzlement—the feeling that such action was to destroy the earnings of his neighbors and his friends—taking risks in speculation, feeling that if the worst came to the worst the other banks in other localities would make good the deposits, and thus his friends would not suffer from the enormity of his crime. Why should a man who conducts his business honorably and uprightly be compelled to insure a man who acts the rogue and rascal in the conduct of his? Would it not be just as equitable and valid for me to borrow a thousand dollars and my friend here be compelled to make good the shortcomings when my note became due?

Why not carry this paternalism, this everlasting looking after the affairs of everybody, into guaranteeing the debts of all the people, as well of individuals as of the banks themselves?

No; that will not solve the question. I am sorry that my friend from New Jersey has proposed a fund, though better guarded, looking in the same direction, for he proposes to create by tax something of a fund out of which depositors may be paid, and there would not be so much danger of a run on the bank in that case as in the case of the bill that emanates from Texas.

I do not know that I agree to the Aldrich bill. It is a singular thing that I think scarcely two men, whether they are bankers or members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, eminent and honorable gentlemen as they are, or among us ordinary fellows, who do not aspire to be capitalists or understand banking, who exactly agree on every proposition that another could make on that subject, or perhaps upon any proposition that another could make. The Aldrich bill could be improved in several particulars, in my judgment. If it is to become law, I hope it will be improved before its enactment; but it has in it an element of trying to do something that is not dangerous that will not create a panicky feeling, that will not destroy the confidence of the people, in my judgment.

I do not know what will be done by Congress before we adjourn. I hope to see something done; some simple thing which will prove a remedy; some legislation, perhaps, similar in its simplicity to that we passed in 1900, when we discarded theories and theorems and simply went about to make the currency of this country equal to 100 cents in gold and succeeded in doing it. I do not believe that the bill of the gentleman from New Jersey radically changing all our currency system can be passed now, and, if ever, it must be after a period of education, when commercial men, merchants, and bankers shall agree upon its details and agree upon its principles. I would not vote for it now. The gentleman from New Jersey commended the Suffolk experiment in banking, which was successful in New England. At the same time the State of New York had a system of currency that was just as successful, that was just as sound and solid as was the currency in the Suffolk system in New England.

That was a system based on securities, the pledge of public stocks and other properties representing debts, deposited at Albany with the superintendent of banking. We had that system for perhaps fifteen years before the currency was taxed out of existence. No matter what other currency came and went, that currency was always good, at par everywhere, eagerly sought after in every part of the United States. That currency could be increased by a local bank by simply putting up the securities and taking out the currency from the Department. We moved our crops in those days, in my locality, largely by canal. The banker, foreseeing that he needed money to move the crops, put up his securities and took out the extra currency and loaned it for the movement of the crops, which went down by the canal, and after a few days the resources came back. They had plenty of money. There was no difficulty in the movement of the crops, and after this currency had performed its function it was presented to the local bank for redemption and redeemed and went out of existence; so that we had no expansion of the currency, we had no sudden contraction, but there was money enough to do the business. And if I was going to do this thing, I should suggest what the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] exploited here yesterday—not to try to change our system, not to try to convert the American people from a bond-secured currency to a credit currency, but to liberalize and allow them to increase, for the use of business, the present currency of the country to the amount of the untouched bonds of the United States, amounting to $200,000,000 or $300,000,000.

If I was going to draw the bill and enact it myself, I should not put any limit on it because of the capital of the bank, for the reason that the bonds would be sufficient to redeem the currency. Wherever it was needed, and the banker could get the bonds to put up, let him have what currency he needed for his locality; and afterwards, when the strain was over, the money would come back for redemption, and it would be to his interest to redeem it, because he could not use it to advantage.

Mr. PRINCE. Will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I should rather not yield until I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. PRINCE. Right in this connection, in the absence of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. FOWLER], I should like to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to section 30 of the Fowler bill:

SEC. 30. That from and after the passage of this act no national bank shall pay on any commercial account a higher rate of interest than 2 per cent upon monthly balances. Nor shall time certificates be issued payable upon demand for a shorter period than three months, and in no case shall a time certificate or a savings bank account be transferred or converted into a commercial account. Nor shall this be accomplished in any way, directly or indirectly, and any bank that violates this section shall pay into the guaranty fund a penalty of 10 per cent upon the amount so transferred or converted.

The gentleman will see that that is a check upon the bank offering a higher rate than 2 per cent, when the deposits are guaranteed by the bonds, and that provision is contained in a bill introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FOWLER]. I only thought, inasmuch as the gentleman had touched upon the guaranteeing of bank deposits, that the whole bill should be before the committee, so far as that particular point was concerned.

Mr. PAYNE. Perhaps I did not make myself as clearly understood as I wish to be, but I do not believe in trying to change the whole banking and currency system of the country now. I do not think it is a good time. I do not think the people are educated up to it, and therefore I think, without talking about the merits of that bill one way or another, that it can not pass. So far as the deposit guaranty is concerned, I am against it, and should vote against it, I think, at any time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from New York yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I should rather not be interrupted until I get through with my statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is a question right in connection with this, but if the gentleman would rather not be interrupted, of course I do not desire to do so.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman might as well ask his question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wished to ask the gentleman whether he favored the feature of the Aldrich bill which would permit railroad bonds to be deposited as security for the issue of notes?

Mr. PAYNE. As at present advised, I do not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] did not exactly revel in the panic that came upon the country, but he rather threw the matter in our faces. He said he had some remarks to make about the panic which occurred in 1903, or before there had been any Democratic legislation. Well, there had been a threat of Democratic legislation, backed up by an overwhelming majority elected to a Democratic Congress, and they did not fail to tell us what they were going to do. In fact, in the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses they had demonstrated what they might try to do, so far as interfering with the tariff laws of the country. I remember when that genial, gallant, and talented gentleman from the State of Illinois, Col. William R. Morrison, brought up his horizontal reduction tariff bill in the House. As chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means he had announced that he could draw a tariff bill in twenty minutes, and by and by he would bring it in. Well, it took him twenty minutes to try to draw that horizontal tariff bill, but it did not take twenty minutes for the people of the country to kill it deader than a door nail.

And so when it was finally submitted to the House, by a large Democratic majority, the enacting clause was stricken out, and that was the end of the Morrison bill, and I supposed that would be the end of all horizontal-reduction bills for all time to come.

But my friend from Mississippi, in his prolific suggestions as to what the Democratic party would do, among other things suggests a horizontal-reduction bill. I want to give you the number, so that it will not drop out of sight. It is H. R. 105. It proposes to enact that there shall be a minimum tariff, consisting of four-fifths of the present rates, to use to trade on and get concessions from other countries. This is not a sudden inspiration of my friend from Mississippi; it is the same bill he introduced two years ago.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, the gentleman from New York wants to state what the bill proposes to do. It fixes that as the minimum tariff, but it goes into operation at once with all such nations as shall give to us their minimum rates; so it is not a proposition merely by way of reciprocity. I suggest that the gentleman from New York print the bill in his remarks, and then the reader can see what it is. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. It provides—

That on and after the passage of this act there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported from such foreign countries as are hereinafter designated a rate equal to four-fifths of the present duties required to be levied, collected, and paid under an act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage the industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897, and the duties required by this act to be levied, collected, and paid shall be designated as the minimum tariff of the United States, and shall apply to and be levied, collected, and paid upon all articles imported into the United States from such countries as do now admit the products of the United States for sale or consumption within their borders upon an equality with like products of such country or countries as are or may be admitted to their ports at the minimum rate of duty levied by them.

SEC. 2. That any country which does not now, but shall hereafter, admit articles, the growth and product of the United States, for sale or consumption within its borders at the least or minimum rate of duty on imports levied and collected by it shall become entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this act within twenty days after the issuance of a proclamation by the President of the United States setting forth the fact that articles, the growth or product of the United States, are admitted to such country upon the payment of the minimum rates of duty imposed upon products imported from any country.

That is what I said, a minimum tariff for trade purposes. Now, everybody knows that if that bill became a law and the "peerless one" were in the White House, there would be an agreement made with every country under the sun admitting articles at four-fifths of our present rate of duty in exchange for a minimum tariff rate in their country.

Gentlemen, do you know what the minimum tariff rate is in Germany, France, and Russia? Why, it is a protective tariff strictly. A protective tariff upon every article that they had the ingenuity to protect in their rates. So, if we could get the minimum rate, we get in under protection. What does the gentleman from Mississippi propose to do indiscriminately for that concession—make a reduction of 20 per cent in the duties, some of which now are barely protective, many of which would be broken down by such a reduction of rates, throwing confusion worse confounded into our tariff system in order to get what? A little more trade with the nations of the earth at the expense of losing a large portion of that 90 per cent of our own trade which in itself is almost one-half of the trade of the markets of the world. This is what killed the Morrison bill. When you come to pick it to pieces this is what the Williams bill for a horizontal reduction in rates is. It will never see the light while the Republican party is in power or has a majority of the Ways and Means Committee, and I believe if we had a Democratic Congress we could prevail upon some of them to help us to strike out the enacting clause of such a measure because of its general unpopularity throughout the United States.

The gentleman from Mississippi has introduced his usual grist of bills. He introduced a bill taking off the duty on coal. It says:

That from and after the passage of this act no duty shall be levied or collected on coal of any form or description imported into the United States from foreign countries.

Some of his brethren, with more wisdom and discretion in these matters, have introduced bills taking off the duty on coal, providing the countries that take our coal will make us the same concession in their duty. I commend that idea to the gentleman from Mississippi, so that when he has a little leisure he can study up the matter and perhaps incorporate that in one of his bills which he presents as a platform of his party upon this tariff question.

Then he has a bill trying to revive the proposed treaty with France negotiated by Mr. Kasson so long ago that I had almost forgotten it. That treaty was investigated in the Senate and they found it was like a jug handle. France got the jug and we did not even get the handle; it was all one-sided, and they declined to make any such trade as that. But the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has gotten onto it and I suppose he will be pressing, some time, the passage of that bill.

Then here is another bill I think designed for home consumption. I want you people on that side to listen to it so that you can go out and holler about it in your districts this fall. It is bill No. 112 and provides that no duty shall be collected in excess of 100 per cent ad valorem upon the article imported and anything above that amount shall be remitted. Well, Mr. Chairman, the principal article imported into the United States that pays more than 100 per cent of duty is, first, alcohol, which pays 1,049 per cent ad valorem duty. Why? I want to tell the gentleman from Mississippi why. Because we levy an internal-revenue tax that amounts to just about 500 per cent on the value of the alcohol, and if we reduce it to 100 per cent in sufficient time it would close every distillery in the United States and wipe out more than one-half of the internal revenue in this country.

Another article is tobacco and some brands of cigars, upon which there are several hundred per cent. Of course we have some internal-revenue taxes on tobacco, manufactured, and cigars. That is not the whole story. The question was to raise a good revenue and at the same time to protect our people in Connecticut, for instance, and many of the Southern States in the raising of tobacco. There was the Sumatra wrapper coming in here, 1 pound of it going as far as 4 or 5 pounds of the best wrapper that we could grow in the United States—raised in Sumatra and coming in here by the millions of pounds. Now, we propose to put sufficient duty on that article to protect our people in the raising of wrappers in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] Then we put a duty on cigars, a compensatory duty for the duty on tobacco, and a duty which should protect the cigar maker, and when we got to the last analysis, the duty was equal to more than 100 per cent of the valuation of the article. Well, now, we won't report that bill out of our committee. We will not take the responsibility of striking down the tobacco farmers all over the country and the tobacco manufacturers and the cigar manufacturers the country throughout. If that bill ever passes—so illogical, so destructive of revenue—it will have to be some time in the dim and distant future when there is a Democratic majority in the House of Representatives. I don't know why the gentleman introduced that bill this time again. He introduced it before——

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from——

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, I will ask the gentleman to answer it in his own time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. I thought the gentleman asked me why

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no; I said I did not know. I do not want any information now, in my time. Why, I gave this gentleman this information two years ago, and why in the world, in the face of that and of these facts, he could come in here and introduce a bill to strike down the internal revenue on alcohol I can not imagine, and I hope he will have a whole hour to explain it some day.

Well, here is another bill, No. 114, which provides that from and after its passage the duties levied, collected, and paid upon watches imported into the United States from foreign countries shall be 15 per cent ad valorem. Then there is the provision that all provisions of law in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed. Under the present law there is no duty on watches. There is a duty on watch movements and a duty on watch cases. There is no duty on a watch. I don't know what was in the mind of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. I suppose it was the intention of the bill to strike down the duty on movements and on cases and put them all in as at 15 per cent duty on watches.

Well, we had a duty on watches, as I recollect, under the Wilson bill. When we came to frame the Dingley bill, we found that while they were paying the duty on watches, whenever they brought them in, they did not bring them in very much. However, they brought in movements and cases separately at a lower rate, and then when they got them here they assembled them and so evaded the duty. Whether the gentleman wants to return to that delectable state of things or not I can not imagine. When he makes that speech of explanation I commend him also to explain this bill to the satisfaction of his colleagues in order that they may adopt that with full knowledge as one of the planks of the Democratic platform. And I also commend the suggestion that very skillful labor is required to make one of these delicate pieces of machinery like the works of a watch, so delicate in its construction that the variations of a thousandth part of a hair determine whether it shall be a successful timepiece or otherwise, and whether or not such skillful labor is not entitled, even according to his theory, to more than 15 per cent ad valorem protection.

Well, these are not all of the bills that my friend has introduced on the subject of the tariff. There is another to repeal the import duties on antitoxin and diphtheretic serum. Antitoxin is manufactured all over the United States. Various towns and municipalities have taken it up and many of them furnish it free. In my country it comes free to every poor person. It will not keep more than two or three weeks. They have to put on it the date and the day on which it was manufactured, and no good physician will take it if it is more than two or three weeks old—I forget the number of days—and use it. They return the stale and get a fresh supply without extra charge for it. Where from? Europe? And have it come in free? What a practical reform that is, is it not? Take the duty off antitoxin, manufactured in so many places in the United States, manufactured under such restrictions, manufactured and remanufactured or re-renewed, new serum every two or three weeks, in order to answer the purpose and in that dread disease, diphtheria; no reputable physician anywhere will take any chances on using stale antitoxin upon any of his patients. We have had this bill before the House before. I thought the gentleman ought to have gotten enough out of that debate the other time to have desisted in his effort, but he seems incapable of instruction on the question of the tariff.

A bill to reduce the duty on linotype and composing machinery and to place wood pulp and white paper on the free list. "That the existing duty on composing or linotype machines is repealed and a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem" imposed. Two or three years ago somebody in the United States wrote to every country newspaper in the country telling them what an imposition a duty of 45 per cent under the "basket clause" was on the linotype, which was hardly known as a successful machine at the time the Dingley bill was passed.

They said in the first circular they could be bought abroad for $600 or $800 and they cost about $3,000 in the United States; but if it only took off that duty of 45 per cent, they could get them in here free of duty and they would come in competition with the linotype trust in the United States and reduce the price. Well, I answered my friends who wrote about that and asked them how it was that the duty of 45 per cent could add $2,400 to the cost of the machine. If you added the whole duty it would amount to less than $1,000, and not the rankest free trader ever suggested that you add more than the duty. It suggested itself to me that there was a patents or patents on those machines, and I wrote to the Commissioner of Patents, and his reply was, not literally but in substance, that it was covered all over with patents, and so you could not import and we did not import and have not imported a foreign-made machine. They can not use them here, and I suggested to them that their remedy was to repeal the patent laws, and not to say anything about the duty of 45 per cent on the machines; that cut no figure whatever. Then the man got out a new circular, and he said they cost abroad, I think, $1,000, his advanced price, and could be bought in this country for about $2,000. I do not remember those figures, but we have got a 2-bushel basket full of those things in the room of the Committee on Ways and Means, and the figures can be gotten there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield thirty minutes aditional to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York for thirty minutes more.

Mr. PAYNE. I again suggested the patent, and in every instance where I wrote that letter the intelligent country editors in my district wrote back and said they had been imposed upon by this fellow who had sent out the circular. So all that is necessary to do is to turn on the light to your country editors down in your districts and you will have ample justification for not sitting up nights about reducing or taking off duty on linotypes.

Then the gentleman from Mississippi wants to take off the duty on wood pulp and on "white paper." The committee has a half dozen bills before it taking off the duty on print paper and putting it on the free list. These bills are intelligently drawn for the object proposed, and what they propose is to put wood pulp and print paper on the free list. But the bill of the gentleman from Mississippi would put white paper on the free list.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My bill this year is to do just that, to put print paper on the free list. You have got a bill there of two or three years ago.

Mr. PAYNE (reading)

H. R. 116. In the House of Representatives, December 2, 1907. Mr. Williams introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

A bill to reduce the duty on linotype and composing machines, and to place wood pulp and white paper on the free list.

Section 2 reads as follows:

That the duties now levied and collected on wood pulp and white paper are hereby repealed.

[Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman is correct in reading the bill, but this is the first time I knew it was white paper. I thought it was print paper instead. It was a mistake of the stenographer in drawing up the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. The leader of the minority party, laying down a platform here in the House of Representatives which shall be based upon his bill, showing what they propose to do, and this is the first time that he has discovered that white paper includes more than print paper as he has it in his bill! [Applause on the Republican side.] Take electrotype paper and photographic paper and embossed paper, paper with a high finish and bearing a large price, and costing much to manufacture, and yet after four years of experience in the Committee on Ways and Means we have this usually intelligent Representative from the State of Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], a man well informed, a scholar, bringing in a bill putting "white paper" on the free list in order to get at print paper, and to jolly—I won't say that is his object—but which might jolly the publishers of some of the newspapers in the United States.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we put that duty, equaling about 16 per cent ad valorem on print paper, and put about 13 per cent on wood pulp and put pulp wood on the free list, we did it after ample consideration. I do not now recollect a single newspaper publisher who at that time protested against it. I have heard it since, Mr. Chairman, but at that time I do not recollect of a single protest. We put it on, and not a very extravagant duty, is it, for a manufacture which requires much labor? Print paper for newspapers has gone up and down from that day to this. Why, the duty on it under the Wilson bill was 15 per cent, as I recollect it, at this moment, and we made it equivalent to 16 per cent. We put on a specific duty, and we put it on aiming to keep it at the same point, except to make it a specific duty instead of an ad valorem duty. We tried to make all duties as specific as we could, so that when goods came in at the custom-house all the citizens of the United States would appear on an equality and the goods could be weighed and the duty computed, and there would be no question of undervaluation, and especially undervaluation of consigned goods.

I have a statement here of the prices of print paper, which I will have printed in the RECORD. It covers the date of January, April, July, and October for the years commencing 1890 down to 1907, excepting the two years of 1898 and 1899, when the figures were not obtainable. In 1890, in January, that class of paper cost 4.75 cents a pound up to 5.25 cents; in 1891, 3.25 cents a pound. I will give the minimum price in each case and not read the whole. In 1892 it was $3 per 100; in 1893, $3; in 1894, and 1895, $3; in 1896, $2.50; in 1897, $2.50; in 1900, $2.50; in 1901, $2.40; in 1902, $2.25; in 1903, $2.50; in 1904, $2.40; in 1905, $2.30; in 1906, $1.90; in 1907, $2.

How has that terrible tariff of three-tenths of a cent a pound on that paper injured anybody in the United States? Why, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] unwittingly the other day explained the situation. He said he had to pay a large price for paper in the United States, and the Government went after the paper trust and dissolved it, when the paper went down and stayed down and was bringing $2 per 100 during the last year. But lately they put up the price to $2.50 or $2.40 per 100. Did the tariff do that? If it did, why did it not operate all the time since 1890, when the McKinley bill had it on, and in 1894, when the Wilson bill had continued it at the same rate?

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are not going to take the duty off of wood pulp without an investigation. We are not going to take the duty off of print paper without an investigation.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman also put in the RECORD the source of that compilation?

Mr. PAYNE. It came from the Census Bureau. It is an official publication.

Mr. DALZELL. If the gentleman will allow me, the figures are furnished by the Census Bureau, but they were obtained by the Census Bureau from the paper journals of the country.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the way the Census Bureau gets figures of value all the time, namely, from the trade journals of the country, and, of course, they are as accurate as can be.

Here is the letter of the Director of the Census and the figures:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF THE CENSUS,
Washington, December 3, 1907.

Hon. JOHN DALZELL,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DALZELL: As per our agreement, I am inclosing a table which shows the actual prices of average news paper from 1890 to date. These figures up to 1896 are compiled from the lists published by the Paper Trade Journal for those years, and represent the prices at which dealers were selling news paper. Since 1896 the prices represent figures at which the mills were selling news paper, and have been obtained from the columns of the same publication.

The figures are said to run a trifle higher than the actual average sales, especially in view of the fact that the large contracts with daily newspapers, like the World or Journal, would probably average from one-fourth to one-half cent per pound less than those shown in this table. You can therefore rely upon the figures as accurate, and if there is any further service I can render you in connection with the matter I will be obliged if you will let me know.

Very truly, yours, S. N. D. NORTH, Director.

Now, Mr. Chairman, when we take up the tariff for revision, if I am a member of the committee, I propose, so far as I am concerned, to give all these interests a fair hearing, and if it is necessary for the protection of American labor to put this duty on and keep it there, I shall vote to do it. [Loud applause on the Republican side.] If it is not a necessary duty I shall vote just as cheerfully to put it on the free list [renewed applause]; but I do not propose to do it without intelligent action and accurate information. I could give you more information on this subject now, but I did not propose to discuss it. I was discussing the bill of the gentleman from Mississippi.

Well, I will skip over the white-paper business from this out, because he said he did not mean it. [Laughter.]

By the way, here comes a bill that was not introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi, and in the last Congress he repudiated the idea, but he does not seem to have squelched the bill. This was introduced by that eminent Democrat, Mr.

LAMAR of Florida, "to levy and collect an import duty on long-staple cotton imported into the United States from foreign countries" [laughter on the Republican side], "10 cents a pound on lint, and 6 cents a pound on seed."

I do not know which gentleman represents the Democratic party, whether it is the present leader, soon to go into the coordinate branch, or whether it is the gentleman from Florida, who I understand has his eyes on a seat in the coordinate branch; but the "harmony" of these brethren on this great question is something that we can congratulate ourselves upon. Why, you know they have a good many ways of looking at the tariff question. It is not long ago, I can remember one of them—he does not like to have that quoted on him now, and I am not going to speak about that—who said if he could have his way he would "throw down all the custom-houses in the United States from turret to foundation stone."

Of course my genial friend modified it afterwards, because the brethren told him it would not do to have such a doctrine as that come from such a prominent Democrat. They say he is to be the leader of the Democracy in the next House. I wonder what kind of a tariff bill he will introduce when he gets into that position. [Laughter.]

Then there was another Democratic cry that we heard a great deal of a few years ago, and I suppose we will hear more of it, and that was "tariff for revenue, with incidental protection." That was the shibboleth of the Democratic party. They fooled the people of many districts on that cry until the people got educated up to that point that it did not work any longer. Now they say that our expenditures are so great that in order to secure sufficient revenue we have got to have a high tariff and any tariff that we have to produce revenue will produce protection to American labor. So that there are these bills indicating the kind of protection that will be given the laboring man, cutting the duties down to 10 and 15 per cent.

Here is a bill "to reduce the duties on works of art imported into the United States from the present duty of 20 per cent to 5 per cent ad valorem." Some people in the United States thought that the duty on art was put there for protection to American artists. Nobody ever had that idea that knew anything about the tariff. They were simply looking around for revenue.

Why, in the the preparation of the McKinley bill I had the honor to make a motion in committee to put art on the free list, the same things that gentlemen now propose to put in at 5 per cent, and that carried through the committee and through the House and went over to the Senate; but that body thought we needed the revenue, and they put a duty of 20 per cent on art, and when the bill came down here the conferees, of whom I was not one, yielded to it, and the duty went back again at 20 per cent. Coming down to the Wilson bill, my friend from West Virginia [Mr. Wilson] came to me and said he understood I had studied up the subject of free art when we were making up the McKinley bill, and had reported it from the committee or had moved it in the committee. I told him "yes." Well, he wanted to know what I would do if they put it on the free list. I said, "I will sustain it. I was for it in the committee and will be for it now."

Well, he did put it on, and if my recollection is correct that is one of the things that survived out of that bill of "perfidy and dishonor" enacted by the Democratic party; and there it remained until we framed the Dingley bill. We were looking around for revenue, and we thought this would be a good place to get it. We put 20 per cent on, with a clause that by commercial arrangement it could be reduced to 15 per cent. It has been reduced to 15 per cent with most countries, including France, Italy, Germany, and Switzerland. Last year we collected $774,000 by this duty on art, simply as a revenue duty. Now, if I have anything to do with framing the next tariff bill, if the prospects for revenue are all right, I do not see any reason for keeping this duty on. Not that the people who buy these high-priced works of art are not able to pay it. Why, you people who want to make these men that have got so much money sweat a little, why do you hasten to put art on the free list? But for another reason, to encourage importation. True, now it can come in free for the purposes of exhibition in art galleries in the United States, for the purpose of educating the people. The portion of it that pays the duty goes into the private house and does not educate many people. Still if we do not need the duty, I should stand just where I stood in 1890, for free art. I would not put any thin, measly duty of 5 per cent, anyway. [Laughter.]

Mr. BONYNGE. Which neither protects nor produces revenue.

Mr. PAYNE. Now here is another bill, H. R. 101, introduced December 2, 1907:

A bill (H. R. 101) to secure to the Philippine Islands free trade with the balance of the domain of the United States.

Be it enacted etc., That from and after the date of the passage of this act all goods, wares, merchandise, or other articles, being the growth or product of any of the islands forming a part of the archipelago called the Philippines, or of the island of Guam, when shipped to any port of Hawaii, Porto Rico, or to any other port of the United States, shall enter any said port free of import duty.

I wish that was on the statute book. I reported a bill and it went through the House two years ago, which reduced the duty at once 25 per cent, and put it on the free list when under the Spanish treaty we could do it without harm to our people. I do not know where the bill is now. The last I heard of it, it had not been reported in the Senate.

Here is another bill on a different subject, but still I do not know but I ought to refer to it right here. It used to be good, old-fashioned Democratic doctrine in the early days, going back almost to my antediluvian colleague from New York, a doctrine incorporated first in the Democratic platform in 1840, and again in 1844, 1848, and 1852.

Resolved, That the proceeds of the public lands ought to be sacredly applied to the national objects specified in the Constitution, and that we are opposed to any law for the distribution of such proceeds among the States, as alike inexpedient in policy and repugnant to the Constitution.

I supposed that was Democratic doctrine; but here is a bill introduced by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the 2d of December to distribute the surplus in the Treasury of the United States to the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia for the sole purpose of improving the roads therein.

That is a fetcher. How that will get votes in the rural districts! Twenty-five million dollars a year to be distributed is a sum not to be sneezed at anywhere in the United States. I do not know whether my friend used that as an electioneering document down in Mississippi in the late canvass or not. I do not believe he did, because I think if he had he would have wiped out Governor Vardaman down there by a bigger majority than he did. I do not believe he used it there. Possibly he did not think of it and had not introduced it. What a great card that would have been—$25,000,000 a year to the States—and how they would revel in it!

My friend from Tennessee on our side of the House introduced a good-roads bill a few years ago, but it was a better bill than this, because it required the States to do something. The latter-day Democratic idea is that the Government must do everything and the States nothing. My genial friend from Texas [Mr. BURLESON] will have a little william in here of some kind, I know not what, for the benefit of the State of Texas before the session gets very old, or he will not follow his usual course in that respect; and then on some other day he will get up here and denounce paternalism in government, and talk about the United States encroaching on the rights of the States and taking up the business of the States and the private people. Well, I do not know which is true Democracy, the platform or the bill.

The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has another bill here appropriating $65,000,000, which the bill seems to indicate he guesses is the amount of the cotton tax imposed in the sixties, and returning the money to the States that paid the tax, according to the population.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is not my bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to do the gentleman justice. If I have the wrong bill scored up against the gentleman I shall be glad to withdraw it.

Mr. OLMSTED. He has enough to answer for already. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. There are other bills of the same kind. I will look this up, and if I do not find it, I will cut out all I have said about it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not want to mislead the gentleman. I have a bill for the repayment of that tax.

Mr. PAYNE. To be distributed to the States where it was paid, either according to the amount paid or by population—I think according to the amount paid.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is right.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I was right about the bill, but wrong about the distribution of it. It is on the ground that the tax has been declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court. It has been declared unconstitutional in this way: A case was brought in the court, and the lower court held it unconstitutional. It went into the Supreme Court and was argued, and the court stood four to four. Of course the court being tied, the decision was affirmed. There was not enough there to reverse it. That is the only way it has been declared unconstitutional. According to the learned address of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], I observe the distinction the gentleman tried to make between this and direct taxes and to show that they had held direct taxes were not constitutional.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Does the gentleman deny that in the income tax cases reported in the 158th United States, the Supreme Court of the United States did not declare emphatically that any tax levied upon land or upon crops produced from the land were direct and had to be levied by the rule of apportionment?

Mr. PAYNE. I am rather inclined to think it did. They also held that a tax on carriages was not a direct tax, but a tax on consumption.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman permit another question? Did not the Supreme Court in that case hold in the levy of taxes upon carriages that that was not a direct tax within the meaning of the Constitution, because it was a tax upon the consumption of an article?

Mr. PAYNE. I said all that in my clumsy way; perhaps not as learnedly as my friend from Florida. They did so hold, and that case was made an authority for the first decision in the United States Supreme Court that an income tax was constitutional, decided on that authority and, I think, the only case cited. You see how closely they came together; but since then the United States Supreme Court has declared an income tax unconstitutional. That same income tax is on the statute book now and has never been repealed, but left where the court left it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not like to trespass on the committee, but I have not quite finished.

Mr. HINSHAW. I will yield ten minutes additional time to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi has introduced two bills here on the subject of hides and leather and so forth. I am surprised to find that they are introduced on the same day. The first one is H. R. 102, which says that from and after the date of the passage of this act there shall not be levied, collected, or paid upon hides imported into the United States any duty; that there shall not be levied, collected, or paid upon sole leather any duty; that there shall be levied upon upper leathers imported into the United States a duty of 7½ per cent ad valorem, and upon boots and shoes imported into the United States a duty of 10 per cent ad valorem and 5 cents a pair; that existing duties upon other articles or commodities in the leather schedule in the present law are hereby reduced 70 per cent.

What are the other articles? Harnesses and gloves. Gloves are made by hand, a slow and intricate process of manufacture, requiring much skill, almost all labor, and he reduces the duty 70 per cent, which means an average ad valorem duty of 10 to 15 per cent on gloves. It would stop every glove factory in the United States. I think the gentleman must have known that, because on the same day he introduced another bill, in which he goes through our glove schedule and reduces the duty on leather and on gloves.

Clause 440, women's and children's glace-finished, of sheep origin, not over 14 inches in length, he reduces to $1 a pair. It was $1.75 in the Dingley law. Over 14 inches and not over 17 inches, $1.50. It was $2.25. Over 17 inches $1.75, a reduction from $2.75, and so on through the list. Here are two bills, put into the hopper the same minute, one putting an equivalent ad valorem on gloves of from 10 to 15 per cent, reducing the duty 70 per cent, and by the same hand puts in another bill at the same time reducing the rates 40 per cent. Oh, consistency, thou art a jewel! He got a new idea on the tariff, different from any other Democratic idea that was ever heard of. I asked my friend Mr. Wilson after he reported his bill if it was true that they put the name of the article in one hat and certain prices in the other and drew them out one at a time and fitted them together and fixed their duty in that way. He said he had heard rumors to that effect. I told him I thought it must be true, for I did not see how they could get the result in any other way. And here is the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] doing the same thing with the same hand and putting the bills into the same hopper the same instant of time.

I do not know but I have gone through with those bills. The gentleman had a little dispute here the other day with the gentleman from Iowa, Colonel HEPBURN, as to the origin of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Mr. HEPBURN said it originated with Senator CULLOM, and somebody on the other side got up and said that Senator CULLOM had a habit of stealing other men's thunder. Well, an inspection of the bills since shows that the gentleman from Iowa was right, word for word, from beginning to end, and that no Reagan bill was ever introduced or reported by him that had any idea of an Interstate Commerce Commission in it, but simply relegated the parties to the courts and told them how they could get their evidence to try their case. That is all. Yet the gentleman from New York comes in here and claims that all the good legislation that had ever been passed by the Republicans in Congress came from the Democrats, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] claimed for Mr. Reagan Senator CULLOM's bill in reference to an Interstate Commerce Commission. Now, the gentleman from Mississippi proudly asserted to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] the other day that a corporation could not commit a crime. A good many of the States think it can and have legislated in that direction and have actually convicted corporations of crime and have sentenced them to the payment of a fine.

The gentleman from Mississippi introduced a bill, No. 403, to prohibit certain corporations from contributing money to influence the result of elections or to influence their legislation, and it provides "that no national bank or any corporation or joint stock company chartered by the United States Government, or any railroad or other corporation or joint stock company exclusively or partially engaged in carrying on interstate commerce shall contribute or promise any money, bonds, transportation, or other thing of value to any committee or any member of any committee of any political party," etc. That is the first section. Section 2 provides "that any violation of the above section of this act shall constitute a misdemeanor, and shall subject the violator thereof on conviction to the payment of a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $10,000, and a further fine additional thereto of not less in amount of double the value of the money or other thing of value found to have been contributed or promised as aforesaid." Another bill of the same kind was introduced by him where the action of a corporation is denounced as a misdemeanor. The gentleman does not seem to know what kind of a bill he puts into the hopper, and still he brings them out here as a platform for the great Democratic party next November.

Well, that is the kind of thing they have been doing, putting everything into their platform; have been doing it for years—sticking to nothing. And if anybody ever put one of the ideas that they had borrowed from somebody else into law, then they claim the credit for it. They are constant claimants and constant in their opposition—standing out as a party of negation; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] proposes to reverse that order of things and he comes in here with this conglomeration of principles written out in bills for his party to adopt.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken much longer than I intended to speak. I have much more that I thought I would say, before I commenced, but I will not take the time or trespass on the committee any further. The Republican party will be at the polls next November with a platform that means something. They will declare themselves on the tariff question in no uncertain sound. I do not mind saying to-day that it seems to me that they will declare for a revision of the tariff [applause on the Republican side], and that the strongest reason impelling them to that declaration will be the fact that we need a maximum and minimum tariff, for the purpose of negotiating proper trade agreements with the nations of the earth. [Renewed applause on the Republican side.]

But if we have a maximum and a minimum tariff, and the Republican party passes it, that minimum will be a protective tariff to every American industry and to every American laborer in the United States. [Applause on the Republican side.] The maximum will be higher, and in doing this we can be successfully accused of purloining some of the idea from Germany and France and Russia, each of which countries has the same kind of a maximum and minimum tariff.

Mr. Chairman, under the Dingley bill we have had twelve years of unexampled prosperity. It is true that disaster overtook us in the latter part of the summer. It is true that men lost their heads and rushed to the banks to draw out their deposits. It is true that some banks hoarded the money that was in their vaults. It is true the rich and poor erred in this respect. Now, money is abundant. The Treasury did not have to go out in the market and sell their bonds at 15 per cent below the market price in order to get gold to put into the Treasury and to answer the demands on the Treasury. The Cleveland Administration sold $162,000,000 of bonds.

The bonds we put out last autumn were put out for the purpose of giving the people more currency. We did not have to do it. We had a surplus of considerably over $200,000,000 in the Treasury at the time, and the soundness of the Treasury and the fact that people all over the land had been at work for years, and the farmers were never so prosperous all over the United States, is now an augury that the panic can not last and survive these healthy conditions in the body politic. If new complications arise, it may perhaps delay the coming and revival of the good times we had before the panic came, but the people of the United States will see that it was not because of an empty Treasury, it was not because of the loss of faith by the people in any part of the currency issued by the Government of the United States, it was not because of lack of faith in Republican administration, or in the justice and wisdom of the laws enacted by the Republican party that we had this last unfortunate panic. I am willing to postpone until November the question of who shall be President of the United States, and I expect the usual result in that case. [Loud and continued applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, one of the imperative duties confronting Congress at the present session is to provide an emergency currency, so that such conditions as brought about the panic of 1907 will no longer exist, and so that the cornering of the currency supply of the country will hereafter be impossible. Personally I do not believe in any makeshift legislation by which national banks may be permitted on miscellaneous securities to issue an increased amount of national-bank notes. An emergency currency should be instantly available and under the direct control of the Treasury Department; it should be in an amount so large that no combination of speculators and stock gamblers could prevent its free circulation among the people, and it should be so distributed over the whole country as to meet the necessities of business in every nook and corner of the land.

Instead of the Government issuing bonds for money which it does not need in order to furnish security for bank notes, the notes should be issued directly by the Government as United States Treasury notes, and in an emergency, or whenever there is a scarcity of currency to transact the ordinary business of the country, loaned by the Government to the banks, which should be required to pay interest thereon, in the first instance at a low rate to encourage its circulation, and at a progressively higher rate until it becomes very high, to compel its repayment into the Treasury as soon as the emergency has passed. The people of this country have the utmost faith in the credit of the United States Government. Its Treasury notes, based upon gold, redeemable upon demand, would be preferred by the people to the gold itself, and would seldom or never be presented for redemption. A reasonable reserve of gold would be sufficient to always keep them at par with gold.

Horace Greeley said: "The way to resume is to resume," and he was right. Experience showed that all that was necessary was to so declare. So the way to provide an emergency currency, and absolutely prevent money panics and the cornering of the money market, is to provide a Government currency, guaranteed by the Government, redeemable in lawful money at any time on demand, and in quantity sufficient to meet all the legitimate business demands of the country.

A few months ago, in the high noon of prosperity which all our people were enjoying in a degree never before known in this or any other country in the world, we were almost without warning plunged into a money panic without parallel in the history of the country, in which many banks were forced to close their doors, factories closed or greatly curtailed their production, business enterprises of all kinds were halted, thousands and hundreds of thousands of men found themselves all at once without employment, and are yet idle in consequence. What was the cause?

It answers no good purpose to say that any man or any set of men were responsible. I do not for one moment believe that the Chief Executive of this nation, in whom the people of this country trust and believe as never before in any leader, was in any sense whatever responsible for the calamity that came upon us. If teaching the doctrine that "honesty is the best policy," in business, in politics, in all the affairs of the nation; if strict and impartial enforcement of the law against corporations as well as individuals—against the rich as well as the poor, the high as well as the low—causes panic, then it is time that panic should come. This is a government of law, and strict and impartial obedience to the law by all, without distinction as to wealth or position, is necessary to the perpetuity of our free institutions.

By the overwhelming majority of our people such obedience is cheerfully and willingly given; and where it is not it is the plain duty of the Executive to see that it is enforced. Thank God there is in the White House a man strong enough, and brave enough, and steadfast enough to insist that the laws shall be enforced and that honesty and decency and fair play shall be known and recognized of all men as the watchwords of the Republic—Theodore Roosevelt is President of the United States; he is the President, as well, of all its people. His policies are being written into the law of the land, and whoever may come after him will, by very force of public opinion, if for no other reason, be compelled to continue such policies to full fruition.

This is a progressive nation. It will not stand still; it can not go backward. The people all over this land know and recognize the fact that the present Chief Executive of this nation is setting a new and advanced standard of public and private honesty in all the affairs of this people and blazing a path for the future honor and greatness of the nation that willing and earnest millions will gladly follow in the years to come.

> On behalf of all our people, on behalf no less of the honest man of means than of the honest man who earns each day's livelihood by that day's sweat of his brow, it is necessary to insist upon honesty in business and politics alike, in all walks of life, in big things and in little things; upon just and fair dealing as between man and man.

These words will live and will constitute a guiding star for the future conduct of the men who may control the destinies of the nation. Lived up to, our future will be secure, our achievements greater than ever in the past, and the enduring prosperity of the nation assured.

However brought about, our recent financial difficulties resulted directly from a lack of circulating medium to carry on the business of the country. It should be easy to provide against such a contingency in the future. An authorized issue of Treasury notes to be issued only in emergency, in my opinion, will accomplish the desired result.

I have introduced a bill (H. R. 15836) to provide for an emergency currency, which, in my opinion, would accomplish the desired purpose. It might never be necessary to issue the notes at all. The mere fact that they were instantly available would discourage all attempts to corner the currency of the country, or to conspire to have it hoarded in banks and safety deposit boxes. Its passage would open up the factories of the country, and prosperity would at once return to permanently abide with us. I ask leave to attach a copy of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15836) to provide for an emergency currency.

Be it enacted, etc., That to provide an emergency currency the Comptroller of the Currency shall, under the direction of the Secretary of the Treasury, cause plates and dies to be engraved in the best manner to guard against counterfeiting, and similar to those from which are printed the present paper currency now in use, and shall have printed therefrom one thousand million dollars of United States Treasury notes, which shall be redeemable in lawful money on presentation at the Treasury of the United States, and shall be a legal tender for all debts, dues, and demands, public or private, and so expressed on their face; and which shall be of the denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, $500, $1,000, and $10,000, as may be determined by the Secretary of the Treasury.

SEC. 2. That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, an emergency exists, or there shall be a reasonable necessity for a further issue of currency, such United States Treasury notes may be loaned to national banks, State banks, or trust companies, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury on due examination as safe and solvent, in an amount in no case exceeding 50 per cent of the full paid capital stock of any such bank or trust company, and on such security as the Secretary of the Treasury may approve, or on the certificate of deposit of the bank or trust company to which the loan is made, which certificate of deposit shall in every case be indorsed by each of the directors of said bank or trust company. In every case such loans shall be payable on demand after thirty days' notice, and shall draw interest payable to the United States as follows: For the first three months, or any part thereof, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum; for the next three months, or any part thereof, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum; for the next three months, or any part thereof, at the rate of 9 per cent per annum; and for whatever time thereafter such loan shall remain unpaid at the rate of 12 per cent per annum, and if not paid within one year from the date the loan is made any such bank or trust company shall, on motion of the United States district attorney of the district in which such bank or trust company is located, be placed in the hands of a receiver and its affairs wound up in such court; and all district courts of the United States shall have full and complete jurisdiction for such purpose.

SEC. 3. That the amount of such United States Treasury notes, including the amount in the Treasury and the amount loaned under this act, or otherwise in circulation, shall be kept at, approximately, one thousand million dollars.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I occupied so much time of the committee on yesterday that I shall not abuse its patience to make any reply now to the gentleman from New York, but I desire to ask leave to insert in the RECORD an article from the Indianapolis News of January 6, headed "Paper combine a genuine menace. It is depending on Congress to keep the tariff wall intact," as a reply in part, at least, to something which he said.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The article is as follows:

PAPER COMBINE A GENUINE MENACE—IT IS DEPENDING ON CONGRESS TO KEEP THE TARIFF WALL INTACT—IT MEANS HIGHER PRICES—PUBLISHERS' STATEMENT SHOWS THAT GREAT INTERESTS ARE THREATENED—ROOSEVELT'S ATTITUDE A SURPRISE.

THE INDIANAPOLIS NEWS BUREAU,
44 WYATT BUILDING,
Washington, January 6.

There is small prospect of Congress taking the duty off ground wood pulp or print paper at this session. The Republican leaders have made up their minds to stand by the existing duty on these articles, in spite of the fact that the publishers of the country are practically a unit in asking that the duty be repealed. In taking this position the leaders reflect the attitude of the entire Administration, which is that the tariff must not be touched. Some two months ago, when a committee representing the American Newspaper Publishers' Association called on the President to ask his assistance in getting the duty on wood pulp and on print paper repealed, they found him apparently in sympathy with the movement, but still unwilling to associate any request for the removal of the duty with the tariff question. It was his idea that it would be better to base the request on a plea for the preservation of the forests of the United States. He followed that policy in making a recommendation to the effect that—

There should be no tariff on any forest product grown in this country, and, especially, there should be no duty on wood pulp; due notice of the change being, of course, given to those engaged in the business, so as to enable them to adjust themselves to the new conditions. The repeal of the duty on wood pulp should, if possible, be accompanied by an agreement with Canada that there shall be no export duty on Canadian wood pulp.

PUBLISHERS ARE DISAPPOINTED.

In view of the attitude the Canadians have taken, the publishers are greatly disappointed over the form of the President's recommendation. They can see how much better it had been if the President had come out squarely and asked for the repeal of the duty as a simple tariff measure. Here was a trust which put prices up beyond all reason, and yet the Administration was afraid, apparently, to come out in a flat-footed way and insist on the removal of the tariff under which the trust is enabled to thrive at the expense of the publishers of the country. The Canadians saw the point in the President's message. The result is that the Canadians are now taking steps to force the manufacturers of paper to come to the Dominion. One suggestion made by the Canadians is that pulp-wood exportation be prohibited; another is that a heavy duty be laid on pulp wood. In the event of either plan being adopted, the pulp wood of Canada would be made into paper on Canadian ground. Thus the Canadians would get the benefit of the labor now employed in the mills in the United States that consume pulp wood shipped from the Canadian forests.

The pulp and paper manufacturers of Canada have recently conferred with the prime minister and the ministers of finance and customs at Ottawa. They asked for an export duty sufficient to bring about the desired object or that the exportation of pulp wood be entirely prohibited by the Dominion government, as is now done by the Ontario provincial government. The claim is made that the American companies now operating extensively there for American consumption leave only a small amount for labor and freight charges and entirely denude and almost devastate the territory.

CAN ACCOMPLISH NOTHING.

Under the circumstances the members of the committee representing the American Publishers' Association, nearly all of whom are warm friends of the President, feel that the form of his recommendation has made it impossible to accomplish anything at this session of Congress unless the individual publishers by pressure, through a general agitation of the subject through the columns of their papers on broader lines than proposed by the President, might force action by the House and Senate; but it is hardly probable that any amount of pressure will change the attitude of the "stand-pat" leaders, who are insistent that there shall be no break made in the tariff wall.

Speaker CANNON will not consent that a bill for a straight repeal of the duty on ground wood pulp and on print paper shall come out of his Committee on Ways and Means; and all the stand-patters hold up their hands in holy horror at the thought of "precipitating a tariff debate in the Senate" by the handing to that body of such legislation by the House. If there is any hope at all, it is along the line of legislation removing the duty on print paper only.

According to the census of manufacturers for 1905 the printing and publishing business ranked seventh among the industries of the country. It would seem that such an industry might get a hearing before Congress on a question of vital importance to everybody engaged in the business. The printing and publishing interests represent an annual product of one-half billion dollars. The newspapers and periodicals alone have a capital of $239,000,000 invested, of which nearly $100,000,000 represents machinery, tools, and instruments. They paid in 1905 salaries and wages amounting to $106,000,000 to 160,000 workers.

PAID FOR WHITE PAPER.

They paid that year $58,000,000 for white paper (and the price on paper has advanced rapidly since that census was taken). The International Paper Company is capitalized at $40,000,000. The allied printing trades are cooperating with publishers in the effort to have Congress remove the duty on wood pulp and on print paper, but the combined influence of the publishers and the allied trades is, apparently, not great enough to move the stand-patters.

The committee from the American Newspaper Publishers' Association, which called on the President in November, explained to him the situation in great detail. It was shown in the statement that though the American mills are selling abroad at low prices in competition with Canada, Norway, Great Britain, and Germany, the price at home is so high that Canadian mills can and do pay the duty of $6 a ton and make a profit in the American market.

In that same statement that committee representing the publishers said:

"The newspapers insist that the paper manufacturers who induced Congress to protect them against competition from abroad are under obligations to provide for the present and prospective demands of consumers in this country. To repress manufacturers, or to starve the market so that the paper maker is in a position to create a famine and to stop the supply to any publisher should rank as a crime. Many newspaper proprietors are unable to obtain any quotations for paper next year, and do not know where to obtain a supply. In all the history of crimes charged against combinations and trusts, such a situation is unprecedented. It demands immediate remedy.

"FRIENDLY UNDERSTANDING.

"Newspaper publishers must take alarm when they find the paper production of the country united in a friendly understanding, especially so when they are told that they must pay an increased price for at least two years, as it will take that time to start new mills; and also because they are told that no readjustment of the tariff is possible until 1909.

"Meanwhile the paper manufacturers are buying up vast timber tracts. In one of the four land offices of the Province of Quebec the International Paper Company has registered timber limits for 2,597 square miles. The Berlin mills have limits for 2,462 square miles. Consular reports show that a large proportion of timber lands in Quebec is held by American paper mills. The largest American paper-making concerns have acquired some of the finest forests and waterfalls in Canada, where paper can be made for $20 a ton, and they have been preparing for the alternative either to build other plants, as soon as they see the time is ripe, or to stop others from engaging in a competition which would be highly profitable at present prices.

"At the time of consolidation the International Paper Company acquired ownership of 1,600 square miles of timber tracts in the United States. The newspapers are bearing the burden of this gigantic speculation in woodlands, because they are taxed to pay the interest-carrying charges on these purchases of timber that can not be marketed for twenty or more years. They are taxed to carry the load of over-capitalization that was saddled upon the International Paper Company, a capitalization of $43,000 for each ton of daily output; a capitalization that is $35,000,000 in excess of the accepted basis of investment in the paper trade for mills of modern construction.

"ENTITLED TO CONSIDERATION.

"It is difficult to recall another industry which has gone to such extremes in watering securities. The International Paper Company, with a book capitalization of $40,000,000 has a gross income of $21,000,000. It requires more than three years to turn over its capital. Publishers maintain that if consideration be given to the inflated securities of the combined paper mills, then consideration should also be given to the immense capital invested in newspapers and periodicals. If the Government should assume that the labor employed in the paper mills ought to be protected, then it is urged that the labor employed by publishers should also be protected.

"Every consideration of forest preservation and of enlightened self-interest impels the Government to keep the country's future wants in view, and to change that policy which puts a premium upon the destruction of great national treasures. The United States as a whole is consuming more than three times as much wood as the forests are growing. The destruction of the woodlands is progressing at the rate of 50,000 square miles per annum, or one-twentieth of the entire timber area of the United States. If nature were allowed to rehabilitate the earth in the wake of the lumberman, the reforestation of the country would not be alarming; but the pulp wood industry takes practically the last standing tree. Mr. Gifford Pinchot wrote in 1898, 'Cutting for pulp does more harm than cutting for timber, because it takes a vastly greater number of trees'—that is, trees of smaller size.

"MATERIAL INTERESTS THREATENED.

"The demand for pulp wood is beyond the ability of the country to furnish. An area as large as the State of Rhode Island is stripped of its spruce every year to supply the mills that make wood pulp. In the year 1906, 3,000,000 cords of domestic pulp wood were consumed in addition to 738,872 cords of Canadian pulp wood. Every material interest is threatened.

"Rivers have been dried at the source, so that sawmills dependent on waterpower have been driven out of business, and other manufacturing interests have suffered. Farms have been given up in regions thus deprived of moisture because there was no longer enough water for stock or for home use, and disastrous floods in springtime are followed by droughts in summer.

"The wholesale destruction of forests threatens the country with the calamities experienced from the same causes in Europe and Asia. Our lumbering methods, if continued, will entail baleful scenic, climatic, and economic results, injuring health, property, and occupations of all citizens, and impairing industrial development by making intermittent the flow of the rivers, which are most important to agriculture and manufacture.

"UNANIMOUS ON ONE POINT.

"The members of the American Newspaper Publishers' Association have differing views upon the question of the tariff; but they have a substantially unanimous sentiment upon the point that when the privileges and protection afforded by the tariff are abused by its beneficiaries to create a paper famine, and to menace the seventh largest manufacturing interest of the country by oppressive combinations in restraint of trade, they feel justified in asking that you invite the attention of Congress to these facts and to recommend such legislation as will prevent the possibility of a paper famine and the ruin of many publishers. They plead urgency. Three years of construction work may be necessary to bring the paper-making industry to a growth commensurate with demand.

"Apart from consideration of questions that relate to oppressive combination and to forest conservation, there is a larger view of the situation which should appeal to the responsible heads of government. Within the last twenty years this nation has turned from books to periodicals. It has fallen to the bottom of the list of nations in the number of books published, a million population. But it publishes 60 per cent of all the periodicals on the globe. The printing business represents an annual product of half a billion dollars and ranks seventh in the manufacturing industries. It has a larger number of establishments than any other industry. It stands for the intellectual growth of the country. It increases the facility for communication."

HELPFUL TO GOVERNMENT.

It is especially helpful to good government in that it promotes intelligence, uplifts the individual, and raises the standard of citizenship. If the combination of paper makers can succeed in its aims it will stop cheap books and cheap newspapers. It will tax intelligence, because the newspapers and magazines are the people's school and their library.

All taxes upon paper are taxes upon reading, upon knowledge, upon the dissemination of information. Under any government such a tax would be oppressive and proscriptive. In a government based, as ours is, upon the intelligence and resultant virtue of the people, it is anomalous and monstrous. To make newspapers artificially dear is wantonly to restrict the number of readers, and so increase the sum of ignorance. When this is done or proposed simply to add to the profits of a monopoly the injury to public interests becomes a matter demanding the intervention of the Government.

The whole subject is one that is bound to interest the country more and more as time passes. If, as now seems certain, the publishers are to get no relief at this session of Congress, they will, of course, rely on the legislative body to repeal the tariff on ground wood pulp and print paper when the tariff is revised immediately after the next Presidential election, if it is revised at that time.

Existing conditions must be remedied.

To-day the United States Forest Bureau made public a bulletin showing the enormous consumption of print paper in this country and the consequent demand on the rapidly disappearing forests of the United States. The bulletin says that the Forest Service has investigated and has confirmed the statement made by the publishers that an area as large as the State of Rhode Island is devastated every year by the paper manufacturers.

ONE SOLUTION SUGGESTED.

One solution suggested by the Forest Service of the Government is that there be adopted by the Government a system of forest management which will put a stop to the present wasteful methods in working up the product, and that a study be made of the utilization of wood other than spruce in the manufacture of pulp. Of course these might help, but the general view of publishers is that the real remedy lies in free pulp and free paper from Canada, Sweden and Norway, and other countries. With free trade in these articles the forests of the United States would be protected and the great stores of timber in those countries would be utilized.

The publishers have been expecting some relief through the Department of Justice which has been studying the paper combine with a view of prosecuting it for violating the injunction issues against the General Paper Company in May, 1906, by the Federal court in Minnesota, but so far the Department has not made any forward move. By order of court the General Paper Company was disbanded. The allegation is that the order of the court has been disobeyed. At this time the Department is unable to say what will be done in the case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield forty minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I avail myself of this opportunity to express my views upon some of the current and vital political questions of the times. Besides the great issues before the American people of the control and suppression of trusts and monopolies and the regulation of railroad rates through the powers conferred upon Congress under the commerce clause of the Constitution, the campaign of 1908 will witness the discussion of two other important questions of local self-government—States rights and tariff revision. When the fathers of the Republic framed the Constitution of the United States in 1787, in that great convention of great minds which met in Philadelphia, where also was framed and promulgated the greatest charter of human rights and liberties in all the history of mankind, the Declaration of Independence, they gave to us the most perfect instrument for our fundamental government ever conceived and written. Of it Gladstone said:

As the British constitution is the most subtle organism which has proceeded from progressive history, so the American Constitution is the most wonderful work ever struck off in a given time by the brain and purpose of man.

At the University of North Carolina in a great plea for the Union just prior to the civil war, Judge Gaston said:

With all its pretended defects, all its alleged violations, the Constitution has conferred more benefit on man than ever yet flowed from any human institution.

Nathaniel Macon thought one hundred years ago and so said in a letter to a friend that the Constitution was dead. Without doubt, it has its defects, but it still survives the shock of many political battles and of contending forces and war and all the vicissitudes of one hundred and twenty years.

The Confederation of States, imperfect through jealousy of central power, took the place of the mere advisory power of Congress, but it was a rope of sand.

A more perfect Union—

was made necessary by the need of power in the new Republic to regulate its foreign commerce, colonize its large domain, provide an adequate revenue, and establish justice in domestic trade by prohibiting the separate States from impairing the obligation of contracts.

Each cause was of vital importance, but the need of regulating commercial intercourse was paramount and urgent, and so gradually, but surely, there crystallized public sentiment for a constitutional convention.

The influence of Washington was a potent factor in calling the convention and ratifying the Constitution. The members of that convention were of trained intellect and lovers of liberty. Their purpose was to form a central government of the united colonies and to protect the people from the government, retaining in the people's hands every right not granted the general government. When they finished their work Franklin, looking toward the sun blazoned on the president's chair, said of it:

I was not able to tell whether it was a rising or setting sun. Now I know it is a rising sun.

Monroe wrote Jefferson that Washington's great influence had established the Union. Every paragraph of the Constitution as adopted was revised; and the wisdom of its framers sought enlightenment from the greatest minds of the world, the past experience of all ages, from the English constitution, including Magna Charta, the Petition of Right, and Bill of Rights, and all that was best in the English Government.

Jealous of monarchy, of centralized power, of any encroachment upon the rights of citizens and States, the Constitution became a grant of enumerated powers. Since its adoption the parties of the country have divided upon its strict or liberal construction.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] spoke of the great work of Hamilton in the organization of the Government. If Hamilton's theory of government had prevailed we would have had, contrary to the Jeffersonian idea, a form of government modeled after the British Government—a limited monarchy. That was Hamilton's idea.

Democrats believe in a government by the people, under the American system—under the Constitution of the United States framed by the fathers of the Republic. None have ever dared, until recently, to affirm that this Constitution could be extended in scope and meaning by judicial construction beyond its plain meaning and intent, or that the General Government could exercise powers not granted in that instrument. To emphasize this the tenth amendment declared:

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States, respectively, or to the people.

In this latter day, however, we find the President and his Secretary of State, Mr. Root, declaring and promulgating strange doctrines, new and dangerous and foreign to all the ideas of the founders of the Republic.

In a speech delivered by Secretary Root at the dinner of the Pennsylvania Society, in New York, December 12, 1906, upon the subject "How to preserve the local self-government of the States," Mr. Root, Secretary of State, discussing the drift of the times in the direction of the stronger centralized government and the future of the States of the Union under our dual system of constitutional government, and speaking of the growth and expansion of the Government and its commerce, insists that the conditions under which the clauses of the Constitution distributing powers to the national and State governments are now and henceforth to be applied, are widely different from the conditions which were or could have been within the contemplation of the framers of the Constitution and from those which obtained during the early years of the Republic.

The growth of a national sentiment, free trade among the States, and the development of facilities for travel and communication, he says have caused the old lines between the States and old barriers which kept the States as separate communities to be completely lost from sight.

He declares that the National Government is taking up the performance of duties which, under the changed conditions, the separate States are no longer capable of adequately performing, and insists that the States must so frame their laws and exercise their powers as to be in harmony with national sentiment, and if they fail to do so, they must surrender their powers to the National Government or sooner or later "constructions of the Constitution will be found to vest the power where it will be exercised, namely, in the National Government."

In other words, that the powers of the General Government must be and will be enlarged by judicial construction. If the States fail to exercise their powers and measure up to their responsibility and the demands of the people, the National Government will sooner or later exercise and assume larger powers, whether those powers be within the specific grant of the Constitution or not. In other words, the Constitution must and will be stretched and extended by judicial construction to meet the varied and changed conditions and emergencies in our national life and growth, without amendment by the people in a constitutional way. To my mind this doctrine is prolific of the greatest evil. It is a Pandora's box of ills. It means wresting from the people and the States and lodging in the hands of the courts powers not granted or contemplated by the founders of the Republic. [Applause.]

of North Carolina, in his able address upon "Defects in the Constitution of the United States," delivered April, 1906, before the law department of the University of Pennsylvania, says:

"The glaring defect in the Constitution was that it was not democratic. It gave to the people to be governed the selection of only one-sixth of the Government, to wit, one half of the legislative department; the other half, the Senate was made elective at second hand by the State legislatures, and the Senators were not only given longer terms but greater power, for all Presidential appointments and treaties were subject to the advice and consent of the Senate."

The President was intended to be elected at a still further remove from the people by being chosen by electors, who it was expected would be selected by State legislatures. The President thus was to be selected at third hand, as it were; in fact, down until the memorable contest between Adams, Clay, Crawford, and Jackson, in 1824, in the majority of the States the Presidential electors were chosen by the State legislatures, and they were so chosen by South Carolina until after the civil war, and in fact by Colorado in 1876. The judiciary were placed a step still further removed from the popular choice. The judges were selected at fourth hand by the President, intended to be selected at third hand, and subject to confirmation by the Senate chosen at second hand, and, to make the judiciary absolutely independent of any consideration of the consent of the governed, they are appointed for life. But the people's part in the Government, in the choice of the House of Representatives, even when reinforced by the Executive whose election they have captured, is an absolute nullity with the Senate and judiciary against them. Therefore, is the Government of the United States, he contends, a Government by the Senate and judges. That is to say, frankly, by whatever power can control the selection of Senators and judges.

Now, stretch the Constitution, not by amendment proposed by Congress and ratified by three-fourths of the States or adopted by a constitutional convention, but by judicial construction, and you have the most dangerous drift toward centralization yet manifested in our Government. With Federal courts and a Senate under the control of the Executive, or influenced by him, you have a government at the will of the executive. I care not whether you call him president or dictator or king or emperor. Forms do not make free government. Your three branches of the Government—executive, legislative, and judicial—may exist, but unless they be preserved equal and coordinate and the distinction between the Federal and State governments respected and observed, the real governing power is not with the people. In Rome republican government gradually yielded to the empire, and yet the forms of the republic still existed, a mockery and a delusion. Centuries after Rome became an empire and knew no master save an emperor chosen by the army there were still tribunes of the people and consuls and a senate and the title of a republic, as in the days of the great captain who thrice at the feast of Lupercal declined a kingly crown. Luxury, wealth, military glory, and encroachment of the executive had deprived the Roman people of any real share in the government until they were ready to cry out only for bread and games. Long after Napoleon had been crowned Emperor and the hero of Marengo and Austerlitz had become the supreme power in France the French coins and documents still bore the inscription of the French Republic.

No judicial construction or Executive orders should in our Government be permitted to stretch the laws on our treaties or our Constitution beyond constitutional limitations. Local self-government in its original intent and purpose and the preservation inviolate of every right not granted the General Government by the States and people is the very salvation and foundation stone of our free Government.

I would not have an absolutely inelastic Constitution. I know something of the history of my country. As a mere lad I read the speeches of Hayne and Webster, Clay and Calhoun, and the history of our Constitution. I know that the Constitution has been repeatedly interpreted and construed by the courts and must be so construed to the end of time. I know that Marshall laid broad and deep the sure foundations of the Republic by his luminious construction of the new Constitution, and his decisions have strengthened that document and stood the test of time.

I have read the decision of our Supreme Court, Chisholm v. Georgia, and the dissenting opinion of Judge Iredell, which led to the adoption of the eleventh amendment, prohibiting suits by a citizen against a State; the case of Dartmouth College, argued by Daniel Webster, which firmly fixed the doctrine that a State's contract can not be violated or impaired by the State; the great case of Gibbons v. Ogden, in regard to plenary power of Congress over interstate commerce. These cases have strengthened our form of Government and carried into effect the intent of those who framed the Constitution. But I also know the construction of that same instrument in the Dred Scott case was one of the causes which led to the mightiest and most bloody war between the North and South ever waged in all the tide of time. I also know that the decision of the Supreme Court in the greenback cases, holding issues of paper money to be within the power of Congress to "coin money," has led to endless financial and commercial warfare.

I also know that a construction of the income-tax law by the changing opinion of one judge meant the levying of a heavier tax upon labor and men of moderate means and the release from taxation of millions of hoarded wealth.

I also am aware that the Insular cases have meant the indorsement and approval of a new governmental policy in the Philippines and our island possessions contrary to all the past theory, practice, and policy of our Government and the inauguration of a system of colonization. I do not mean to suggest that any of these decisions are not in conformity with the Constitution of the United States, but I mention them to show the great scope of power of the Federal Supreme Court and the great danger at all times of strained judicial construction of the Constitution, especially in the enlargement of the powers of the National Government, and therefore, the danger of Mr. Root's doctrine.

I speak respectfully of the Supreme Court. No one has a higher opinion of its integrity, character, and personnel, from John Marshall to the present Chief Justice. I know of no man whose mind is clearer as to the distinction between the powers and rights of the Federal and State governments, and the Federal and State courts than Chief Justice Fuller. There are other judges whose views of the Constitution and the distinction between the powers and rights of the Federal and State governments, and Federal and State courts, are well defined.

That great justice of the Supreme Court, John Marshall Harlan, in a notable address in New York, at a dinner given him by the Kentucky Association, said:

> A national government for national affairs, and State government for State affairs, is the foundation rock upon which our institutions rest.
> Any serious departure from that principle would bring disaster to the American people and upon the American system of free government.
> The American people are more determined than at any time in their history to maintain both national and State rights as those rights exist under the Union ordained by the Constitution.
> Keeping within the scope and broad lines of the Constitution, we may walk safely and without fear.

These eminent judges, and judges like these, can be safely trusted to keep the balance true between the powers of the National and State governments. I do not question the integrity of any Executive who appoints the judges, or any court in the decision of constitutional questions, but human nature can find reasons for carrying out its purposes. Given an Executive who would determine to mold a policy of government—a Supreme Court has been sometimes found favorable to that policy.

The Electoral Commission decided the greatest question since the civil war, the title to the Presidency, by a strict party vote. Every departure from local self-government, every barrier of the Constitution broken down, tends to government by Executive order and by judicial construction. Mr. Root in his speech lays much stress upon the drift toward centralization by reason of the enactment by Congress of the pure-food, meat-inspection, and quarantine laws.

These measures, and measures like these, enacted under the commerce clause of the Constitution, tend to an enlargement of the scope of power of the National Government, but they are not an encroachment upon the rights of the separate States. The use of all powers granted to the General Government—and there are many powers necessarily implied, though not enumerated—is a doctrine handed down by Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson's idea was to use every power granted to the General Government by the Constitution, but to usurp none belonging to the States:

In his first inaugural address President Jefferson said:

> I deem the essential principles of our Government * * * the support of the State governments in all their rights, as the most competent administrations for our domestic concerns and the surest bulwarks against antirepublican tendencies; the preservation of the General Government in its whole constitutional vigor as the sheet anchor of our peace at home and safety abroad. * * *

But, Mr. Chairman, in these latter days another strange, new, and dangerous doctrine has been promulgated by the President of the United States, the tendency of which is to enlarge the scope of national powers perhaps as much as the doctrine of Secretary Root, of stretching the Constitution by "judicial construction."

On October 4, 1906, at Harrisburg, Pa., at the dedication exercises of the Pennsylvania capitol building, President Roosevelt announced a new doctrine, which he professed to have imbibed from James Wilson, whose ashes were lately removed from my State to Pennsylvania. In speaking of James Wilson the President says he developed the doctrine that—

> An inherent power rested in the nation outside of the enumerated powers conferred upon it by the Constitution, in all cases where the object involved was beyond the power of the several States and was a power ordinarily exercised by sovereign nations.

I understand the President approved this doctrine in his Harrisburg speech.

Whatever may be our diverse views and different opinions upon the Democratic or Republican side of the House as to the President's late message, I refuse to sanction this doctrine of "inherent power" in the National Government, outside of the enumerated powers in the Constitution.

The New York Sun says:

> We do not know who misled Mr. Roosevelt, but a grosser error, a more grotesque misapprehension, regarding a matter of constitutional law has rarely been committed in public by any statesman. It would take a column's space to explain with particularity the breadth and depth of Mr. Roosevelt's mistake. We may say in a general way that the President totally misunderstood both the words of one of Pennsylvania's greatest sons and the logical course and consequence of the reasoning which gave so much satisfaction to Mr. Roosevelt as a Federal expander. Remarks of Justice Wilson on the powers of the Continental Congress before the Constitution was adopted seem to have been taken by Mr. Roosevelt to apply to that very different thing, the power of the Congress of the United States after its establishment and limitation by the Constitution. Justice Wilson's clear perception of the fact that national powers, inherent but unenumerated, are vested in the people was misinterpreted by Mr. Roosevelt's desirous zeal into support for the idea that these unexpressed national powers are vested not merely in the people, but also in the Congress—a very different thing again, as was so impressively pointed out some months later in Mr. Justice Brewer's opinion in the case of Kansas v. Colorado. Such, however, was the blunder of misapprehension and misconception upon which Mr. Roosevelt based his "theory of governmental action"—a theory now disposed of forever by the unanimous voice of the Supreme Court.

Not only has the Supreme Court held this doctrine untenable, but Mr. Wilson advocated no such view of the Constitution. Wilson did declare in his speech in the Pennsylvania convention, of which he was a member as well as a member of the convention which framed the United States Constitution, that—

> Whatever object of government extends in its operation or effects beyond the bounds of a particular State should be considered as belonging to the Government of the United States.

But he adds:

> To remove discretionary construction, the enumeration of particular matters in which the application of the principle ought to take place will be found to be safe and accurate. In this Constitution—

He declared—

> All authority is derived from the people.

The Roosevelt doctrine that Congress has an inherent right and may exercise some powers outside of the United States Constitution, as well as the Root doctrine of expansion of the Constitution by the construction of the courts, are both fraught with far-reaching and tremendous consequences. These doctrines I shall resist with all my power, and stand, as the statesmen of the South have ever stood, for government of the people within the limitations of the Constitution.

Oh, but it is said the States are asking more powers in the National Government, and larger appropriations from the Federal Treasury. They are breaking down State lines. Mr. Chairman, the wreck of our national life and glory will never come from a few millions of appropriation for internal improvements or from the clamor of the States for Federal aid. It will come from great departures from the fundamental principles of our Government; from the encroachment of the Government upon the people, and not the States and the people upon the Government. That is what the fathers foresaw and tried to prevent. They tried to protect the people from such conditions. An enforcement of national laws which protect the people against corporate greed and monopoly will enable the people to stand all Federal taxation, direct or indirect, required to meet all expenditures for their own benefit. A single lesson in American constitutional law and our double system of Government taught the Emperor of Japan by the President would have avoided discussion of possible loss of the Philippines by a war with Japan. The sovereign State of California surrendered her control over her schools and her government yielded to the Japanese demands. This is a far more weighty question of governmental policy and greater encroachment upon her rights than obtaining an appropriation from the Federal Treasury. Here construction of a treaty of commerce with Japan led to a surrender of a vital principle of local self-government.

The President's summons to the mayor and school board of San Francisco and the concessions made to Japan, misunderstood and misconstrued by many of her people, involve the sacrifice of more of State sovereignty in one hour than all the demands of the States for Federal appropriations. To permit any nation to influence our policy in local affairs in the States is suicidal and destructive of our dual system of government, of which system it is the duty of every nation dealing with us to take notice. The Japanese treaty of 1894 is purely and simply a commercial treaty. No one ever dreamed or supposed it would be attempted to assert a right under it to interfere with the local school affairs of California. Japan's interpretation of the treaty was wrong, and our Government would have gained more by so announcing and giving Japan a lesson in American constitutional law than by yielding to her demands. The articles of the treaty of 1894 claimed to have been violated are articles 1 and 14. Article 14 is restricted to all that concerns "commerce and navigation," and no other construction can be placed upon it. Article 1 is simply the "most favored nation" clause in most commercial treaties. The same theory of government which, by agreement or otherwise, can coerce or persuade the surrender of the rights of a sovereign State upon the question of mixed schools for orientals, can be applied, should necessity arise, to coerce other States upon other questions where international complications arise.

It is said that every treaty is the supreme law of the land, but assuming the Japanese treaty is capable of the Japanese interpretation, every treaty is also to be taken as made with a full knowledge by foreign governments of our national and State systems. The nation can not interfere with local matters. That was the position taken by James G. Blaine in the Italian affair in New Orleans, and is the only sound position.

I do not know the secret diplomatic history of the San Francisco school incident, but I fear the concessions that we received will not compensate us, and in the end will prove disastrous to us. The menace of the Philippines is upon us. Our concessions to Japan are but temporary and dangerous expedients. The possession of the Philippines has been characterized as manifest destiny, but I fear that the holding of this territory as colonies, unfit as they are for citizenship, and leading to a radical departure from all the traditions and theory of our Government in acquiring and holding territory, will prove most disastrous. The hand of God may be in all this Philippine business, but it is for our discipline, and they can never be either profitable or advantageous.

The treaty of Paris marked an era of colonization, a step in the direction of the British colonial system, of centralization and abandonment of cardinal principles of our Government. Froude says, "If there be one lesson which history clearly teaches, it is that free nations can not govern subject provinces."

Surrender to the President, even by the consent of a State, of the right to manage its own local affairs, the enlargement of national powers by legislative enactment or judicial construction beyond constitutional limitations, the obliteration of State lines, and the expansion of the country along the lines of a colonial system means the drift in the direction of empire, as in the history of Rome, and the abandonment of the Monroe doctrine, which for a century has helped to maintain the peace of the Western Hemisphere. An invasion of the rights of a State has been recently manifested in North Carolina in a controversy now happily settled, I trust.

The legislature of North Carolina passed an act providing a railroad passenger rate of 2½ cents per mile. Thereupon two great railroad corporations sought the aid of the Federal court and obtained an ex parte injunction against the corporation commission and attorney-general of the State and attempted also to enjoin citizens of the State from bringing suits for penalties incurred by the sale of tickets at a higher rate than provided by the State law.

The railroad corporations might have sought the protection of the State courts, subject to review of the Supreme Court of the United States, upon a writ of error, or they might have made an actual test of the new rate provided by the State law, before making any application to the Federal court. An application was made upon the ground that the rate was confiscatory, not a living rate, and a violation of the fourteenth amendment of the United States Constitution. The United States judge issued his injunction before a test of the rate had been made by the railroads and before evidence upon which to base a finding in his decree that the act was unconstitutional, and the granting of the injunction prior to any such test or finding of the court was in direct conflict with the law of the State. The governor of the State directed the indictment of the agents of this corporation for violations of the State's law.

The Federal judge released a prisoner by habeas corpus who had been tried, convicted, and sentenced by the State court. Thereupon the governor continued to instruct indictments to be found against the agents of these corporations and insisted upon obedience to the laws of the State. The final result was the surrender of these corporations and the putting in effect of the rate as fixed by the legislature and a modification of the injunction order against the corporation commission, both the State and the railroads to have the right of an appeal, without prejudice, to the Supreme Court.

In a special session of the legislature the whole controversy has been adjusted; but not only in North Carolina, but also in Alabama, Georgia, and other States Federal judges have issued ex-parte injunctions which were in conflict with the State laws. Even if strictly within the power of the Federal judges to do this, in the absence of any act of Congress to the contrary, under the fourteenth amendment to the United States Constitution, they precipitated an unseemly conflict between State and Federal jurisdictions. The governments of the States had no other recourse than to enforce the laws of the States.

The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. HENRY] said the other day that United States Judge McPherson declined to issue an injunction in a similar case in Missouri. The action of some judges, however, of the Federal courts within the past twelve months indicates still more clearly that Jefferson was correct when he characterized them as "sappers and miners." I would take away no just exercise of power of the Federal court, nor deprive citizens of their right to enter these courts, but the injunctions by the Federal judges against State laws are dangerous to citizens and subversive of our form of government. In the controversy, however, over rates, North Carolina, foremost in the Union, vindicated her right to enforce her laws and insisted that they should be maintained and not set aside until there had been a final determination that they were unconstitutional.

North Carolina has displayed the same spirit in this controversy which she manifested in the Revolution. No one can question either her loyalty or conservatism. The last State, except Rhode Island, to ratify the Federal Constitution, not doing so until after the Bill of Rights had been adopted, the last State to secede from the Union, she was yet among the first in the Revolution, and in defense of the Union and the flag, fighting side by side with your Republican President at San Juan Hill in the war with Spain [applause], giving up two of her most gallant sons whose names are known far and wide throughout the nation—Worth Bagley and William E. Shipp—in that war. But while conservative, she resists also encroachment upon her rights and the spirit of the patriots of Alamance and Guilford, Moores Creek and Kings Mountain runs in the veins of her sons. [Applause.] They are loyal to the Federal Government, but they have never yet surrendered any rights to which they were entitled. [Applause.]

The action of my State and other States of the South in the past year, following the speeches of the President and Mr. Root, coming closely after the California incident and recent Congressional legislation, makes the old question of States rights of very great interest, not only to the South, but to the whole country. This question may not be an issue, as suggested by the Washington Post in a recent editorial, for men of all parties, North and South, realize the importance of the question of the maintenance of local self-government. But we must be vigilant and must watch with great care and jealousy the encroachment of the National Government under any alleged inherent powers outside of the Constitution upon the States, and also any stretch of the Constitution by judicial construction.

Maintenance of the balance between each and every branch of the Government, executive, legislative, and judicial, is necessary to our safety and welfare, both now and in the future. Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty and the continuance of our free Government within the limitations of the Constitution. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, there is another matter which will be an issue, and a live issue, in the campaign of 1908. I refer to the revision of the tariff, which has been ably discussed from a Republican standpoint by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] who just preceded me. As since the days of the alien and sedition laws and the Virginia and Kentucky resolutions, the parties of the country have divided upon the question of the strict or liberal construction of the Constitution, so the raising of revenue by tariff taxation is now and has been a distinct line of cleavage between the two parties.

Out of the tariff grows the trust question, for the tariff is the "mother of trusts." A tariff originally levied in the days of Washington at 5 per cent for revenue and in the days of Henry Clay for incidental protection is now levied avowedly and openly for the protection of special interests. These special interests, the great manufacturers and the trusts, repay the favor by contributions to Republican campaign funds and thus perpetuate their own hold and that of the Republican party upon the Government. So there has grown up a system of spoils and robbery of the many, the great mass of the people, for the benefit of the few. Wealth and luxury have increased, and correspondingly also the extremes of poverty and want, until a few are controlling the wealth of the country, consolidating the railroads and steamship lines, and monopoly stalks through the land, blighting enterprise, destroying competition, adding burdens to the bowed backs of labor, hushing the laughter of little children, bringing despair to the poor, and above all menacing the country with a conflict between labor and capital. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I honor the President and every law officer of the Government for their endeavors to suppress the monopolies of the country. The pity of it is that they did not begin sooner, before these vast consolidations of capital had begun and had acquired a hold upon the country. Mr. Chairman, by every constitutional and legal means I would not only control and regulate the trusts, and the Democratic party would not only control and regulate the trusts, but we would suppress and destroy them. They are not necessary evils. They are evils that spring from the greed of wealth and which have been produced and given life by class legislation, by laws which hothouse one industry and build it up at the expense of the consumer and the taxpayer. The Democratic party does not stand for free trade. The system of tariff taxation has existed ever since the beginning of the Government. But it does stand against monopoly, against a purely protective system.

It stands for a revision and a reduction of the tariff, now the highest in the history of the Government. Upon this issue Democracy has won two political battles at the polls and it can and will win others. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Republicans have promised the people revision and reduction time and time again, and in Minnesota, Iowa, and Massachusetts the sentiment is so strong even among Republicans that some extreme stand-patters, like our former colleagues, Mr. McCleary and Mr. Lacey, have been retired to private life, and the President's chosen successor, Secretary Taft, is endeavoring to steal another plank from the Democratic platform. Does any sane man ever expect or hope to see any real reform or reduction or revision of the tariff at the hands of its Republican friends? Republicans are always revising the tariff "after the next election." Mr. Chairman, you may as soon expect to see the Republicans of Ohio unite or the President advocate the claims of Senator FORAKER as the Presidential candidate. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 27, 1906, containing the letter, which was addressed, during the last Congress, by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. S. W. MCCALL] to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] in which Mr. MCCALL represents to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] the growth of tariff revision sentiment in the State of Massachusetts and asks the gentleman from New York, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, whether there is to be any tariff revision during that Congress, the Fifty-ninth Congress. What does the gentleman from New York say in that letter in reply to Mr. MCCALL?

He says:

Congress is not prepared to revise the tariff schedules in that calm, judicial frame of mind so necessary to the proper preparation of a tariff act at a time so near the coming Congressional elections.

This letter was prior to the Congressional elections of 1906. The Republican party was not then in that calm, judicial frame of mind necessary to revise the tariff. The elections came on, and another session of Congress followed, and still the Republican party was not in that "calm, judicial frame of mind" so necessary to the proper preparation of a tariff act.

And now we are met with the same cry again; that now is not the time to revise the tariff; but it must be done, if at all, after the election is over in November, 1908.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did not the President himself in his message to Congress say that just prior to a Presidential election was not the time to consider tariff revision?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Certainly he did; and with a Republican President or a Republican Congress it is always, "Wait until after the election is over," and at no time are they ever in a "calm, judicial frame of mind," or prepared to revise the tariff.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And there is always an election just going to take place.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. And, as the gentleman from South Carolina says, there is always an election just about to take place. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair regrets to say the gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, a great meeting is now being held in the city of Washington upon this great question. The Republican party is being asked, by the National Association of Manufacturers, comprising representatives of many of the biggest manufacturing and industrial concerns in the United States, if it will not revise and reduce tariff schedules, or at least appoint a permanent nonpartisan expert tariff commission for the purpose of taking under consideration these tariff schedules in a business way. But, as I see from this morning's papers, there is no disposition on the part of the powers that be in this House even to grant that moderate request of the tariff revisionists.

But they say, Mr. Chairman, tariff revision is dangerous; that the Wilson bill produced a panic. Yes; the Wilson bill arises like Banquo's ghost. You Republicans know that it would have produced ample revenue had it not been for the income-tax decision and that the panic which followed it was a banker's panic and produced by the money situation. You also know that the greatest panics of the country, in fact all except the panic of 1893, have been under Republican tariff laws and high protection, with a Republican President, and that cotton in the South touched its lowest prices under the McKinley law and a Republican Administration, lower than under the Cleveland Administration, and you know that this low price was seventeen months after President McKinley's inauguration. You argue fallaciously. You deal in tirades against the Wilson bill, but you will do nothing for revision. The manufacturers' associations are appealing to you to-day in the capital city.

They have appealed to you in the past for better trade relations with foreign countries, to open up new foreign markets and enable them to extend their trade and to dispose of their surplus. McKinley pleaded with you in his last speech at Buffalo, just before he was stricken down by the assassin's hand, for reciprocity. Throw down the barriers of trade by a just tariff revision and reciprocal trade agreements with other countries. Open the ports of the United States to the trade of the world and cease your system of favoritism to special interests, and a wealth undreamed of will be the heritage of our children. Retaliation and commercial wars will cease, and the American merchantman's flag will again be seen upon every sea and in every port, and the United States, the most prosperous and intelligent nation in the civilized world, will prosper as never before, and you will avoid commercial war, the growth of socialism, and strengthen your own party. Will you do it? I plead not as a partisan, but as a patriot, for your moderation and wisdom in this matter. If you fail to measure up to the occasion and your opportunity and responsibilty, the American people will weigh your party once more in the balances and declare you wanting in statesmanship. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I believe to-day that the "handwriting is upon the wall," your party "is divided," and I read Democratic success in November. [Applause on Democratic side.] Upon the issues of opposition to monopoly and lower tariff, freer trade relations, and the preservation of local self-government Democracy will win success. [Applause on Democratic side.] Either it must win or the country become, not a Union of States, but a nation with State lines obliterated and in the grasp of special interests. Much has been said about our being a "world power." I would have our country a world power, but to attain it I would not have one single star of the flag of the Union obscured, but all in their field of blue, shining with luster and power, united, yet sovereign and independent, except for the limitations of the Constitution, and under its folds only free men and citizens whose rights are inviolate and privileges equal. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES].

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, we should all industriously, patriotically, and intelligently rivet our attention on and seek light concerning the questions of currency and the guaranty of bank deposits, and to that end I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a valuable letter from Col. A. M. Shook, an able financier of Nashville, Tenn., and several communications from one of our ablest lawyers and safest bank men, Judge John A. Pitts, also of Nashville.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the request of the gentleman from Tennessee will be granted. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Colonel Shook's letter reads as follows:

FIRST SAVINGS BANK AND TRUST COMPANY,
Nashville, Tenn., January 2, 1908.

Hon. JOHN WESLEY GAINES,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. GAINES: The currency and financial legislation that is demanded by the country is perhaps the most important that will come before Congress this session. The three months of money stringency through which we have just passed has riveted public interests to these questions so firmly that Congress can not fail to take some action for relief. The enormous volume of business that this country was doing for the first nine months of this year legitimately demanded a very much larger volume of currency than the country could furnish; but this did not cause the acute currency panic which has overspread the country for the past three months.

The immediate cause of this panic was the destruction of confidence in the value of the corporate securities upon which the financial and industrial institutions of this country are based. So great was this want of confidence that the banks, almost without exception, throughout the United States were forced to limit payments of currency to their respective depositors. This, in turn, increased the want of confidence and produced the most general hoarding of money ever known in this country for a like period.

The only thing in which faith and credit was not impaired, from a financial standpoint, was the Government of the United States. This being true, why not have the Government, under proper restrictions and limitations, guarantee the deposits in national banks, so that the depositor will feel the same security about his deposit that he now feels about the national bank note that he has in his pocket.

As a rule, he does not know whether the national bank note he has is issued by a broken or solvent bank. He does know that the Government of the United States has guaranteed its payment.

Certainly the Government could not indiscriminately and without proper restrictive measures guarantee all national-bank deposits. If, however, the amount of deposits in any national bank should be limited to, say, five times the amount of its capital stock and the individual liability of every stockholder increased 100 per cent, and the amount of interest that might be paid on deposits limited to not exceeding 3 per cent per annum, then with a tax on deposits in all national banks amply sufficient to cover any loss that might accrue by reason of the failure of such banks, the proposition would be feasible. Without increasing the liability of the stockholder and limiting the amount of deposits and the rate of interest that might be paid on such deposits, the proposition would be chimerical.

Unless these legitimate and restrictive measures are imposed, a little national bank of, say, $25,000 capital, might by offering large interest on deposits run its deposit account up to millions of dollars and thereby deprive the legitimate financial institutions of their ability to do any business; but with the deposits limited to five times the capital actually paid in and the liability of the stockholder increased to four times the amount of his stock, and the rate of interest that might be paid limited to not exceeding 3 per cent, the possibility of loss to the Government would be practically eliminated. Money would no longer be hoarded by anybody, for then every dollar of money on deposit in a national bank in the United States would be as good as the national-bank note the man had in his pocket, and the business world have the benefits that would accrue from the circulation and use of these deposits.

Unless the rate of interest is limited to not exceeding 3 per cent to be paid to depositors in national banks, the danger is that depositors in savings banks, trust companies, and State banks will withdraw their deposits from these institutions and put them in the national banks.

By limiting the rate of interest that a national bank may pay on deposits to, say, 2½ per cent, it would still leave a large field for savings banks, trust companies, and State banks; they would still be at liberty to pay any rate of interest they might think justifiable, limited only by the statutes on this subject in the respective States where they are located.

Real estate loans are the largest factors in the business of this character of institutions, and nothing should be done that would prevent the legitimate conduct of this business by offering such inducements as would divert money from this class of investments. National banks are not allowed to deal in this class of securities.

One other, and the most important, question in connection with the legislation on this subject is how to render the volume of money sufficiently flexible as to meet the constantly changing demands for it. This phase of the question has been discussed so thoroughly by able financiers that I do not feel competent to enter the field even with a suggestion.

Yours, very truly, A. M. SHOOK.

The several letters of Judge Pitts on the same subject read as follows:

MONETARY RELIEF MEASURES.

[By John A. Pitts, of Nashville, Tenn.]

(NOTE.—The following letters were published in the Tennessean, of Nashville, beginning December 3, 1907, under the above general heading, and comprise only those which relate to national guaranty of deposits. They are put in this form for circulation at the request of many readers. Other letters are appearing from day to day on the other branches of the general subject, which are mentioned in the first letter.)

[First letter.]

THE GENERAL SUBJECT OUTLINED.

In these days of financial stress the public mind is much occupied with the discussion of measures for relief.

There are four distinct plans or schemes now under consideration in the press, in the magazines, in trade bodies, and by bankers, politicians, and business men generally, all calling for legislation by the National Congress to make them effective.

Two of these plans relate directly to the currency and claim for their object a more flexible and elastic volume of the circulating medium, to the end that the quantity of circulation may automatically expand at certain seasons to meet the enlarged demand for moving crops and contract again when that demand relaxes or is satisfied; and the other two do not relate to any change in the currency laws, but claim for their object a better security for bank deposits, to the end that the distrust of the banks by depositors which usually starts and always feeds and keeps alive a panic may be in future avoided.

These plans or measures may be briefly indicated as follows:

1. A measure authorizing national banks to issue what is called asset currency.

2. The establishment of a great central bank, authorized to have branches, to act as the fiscal agent of the National Government, and to be given authority to issue currency.

3. The establishment of a system of United States postal savings banks, authorized to receive savings deposits at the post-offices, the United States paying a low rate of interest on such deposits.

4. A measure for the guaranty of deposits in national banks by the United States by means of a small tax on all such banks, based upon their average deposits, or loans, or circulation.

The whole subject is of such vital importance and is fraught with such far-reaching consequences that every man who has given any special thought to it, from whatever point of view, ought to be willing to give his fellow-citizens the benefit of his knowledge and conclusions, that they may be weighed and counted for what they are worth. The illustration of Saxe's "Six blind men of Indostan," who went to see the elephant," and who, according to the part of the animal with which each came in contact, confidently judged the whole beast to be like a wall, a spear, a snake, a tree, a fan, or a rope, holds good on this subject as on many others, where men form and assert dogmatic opinions concerning things they either know nothing about or have studied from only one point of view.

I have been a student of the questions of banking and currency for something over twenty years, and for all but a year or two of that time president of a bank—part of the time of a national bank, and part of the time of a State bank. I have also during the same period, as many of your readers know, had much to do with litigations growing out of failed and wrecked banks, with opportunities to become familiar with many methods of fraud and evasions of law practiced by those who conduct the banking business, and with the fatal consequences which sometimes inevitably attend even the most honest administration. I claim, therefore, some knowledge of the subject, gained in this way, which the average citizen of equal intelligence, but without my opportunities, does not possess. I have endeavored to view it from all standpoints within my competency—from the standpoint of the banks, the standpoint of the general public, the standpoint of the depositor and ordinary business man, the standpoint of the lawyer—as a governmental or political question, and as a business or economical question, endeavoring to apply to it all the tests of fairness, honesty, equality, and expediency. As to some of the measures and the principle and policy of them, I have formed very definite and positive convictions which I believe to be sound; as to others I am in doubt.

With your kind permission I purpose giving to your readers the benefit of my investigations and conclusions. I shall take up first, in my next letter, that branch of the subject which I believe most important of all as promising the greatest and most lasting benefits—the security of depositors—and shall endeavor to show that such a measure is feasible and immediately available, provided, of course, Congress can be induced to adopt it; that its benefits will be sure and permanent, and that the objections to it, for there are some, are inconsiderable as compared with its manifest advantages.

[Second letter.]

SECURITY OF NATIONAL-BANK DEPOSITS.

It will be everywhere admitted that, granting the existence of a sound and unsuspected circulating medium, the thing which immediately produces a panic in the first place, and then, after it starts, feeds and keeps it going, is the loss of confidence by depositors in the solvency and safety of the banks which hold their savings and surplus moneys.

This fear of the depositor causes him to hoard or hide away what money he has and to rush to the bank and get out what he has there and hoard or hide away that also; and when this fear once possesses a substantial proportion of depositors, it spreads like wildfire until it becomes general, and then we have what is called, and rightfully, "a panic;" and the result is the locking up of the money of the country—the very lifeblood of business—the suspension of industries, falling prices, an army of unemployed, and, in a word, if it continues long enough, the absolute arrest and even reverse of progress, with incalculable loss and suffering, especially by the middle and lower classes. And even when the storm passes there is usually a long, tedious, and uphill pull before the country can fully regain its former position of financial health and prosperity.

Now, whatever it may be that begets this fear of the depositor in the beginning, when once it gets a foothold it naturally runs into panic. Without that fear we could not have a panic. We might have a famine without it, or a general state of business and industrial decadence and dry rot, but not a panic as panics are known in modern times. We may, of course, have scarce money, low prices, and hard times for years without any panic. Such things undermine general prosperity gradually and by degrees; a panic wrecks it in a day. A panic has no necessary relation to the volume of currency, of the amount of money in circulation or available for circulation. If depositors once become thoroughly alarmed, a panic will ensue, without the least regard to the amount of money in existence, for the shock to business from the withdrawal from use of the bulk of the circulation will be the same whether the total amount be great or small. Granting the same loss of confidence by depositors, the recent panic would have been just as possible even though the amount of money in circulation had been ten or twenty times as great as it was.

Is it not, then, a matter of the very greatest importance to prevent, if possible, the starting of this fear on the part of depositors? And if that can be accomplished, will it not at least strongly tend to prevent panics, and also open the way and make it easier to correct faults and defects in the general monetary and currency system?

I believe every well-informed man will answer these questions in the affirmative if convinced that this fear and distrust of depositors can be reached and prevented in a practical way without peril and without injustice.

I am convinced that it is not only practicable to do this, but easy—easier, in fact, than the popular mind supposes or than most leading bankers, whose special interests are believed by them to lie in other directions, are willing to admit.

The plan is not a new one. It has been many times suggested in past years. Efforts have been made to enact it into law, but they have been defeated by special interests desiring measures conceived to be more directly for their own special benefit.

The general idea is this: A guaranty by the United States, directly or indirectly, of all deposits in national banks, the banks themselves "footing the bill," to use a vulgarism.

That such a guaranty would satisfy depositors and entirely remove any fear on their part that they would not get their money does not admit of doubt. Even the Wall Street Journal, which opposes the plan, in referring to it in its issue of November 27, said:

"That it would absolutely safeguard the national safe deposits there can be no question of doubt. It would make every dollar of deposits as secure as every dollar of money. * * * Nobody feels any distrust of the soundness and permanency of the Government. Therefore insurance of deposits by the Government would remove that distrust of banks which sometimes leads to runs and panics."

The details of the measure would of course have to be worked out by Congress. My suggestion would be a law by which the Government would guarantee the deposits and impose a small annual tax on the banks, based on their average deposits, sufficient to fully reimburse it in all outlays. In other words, a measure by which the Government would immediately and nominally guarantee the deposits, but all the national banks ultimately and really make the guaranty, all the banks of every deposit in each.

Would this be onerous upon the banks? I answer emphatically "No." This I will undertake to demonstrate from official statistics in my next letter, as this is already long enough.

[Third letter.]

GOVERNMENT GUARANTY OF NATIONAL-BANK DEPOSITS EASILY PRACTICABLE.

The last annual report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that the number of national banks which have failed and been wound up, their total liabilities, and the balances remaining after applying their total assets, including assessment of stockholders, since 1865, have been as follows:

Year.	Number.	Liabilities.	Loss.

aGain.

These liabilities include all forms of debts owing by the bank at date of failure, and no doubt embrace, in addition to deposits, a large amount of bills payable given for moneys borrowed by the banks—these details not being stated in the report.

But treating them all as deposit liabilities, it appears that the sum lost by depositors in the whole period of forty-two years was only $32,546,872.

Eliminating the panic periods of 1873 and 1893, including the three years next preceding and next succeeding those years, and treating them as distinct periods, the foregoing figures show that the average annual loss of depositors in all failed national banks, after applying all their assets, including assessment of stockholders, has been as follows:

For panic period, 1890–1896	2,566,662
For both periods combined	1,619,027
For the whole forty-two years	774,925
For the normal years	352,874
For last ten years, 1897–1906	175,822

The same report, on page 10, shows the following deposit liabilities of the 6,137 national banks then in existence, at close of business, September 6, 1906:

To individual depositors	$4,199,938,310
To other national banks	830,119,644
To State banks and bankers	381,553,534
To trust companies and savings banks	346,514,194
To approved reserve agents	30,814,088
To United States	96,775,894
To United States disbursing officers	11,055,918

Now, with the foregoing data before us, based on forty-two years' experience, running through two severe and disastrous panics, two questions are to be solved, namely, (1) what annual rate of tax on all deposits will be sufficient to save harmless the Government in its guaranty of all such deposits? and (2) what minimum amount will be safe as a limit at which the payment of the tax may be suspended temporarily, until by depletions of the fund it may be deemed necessary.

It has been seen that the average annual loss to depositors during the past forty-two years, including two panics, has been $774,925; for the normal years, leaving out the panics, $352,874; and for the last ten years, 1897 to 1906, inclusive, only $175,822. These averages, of course, mean what was left to be lost by depositors and creditors of all kinds (except note holders who lost nothing because the Government was behind the notes), after liquidation and the exhaustion of all assets.

Undoubtedly the sum provided for the indemnity of the Government should be ample beyond all question, and sufficient to enable it to step in at once and pay off the depositors when a bank fails without waiting for liquidation—turning the assets of the bank when collected back into the guaranty fund. When the Government stands ready to do this depositors will have no fear of not getting their money held by national banks, and if we have panics at all in future, it is reasonable to expect that they will at least not be frequent or severe; and besides, the plan suggested, when once adopted, will greatly strengthen the national banks and increase their number, and consequently greatly increase the fund derived from the tax.

In view of the annual averages of loss above stated for the whole forty-two years, and especially in view of those for the normal years and for the last ten years, it would seem that an aggregate fund of $25,000,000, or say one-half of 1 per cent of the total deposits, would be ample to meet any emergency, since that sum is equal to the total liabilities of all national banks that have failed in any past year, and more than five times the loss of depositors even in the panic year of 1893; and that a rate of tax which would produce one-tenth of that sum, or say $2,500,000 per annum, would be sufficient, especially as that sum is more than seven times the average annual loss of depositors in past normal years, and more than fourteen times the average annual loss for the past ten years.

Now, on the present basis of total deposits, one-twentieth of 1 per cent would produce annually $2,948,385; and beyond doubt, within a very short time, with the increase of national banks and their deposits, one-fortieth of 1 per cent will produce the sum of $2,500,000 annually. This would be at the rate of $500 and $250, respectively, per annum on each $1,000,000 of deposits; and I ask, in all good conscience, should not the national banks be willing to contribute at either of these rates in order to absolutely assure the payment of their depositors whose money they use, for the most part, without compensation?

In my next letter I shall point out some of the consequences and benefits of this plan and endeavor to answer some of the objections that are urged against it.

Assuming that a tax on national banks of from one-fourth to one-twentieth of 1 per cent per annum on their average deposits will be safely adequate to protect the Government in its guaranty of all such deposits, thereby making, as even the Wall Street Journal admits, "every dollar of deposits as secure as every dollar of money," what, in the first place, of the essential justice, equity, and fairness of such a measure?

Banks make their profits chiefly on the funds of their depositors, not on their own funds—their capital stock. Under our system the banks could not make expenses, much less pay dividends and accumulate a large surplus, if their loans and operations were confined to their own moneys.

Take, for example, the three most excellent and well-managed national banks of Nashville. By their statements, published within the last day or two, it appears that they are carrying loans and discounts in the aggregate sum of $11,872,768.59—that is, receiving interest on that sum—while their aggregate capital stock is only $2,100,000. The same statements show accumulated surplus and undivided profits aggregating $1,524,410.28, nearly 75 per cent of their stock.

How could they possibly have paid expenses and dividends and accumulated this large surplus and be able to loan out nearly $12,000,000 if they had been confined to the $2,100,000 originally paid in by their stockholders?

This illustration holds good as to all banks in our system, in varying degree. It is not uncommon to find banks holding deposits five, ten, twenty, and even more than thirty times their capital stock, and consequently able to make loans and collect interest on that many times their own money. According to the Comptroller's report of December, 1906, the national banks on September 4 of that year held individual deposits of more than five times the amount of their capital stock and were carrying loans and discounts to about the same sum—that is, were receiving interest on more than five times the original investment of their stockholders.

So, the fact is undeniable that banks in this country—it is not so in other countries, where other systems prevail, as I shall point out when I come to discuss asset currency—make their money on the funds of their depositors.

Another fact to be noted in this connection is, that as a rule banks use their depositors' money freely, without interest or other pecuniary compensation; the exceptions are comparatively few. The depositor gets only the security or supposed security of the safe-keeping of his money, and the convenience of having the bank pay his checks and collect checks for him, and loan him money when he needs it.

Now, these being the indisputable facts, can any fair and just man say it is not right—nay, that common fairness and justice does not require—that the bank, who uses the depositor's money without interest, should contribute at least a pittance toward making the depositor's imagined security an actual and real one?

Is there not something incongruous, out of joint, and unjust in the idea that a bank should go on for years availing itself of the depositor's confidence and trust, receiving and using his money free gratis, in his faith that it will be returned to him when he needs it, and then, when the clouds gather, say to him, "No, you can't get it now—you must wait until the storm is over?" And especially so, when the bank can, without the least hardship, by the contribution of a mere mite to a common guaranty fund, provide against this disappointment and distress of the depositor, even though the bank should be overtaken by overwhelming ruin?

The plan suggested strikes my mind as embodying the very essence of justice and fair dealing, as between the bank and the depositor.

And these considerations have led me to the idea that the tax ought to be based on the amount of the deposits, and not the loans, or the capital stock, or the circulation. It is in the nature of a small compensation for the deposits. The depositor does not, of course, get the tax, but he gets the security it creates. I do not believe that banks of deposit and discount ought to be allowed by law to pay interest on deposits. It is a ruinous and disastrous policy for the pure and clean banking business. Banks are not created to borrow money, which the payment of interest on deposits amounts to. They are created to safely keep the money of others and to afford to business and commerce the numerous other conveniences incident to safe banking. Whenever they enter into a scramble to obtain deposits by overbidding each other, the moneys of all depositors are at once imperiled. They ought not, for the security and protection of depositors generally, to be permitted to pay interest on deposits at all. That should be left to the savings banks and trust companies; and the banks of deposit and discount ought to be confined to the business for which they are created and compelled to safeguard their general depositors at every point. That is what the general depositor wants, and if he is made absolutely secure he will be satisfied, and business will proceed along the most healthful lines.

I see I have consumed my space with a vindication of the essential justice and equity of the proposition—a good point to drive home, to be sure—and so will have to discuss other points in my next.

[Fifth letter.]

The obvious consequences of a national guaranty of deposits in national banks will be, most certainly—

First, the removal of all fear and distrust of depositors, and consequently the removal of the principal if not sole cause of panics.

Second, the enormous increase of the deposits in national banks now existing, and of the number of national banks, both by the organization of new banks and the change of existing State banks into national banks.

Third, the equal security of depositors in all national banks, whether large or small, so that the depositor in a small bank will feel, and will in fact be, just as secure as the depositor in a large bank.

Fourth, it will enable the banks in the southern, western, and interior cities to place their large surplus with the sole view of commercial convenience, without feeling constrained to go to the great money centers, like New York, Boston, and Philadelphia, where the methods of "high finance" are so apt to imperil deposits and credits—in other words, tend to cut the South and West loose from the altogether baleful grip and influence of Wall street, a consummation most devoutly to be wished.

Fifth, it will put the bank-taxing power of the United States behind the larger part of all the bank deposits of the country, primarily, and in effect make all the national banks guarantee each and every deposit in any one of them, with the result that every dollar of deposits will be just as safe and secure as every dollar of money.

These are the general results which I think will undoubtedly follow the establishment of the system under discussion.

Will such results, as a whole, be beneficial or detrimental to the general public? On which side is the great preponderance of good and evil?

I would not assert, nor can it be asserted of any law or system, that detriment and disadvantage will not accrue to some persons and classes of persons. Even the most beneficent rule or law, adopted for the undoubted general good, sometimes operates with peculiar hardship in individual cases. This can not be avoided. It results from the imperfection of all human institutions. What the true publicist seeks after is the greatest good to the greatest number. That is all that can be hoped for.

Let us first examine the objections which do, as all must admit, have some force, and see what answer can be made to them, and how the evils apprehended can be modified or lessened.

And first, the State banks, whose depositors can not be protected in this way, object that the system proposed will induce their depositors to leave them and go to the national banks, and thus practically break up their business. That this is true, especially in "squally times," is beyond doubt. But I think in ordinary times, when general business confidence prevails, it would not be so. In such times the promise of a thoroughly honest and solvent man, or business concern known to be strong and honestly managed, goes as readily as if backed by any amount or strength of security. There is no reason why this should not be so, in ordinary times, of strong and honestly managed State banks—and no others have any excuse for existence at any time.

Again, the remedy of those State banks which can do so, is to become national banks. Under the present law all such banks of $25,000 capital in the smaller towns, and of $50,000 in the larger towns, may become national banks. But it may be urged that as all national banks must have national bonds, and as such bonds are scarce, they might not be able to secure them; and this would be a real difficulty at present. But the United States is continually issuing bonds for one purpose and another, and must do so hereafter if the construction of the Panama Canal and the improvements contemplated of our harbors and great waterways are carried out. Let these bonds, or a sufficiency of them to answer the needs of the banks, be issued at a low rate of interest, say 1½ or 2 per cent, and offered for sale to banks only. The banks will readily take them at par, if they are permitted at once to issue currency secured by them to their face value.

The trust companies also object, upon the same ground as the State banks, and their objection can not be answered quite in the same way, inasmuch as, under existing laws, they can not be converted into national banks. However, trust companies are affected only to the extent that they undertake to do a banking business—not at all as to their trust business. The trust business and the banking business have no necessary relation to each other, are wholly distinct and separate, and ought not to be permitted to be done by the same corporation at all. That they are now permitted, in some places, to blend these two distinct and separate classes of business together is one of the great evils of our present system. Trust companies engage in all sorts of financial schemes, ventures, and enterprises, such as buying and placing all sorts of bonds and stocks, underwriting bond issues, and "financing" enterprises, on the prospect of large bonuses and other "profits"—sometimes good and sometimes bad. Their transactions, as now conducted, often involve very large and speculative risks, such as no bank has authority to enter upon. When a trust company undertakes, in addition to this class of business, to do also a regular banking business—to receive deposits subject to check and make short loans as banks do—the chances are very great that the depositors and the banking branch of the business will suffer. The recent panic started in New York, not with the banks, but with the trust companies which were doing also a banking business. Two of the largest ones, holding deposits of more than $100,000,000 subject to check, became the subject of suspicion because of supposed speculations of their officers and their connection with certain copper, railroad, and industrial ventures on the "trust" side of their business, and there was at once a run on them by their depositors which precipitated the panic.

So the remedy of the trust companies is to get out of the banking business. They should no more be permitted to engage in the banking business than the banks should be permitted to engage in the trust business. If they will not get out of the banking business voluntarily, they should be forced out by law; and if the effect of a national guaranty of deposits shall be to drive trust companies out of the banking business, it will be a great blessing to the country at large.

Other and less serious objections will be answered in my next letter.

[Sixth letter.]

Having considered the objections of State banks and trust companies, let us next consider those of the national banks and of certain newspapers and journals which appear to speak from the same point of view.

These objections, so far as I have seen or heard them suggested, are the following:

1. It is said that it is unjust and inequitable to the strong and well-managed banks to require them to contribute to a fund to protect and uphold the weak or mismanaged banks; that this, to use the words of one of our daily papers, "looks like making virtue pay the penalty of vice."

This objection is a mere sticking in the bark, or worse; it shows that those who urge it either have not fully grasped what the proposed plan means or are not willing to discuss it fairly. The underlying fallacy of the objection is the mistaken idea or supposition that the plan means the imposition of a tax upon the strong banks on the one side to support the weak banks on the other side, whereas the true idea is the imposition of a tax on all banks, both strong and weak, on the one side, for the protection of all depositors on the other side.

The essential justice and equity of the measure can not be deduced from a consideration of the duties and obligations of the banks to each other, which are really mere matters of mutual convenience and business courtesy, but can only be deduced from a consideration of the duties and obligations of the banks to their depositors, which are peremptory, commanded both by law and morals, and in the nature of sacred trusts. It is therefore neither logical nor ingenuous to say that the measure "looks like making virtue pay the penalty of vice."

If the purpose or effect was to make the strong and well-managed banks contribute to save the weak or ill-managed ones from loss, or to save the managers of the latter from punishment, the criticism would be just. But that is neither the purpose nor the effect. The wrecked or failed bank gets no benefit. It can not receive a dollar of the tax fund, nor, however ample it may be, does it protect either the failing bank's stockholders from full liability or its officers from the penalties of the law if they have violated it. It is the depositor only that is to be secured—in other words, the general public, and not the bank or its stockholders or managers.

Moreover, those who object from the standpoint of the strong and well-managed banks seem to overlook or ignore several pertinent and important considerations. They overlook the fact that the strong and well-managed banks are usually, in times of stress, among the first to put on restrictions that aggravate a panicky condition. They do this because they are strong and well-managed. They are wise enough to see the danger, prudent enough to measure it accurately, and strong enough to get under cover before absolute ruin overtakes them. If, in times of panic, they stood up boldly, like the rooted oak in a storm, and continued to pay out their depositors' money to them as usual, they and their champions could say with some grace and consistency that Government security of depositors was no concern of theirs, and therefore they should not be taxed to bring it about.

The truth is the strong banks most need protection against the panicky distrust and fear of depositors and receive most benefit from such protection, for the very obvious reason that they have more at stake; and when this fear of depositors is once aroused, it is no respecter of persons or banks, and sweeps away both the strong and the weak.

And, again, how can a strong or well-managed and sound bank know that it will always be so? The strong this year may be the weak next year. Calamities and misfortunes come to the best of people and institutions, and it is sometimes impossible to avoid them by any amount of foresight or prudence. Such are the frailties and imperfections inherent in humanity and all human institutions.

The strong-bank argument will not bear the test of reason. Those who urge it seem only to have touched the side, the tusk, the snout, the leg, the ear, or the tail of the elephant; they have not seen the whole animal at all.

This strong-bank objection is the only one coming from the standpoint of the national banks, so far as I am aware. No one has objected from the standpoint of the smaller national banks, nor from that of all the national banks as a whole; at least no arguments or facts in opposition have been suggested along either of those lines.

If the objection of the strong banks be deemed of any substantial force, it may be met in a very easy and practical way, and that is this: Instead of imposing the proposed tax on all national banks now existing, limit the tax to those that shall voluntarily submit to it, and also limit the guaranty to the deposits in such banks, and let those who will not come in protect their own depositors. Perhaps that would be the best shape to give to the law anyway, as in that way no bank would be taxed against its will. Does anyone imagine that the strong banks would remain "out in the cold?"

How long would they remain strong if they did?

The truth is, if the national banks should create a fund equal to the amount of the proposed tax, and employ the very best advertising talent and means to build up and increase their deposits, and spend the money that way, they could not produce a tithe of the result that would come to them through increase of deposits by a national guaranty of them.

The value of such a guaranty to the national banks—all of them whose depositors were so protected—would, beyond question, be many times more than its cost. And, as we have seen, that advantage of the national banks is the very ground of the much more substantial objection of the State banks and trust companies.

Assuredly there can be no good objection on the part of national banks to the proposed guaranty of their depositors, when it is once admitted that it can be obtained at such small cost to them.

2. Again, it is said the measure is centralization—nationalism run mad—and that it amounts to paternalism, to socialism, and other horrible things; that it will paralyze the energies and efforts of bank owners and managers to make their banks successful; that it will destroy, to use the words of the Wall Street Journal (not to mention some of its cuckoos), the "individual responsibility which exists under the present system," and "sap the vitality, the mental strength, the moral character of the people."

The real source and inspiration of this objection can be easily divined from the character of the organs which utter and urge it.

Has it any merit? The pith of the objection is that the proposed measure involves a dangerous centralization of power in the National Government—and I may say in passing that if it does really involve that, I am opposed to it, but I am convinced it does not mean that. The cry of socialism, and that it will destroy "individual responsibility" and "sap the vitality, the mental strength, the moral character of the people," is but a frenzied and ridiculous exaggeration.

Let us look soberly a moment into this latter claim. How can the fact that the deposits are guaranteed by the United States through a fund provided by the banks affect the "individual responsibility," "vitality," "mental strength," and "moral character" of—the depositor, in the first place? Will he possess and practice these admirable qualities in less degree because he knows the money he has earned and has in bank is absolutely safe? Will he not, rather, being relieved of the mental worry and anxiety incident to a sense of insecurity and fear, be freer to exercise those qualities and strive, unhampered by these troubles, to accumulate still more? And what can the depositor do to make or keep the bank strong and safe, be he never so responsible, vital, mentally strong, and moral? This is mere "stuff," so far as the depositor is concerned, undoubtedly.

And how about the bank officers and managers? Their business is to make money for the bank. The keeping of their depositors safe is only a secondary, though necessary, incident to that business. They are not working for the depositors, but for the stockholders; it is true they must cultivate a sense of security in their depositors, else their deposits may be withdrawn.

Now, how can the fact that all the banks provide a fund which makes absolutely safe all the deposits tend in any way to lessen or relax the good qualities mentioned in the bank's officers and managers? Will not the officers and managers, just as in the case of the depositors, being relieved of the burden of satisfying depositors that they are not going to lose their money, be free to employ their entire mental and physical energies and responsibilities in making money for the bank and its stockholders? This is just as obviously "stuff" as regards the officers and managers.

The whole idea that a sense of security in the possession and enjoyment of what one has conduces to loss or deterioration of the excellent qualities of a true individualism is a most egregious absurdity. That sense of security is an essential to the highest and happiest development of those qualities. It is the thing sought after above all others in the fundamental laws of our Government, State and National. It had just as well be said that a prudent and active business man, when once he has obtained sufficient insurance to cover and protect him against loss on what he has, will straightway lay down and do no more!

But to return to the idea of centralization—is there anything in that?

But really, Mr. Editor, this letter is already too long, and I must defer finishing the subject of deposit guaranty for my next letter.

[Seventh letter.]

The objection that the proposed measure means a dangerous or impolitic centralization of power in the National Government merits the closest examination, for if it means that it ought to be rejected, whatever its apparent benefits in other respects. I can not see that it means any increase at all of the powers of the General Government beyond what they are now and have been for fifty years generally recognized to be. I shall not in these letters enter into any argument as to the constitutional powers of the National Government. It is sufficient to say that its power to create national banks, to authorize them to issue currency, and to tax such issues, has been exercised and recognized for more than half a century. Indeed, the interests and organs which urge the objection I am now combating almost unanimously favor a measure authorizing the national banks to issue what is variously called asset, credit, or emergency currency; and all plans proposed for that measure embody a heavy tax of such issues to secure their redemption—in other words, the application to asset currency of the exact principle which I am urging should be applied to deposits. So, to use a familiar legal phrase, those who advocate asset currency are estopped from objecting that the principle they invoke to secure such currency is dangerous centralization when invoked to secure deposits.

But passing by this manifest estoppel, in what way does the proposed measure increase the powers of the National Government or enlarge its denomination of local matters belonging to the domain of the State governments? Under the terms of the proposed measure the National Government does not enter into the banking business at all—and certainly not any more than it does now. It now incorporates national banks, regulates them, and supervises them through the Comptroller of the Currency and by a system of periodical examinations by Federal officers. It provides numerous restrictions and imposes numerous duties upon them—such as prescribing the reserves they shall carry to protect their depositors; limiting the amount they may loan to any one borrower, the character of paper they shall deal in, and the kind of security they shall accept; making the stockholders liable to assessment by the Government to the full face value of their stock for the protection of depositors and all other creditors, and many, many others—all of which are designed for the better security of the public which deals with them. And why should not the Government add the additional safeguard of requiring them to provide this additional security for the public, their customers, especially since experience has shown existing precautions and safeguards to be inadequate? The simple truth is, the measure proposed for the further protection of depositors is nothing more than a reasonable supplement to the existing national banking law, which experience has shown to be imperatively demanded; and it can not be branded as centralization unless the same condemnation is to be placed upon the whole national banking system.

Whether the adoption of the present national-banking system was wise or unwise in the beginning is not a question within the purview of this discussion; but very certain it is that so long as it exists the country can not be injured, but must be greatly advantaged by making the system better and more safe and secure, as it is one of the most important instrumentalities and means of the nation's business, trade, and commerce.

And whatever may be thought of the note-issuing feature of our national-banking system, it is quite certain that the country is not going back to the old State bank-note system of antebellum days. The paper money of the country has been completely nationalized, so that any bill is as good as any other in any part of the country. Public sentiment will certainly not tolerate any recession from this principle of uniformity of value in the circulating medium, whether in future it shall be issued partly by the Government and partly by the national banks as at present, or wholly by the one or the other; in any event it must, as I think, be backed by the Government.

Since the blessings of a government-secured currency have proved to be so great as to commit the country to it irrevocably, I can see no reason why a government-secured and uniformly good deposit slip will not prove an equal blessing. I think an absolutely assured safe and sound system of banks is just as important and desirable as a safe and sound currency, and when the country shall have secured both it may then, and not till then, hope to see an end of panics.

3. It has been objected, in some quarters, that the measure proposed, being such an enormous task, will weaken and impair our national credit with foreign nations.

From the statistics which have been given in these letters, it is apparent that the objectors who urge this objection have only caught on to the tail, or snout, or some other extremity of the elephant, and have no conception of the whole animal.

The ground of the objection is so obviously attenuated and insubstantial that it seems scarcely to merit serious consideration. It is enough, or ought to be enough, to remind the objector that the measure proposed means, in effect, the guaranty of all national bank deposits by all national banks, by means of a fund contributed by them in easy small payments and placed in the hands of the Government for that purpose. The Government is the receiver of the fund, and pays it out where necessary, with full power to compel the banks to replenish it from time to time. There is no possible element of danger to the Government, for it can lose nothing except upon the impossible supposition of the simultaneous failure of all, or at least the greater part of all, of the national banks.

4. Lastly, it is said by some that the making of all deposits in all national banks equally secure will be of evil consequence; that such a condition of affairs will take away the advantage held by the large banks in the money centers over the smaller banks in the interior and remoter sections; that it will enable the small banks in the remote sections where money is comparatively scarce and interest rates high, to invade the money centers where money is abundant and the interest rates low, and there secure deposits by bidding up the rates paid depositors, and thus draw away deposits from the money centers and large banks to the interior and remoter sections and smaller banks.

Well, whether any such effect would follow or not, I will not undertake to affirm or deny; but if so, I do confidently affirm that nothing more fortunate to the country at large could possible happen. If the national guaranty of deposits will have that effect, then it ought to be adopted for that reason if for no other; for, confessedly, the concentration of the money and wealth of the country about certain centers is one of the great curses of our times. It fosters veritable hotbeds of corruption, which are a stench in the nostrils of honest people and continually threaten the very existence of free government, to say nothing of the inevitable lowering of the standard of citizenship and the tendency to convert the people, about such centers especially, into a heartless, conscienceless mob in a mad riot for fortune. It was of such things the poet wrote—

"Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
When wealth accumulates and men decay."

What the public interest needs is a just and proper distribution of the money available for business—not its concentration at a few places or in a few banks. If rates of interest are higher at some places than others, it is because money is relatively scarcer and more needed for development or other business purposes at the former places; and by the universal law of trade it ought to be permitted to go there, unhampered by conditions created by law, until that demand is satisfied. When that demand is satisfied interest rates will fall, and ultimately such rates will be practically uniform everywhere. This is exactly what the country needs. Then business can proceed, hampered only by such inequalities as nature and location have imposed. Then, so far as money and banking questions are concerned, the law will have applied the true maxim of government, "equal and exact justice to all; special privileges to none."

In my next I shall consider briefly the subject of postal savings banks.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I requested Judge Pitts to prepare and send me a measure reflecting his views on the subject of the guaranty of deposits in national banks, and this morning received from him the following bill:

A bill to further secure the prompt payment of deposits in national banks.

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of providing a fund for the immediate payment of all deposits subject to check, except as hereinafter provided, in any and all national banks which shall, after the 1st day of July, 1908, become insolvent or be unable to pay its or their said deposits, in whole or in part, there shall be levied upon each and every national bank in existence and doing business on that day and on the same day in each year thereafter a sum equal to one-twentieth of 1 per cent of its average daily deposits subject to check for the year next preceding, or such part of the year as any such national bank shall have been in existence and doing business; and such average daily deposits shall be determined by dividing the aggregate balance of deposits subject to check appearing on the books and records of the bank at the close of each business day by the whole number of business days on which the bank was open and doing business: Provided, That deposits subject to check, within the meaning of this act, shall include all such deposits, whether by individuals, firms, banks, or other corporations, except moneys of the United States Treasury in excess of 25 per cent of the capital stock of the bank.

SEC. 2. That on the last day of June, in the year 1908, and in each year thereafter, unless the same be a legal holiday, and, in that case, on the next preceding business day, each and every national bank shall make out and transmit to the Comptroller of the Currency a true statement, verified by the oath of the cashier and at least two directors, showing (1) the aggregate amount of its deposits subject to check, as defined in the first section of this act, for all days on which it was open and doing business during the preceding year; (2) the number of days it was open and doing business during the preceding year; and (3) the daily average amount of such deposits for each of such days; and shall at the same time transmit to the Treasurer of the United States a sum equal to one-twentieth of 1 per cent of such daily average amount of deposits, either in lawful money or by draft, payable to the Treasurer free of deduction for exchange or cost of collection.

SEC. 3. That the moneys so paid into the Treasury under this act shall be designated "deposit guaranty fund," shall be kept separate and apart from other funds of the Treasury, and used only for the purpose declared in this act, and for no other purpose.

SEC. 4. That when said deposit guaranty fund shall be accumulated in the Treasury to such aggregate sum as shall equal one-half of 1 per cent of all deposits subject to check in all national banks, as defined in this act, then no further payments shall be required of the banks until by disbursements in accordance with this act or by increase of such deposits in the banks, said fund shall become and be less than one-half of 1 per cent of all such deposits, when, and in which event, on notice to the banks by the Comptroller of the Currency, payments as provided in the second section of this act shall be resumed: Provided, Any payment called for by the Comptroller of the Currency under the provisions of this section shall be based on the average daily deposits shown in the next preceding reports of the banks: Provided, further, Said deposit guaranty fund shall not at any time exceed in the aggregate six-tenths of 1 per cent of the aggregate deposits subject to check in all national banks which are protected by this act.

SEC. 5. That the deposit guaranty fund may be loaned out or deposited in banks by the Treasurer, but only on demand and at interest and on the security of United States bonds; and such loans or deposits shall be made only in the following manner: The Treasurer shall make publication for twenty days of the amount in his hand subject to loan, from time to time as loans are desired, and that he will receive bids therefor; and loans shall be awarded to such persons, firms, and corporations as shall offer the highest rate of lawful interest, payable quarterly, and secure same by deposit of United States bonds at the rate of not less than $100 of bonds for each $90 of loan. All interest collected upon such loans shall be covered into the Treasury as part of the deposit guaranty fund.

SEC. 6. That whenever, after the 1st day of July, 1908, and national bank shall become insolvent or be unable to pay its deposits subject to check, in the ordinary course of business, it shall be the duty of the Comptroller of the Currency, in addition to the duties now devolved upon him by law with reference to insolvent or failed banks, to immediately cause to be paid in full from the deposit guaranty fund all deposits subject to check in such bank, as defined in the first section of this act; and for this purpose the Comptroller of the Currency is authorized to draw his order or orders or warrant or warrants upon the Treasurer, payable out of said deposit guaranty fund. The necessary expenses of liquidation of such bank shall be paid as now provided by law in cases of insolvent or failed banks; and after the resources of such bank have been realized, including the liability of its stockholders, and all its other liabilities paid, the surplus which shall remain, to the extent of the moneys paid to its depositors out of the deposit guaranty fund with interest thereon from date of payment at the lawful rate at its place of business, shall be covered into the Treasury as a part of the said deposit guaranty fund, and any balance that may remain shall be returned to the bank or its stockholders: Provided, Any bank whose deposits have been paid out of the deposit guaranty fund under the provisions of this act, on fully reimbursing said fund for the amount so paid, with lawful interest, and otherwise complying with the laws and regulations in reference to failed or suspended banks, shall be entitled to resume business.

SEC. 7. That time deposits, not subject to immediate check, and deposits of United States Treasury funds in excess of 25 per cent of the paid in capital stock of the bank holding same, shall not be entitled to the benefits of this act; but in the distribution of the assets of all insolvent or failed national banks, all creditors of whatever class shall participate as now provided by law, the deposit guaranty fund being treated as a creditor to the extent of the moneys paid therefrom to depositors.

SEC. 8. That nothing in this act shall be taken, held, or construed as implying or fixing any liability or undertaking on the part of the United States to guarantee deposits in any national bank beyond the amount of the deposit guaranty fund in its hands, and it is hereby declared that the extent of the obligations of the United States is to enforce this act.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COX.]

Mr. COX of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee, for the past month it strikes me that everything which has occurred from the birth of Adam down to the execution of Midgetts has been discussed in this House. [Applause.] Being a new Member, Mr. Chairman, I invite your attention for a few moments to some of the questions now before the American people. I can not enter upon a discussion of what I have to say, Mr. Chairman, without replying to some of the things set forth by the President in his recent message. I was one of the men on this side of the House who applauded certain parts of the message. I did not do it, Mr. Chairman, as a Democrat, nor did I do it because it came from a Republican President; but I did it under the profound belief that it enunciated certain principles that if enacted into law would redound to the interest of the masses of the people of this country.

I am in hearty accord with the President's message in what he says in reference to the coemployees' liability act. Under the rules of common law, that has been in force not only in our Federal courts, but in the majority of our State courts of the Union ever since 1837, time and again, and it has been next to an impossibility for a deserving employee to recover from his employer, because he was met with the proposition at the very threshold of his case that—

You were a fellow-servant of the man at the time you were hurt; therefore you can not recover.

The idea of any law in this country holding that an operator, a section man, and a man upon a train are fellow-servants is absurd!

The idea of a law in this country holding that an operator, a section man, or a man working upon a train to be fellow-servants and thereby preventing recovery is absurd. There may be some things embraced in this law of doubtful propriety, but still it embraces a principle of law that is absolutely right, and I believe ought to be enacted into legislation. If a suit is brought in the various State courts under this Federal coemployees' liability law against carriers doing an interstate business, I believe that a removal would lie from the circuit courts of the States to the Federal courts of the United States, and to meet this objection I believe the law relating to the removal of causes from the various courts of the States to the Federal courts ought to be amended. For nearly one hundred years the jurisdiction of the Federal courts was fixed at $500. In 1887 the act was amended. The amount in controversy was fixed at $2,000. In the past twenty years the volume of business in this country has increased at least fivefold, and in my judgment the law ought to be amended so as to fix the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in all amounts in controversy at not less than $10,000. This would give an employee engaged at work upon carriers engaged in interstate commerce a right of action under the Federal statute in the State courts, and it would prevent removals to the Federal courts in all cases where the amount in controversy did not exceed $10,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am further in favor of active legislation along the line of the President's message regarding anti-injunction. [Applause.] I believe that before even a temporary restraining order should be issued notice should be served upon the parties. This was the law of this country for nearly one hundred years, and in my judgment ought to be the law now. With these two recommendations made by the President I heartily agree, not as a Democrat, but because as a citizen of this country I believe that if these measures are enacted into laws they would be of great benefit to the masses of the people. I further believe that the question of indirect contempt should be submitted to a jury for trial. No one should ever fear to submit his cause to a jury of his peers. And when you deprive a man of this right you deprive him of one of his inherent rights guaranteed to him by the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words this evening on the tariff question.

There is no question in which the American people are more interested than the question of taxation. Around this one question centers all our social and political fabric. Without some system of government taxation no civilized government could exist. With an unjust system of taxation the question remains, How long can any government organized by law exist? That all governments need some kind of a system of taxation for the purpose of raising revenues to meet their required expenditures no one denies, but all admit. I recognize the fact, because it is a fact, that it is practically as impossible to get perfection in a law enacted by man as it is to get perfection in man himself. This being true, we can only adopt the conservative plan and reach as near perfection in our law as is possible for us to do.

Therefore in framing all laws by all lawmaking bodies the one great cardinal principle that should ever guide them is to so frame laws that they will inure to the benefit of the greatest number and at the same time protect the interests of the minority, provided it is entitled to protection. In a young, growing, undeveloped country, such as ours, laws to govern it are subject to a constantly growing science. What would have been a law sufficient to meet the demands of this country one hundred years ago may not be at all adapted for it to-day, and vice versa. Therefore our tariff law being under the supervision and control of Congress, if it does not meet the ends for which it was designed, it is our duty to amend it and bring it within the required demands of the people.

I do not desire to array class against class or section against section—far from it; but I propose on this line to present a few facts, with a view of seeing whether or not this was the principle upon which our present tariff laws were enacted or if they were guided in the making of this law by the contrary principle of legislating in the interest of the few to the detriment of the many.

Knowing the necessity of raising money for the purpose of meeting the expenditures of the Government, the framers of the Constitution, among other things, provided that Congress should have power to collect taxes, duties, imposts, excises, etc.

Under this constitutional provision Congress has from time to time, since the year 1791, on down to the passage of the Dingley law in 1897, imposed a duty upon certain goods manufactured abroad and imported into this country. Under this provision, since its adoption, there has been in this country, headed by two great political parties, two well-defined policies. One of these policies, headed by a strong political party, has contended that it had a right to enact a law not only for the purpose of raising revenue to support the Government, but along protective lines as well; the other party contending that under it a duty could only be laid for the purpose of raising revenue to support the Government of the United States, economically administered.

While the Constitution gives Congress the power to lay and collect duties upon foreign manufactured goods imported into this country, it does not give to Congress or to any party the right to distort this power into a policy which works to the interest of the few to the detriment of the many.

Mr. Chairman, the Constitution also provides that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and as a corollary to this proposition it is equally clear that private property can not be taken for private use under any circumstances by due process of law or otherwise. Therefore, if under our present or past protective tariff laws, framed under this constitutional provision, a right is given by the Federal Government to impose such duties upon foreign manufactured goods imported into this country that private property is taken for private use, such taking has been a wrongful taking, and under no principle can it be defended.

That the present existing tariff law is unjust and ought to be amended so as to give every man, as far as possible, a square deal and prevent the taking of private property for private purposes is conceded by all, with few exceptions.

The arguments heretofore advanced for protection by the Republican party has been solely on the side of the corporations and trusts, and of the larger class at that; the supposed benefits growing out of protection have all been held up in the interest of these institutions.

To-day another class of people are talking tariff reform in this country, who, until recently, were scarcely heard in this field of discussion. It is the farmer, the laboring man, the consumer, and the smaller manufacturers, who are now loud in their denunciation of the present tariff laws, demanding its immediate revision.

The Democratic party stands to-day on this question where it has stood for the past forty years. It stands in open opposition to a high protective tariff. It stands in open opposition to all unlawful combinations and trusts, organized under the Dingley law or otherwise, designed to crush out competition and fix the price not only of their manufactured commodities, but of all raw material entering into the cost of manufacturing. It stands as the open champion of tariff reform. It stands upon the benign principle of the greatest good to the greatest number. It stands for the needs of the present hour and says, "Now is the accepted time to revise the tariff." [Applause.] The Republican party, on the other hand, has always been the champion of high protection, yet to-day it is showing signs of receding from its former position upon this subject. One man, high in the councils of the Republican party, an avowed candidate for the Presidency of the United States, says he believes the tariff ought to be revised; but he also says: "Wait until after the election of 1908." Still another, high in the councils of his party, in my State, says he believes it ought to be revised, but he believes that a commission ought to be appointed for this purpose. Why wait until after the election of 1908? Is it for fear that a revision of it will injure the masses of the people now staggering under this unequal load of oppression? Or is it for fear that a revision of the tariff at this session of Congress would destroy his chance of being elected President in the fall of 1908, in the event he should receive the nomination at the hands of his party? Or may it not be for the more subtle reason and hope that after election the masses of the people can be whitewashed by the passage of some pretended revision of our present existing tariff laws? Why appoint a commission to investigate this matter? It is a political question, pure and simple. Is it because you do not believe you have the ability to revise it, or is it rather because you hope that if you can succeed in getting a commission appointed to investigate this matter, then, if the people are not satisfied with the revision, you can throw the responsibility back upon their shoulders? The people will not let you whitewash them in any such manner as this! [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, the tariff will be revised early in 1909. We are going to elect William J. Bryan this fall President of the United States and get control of this House of Representatives, organize the Ways and Means Committee with a view of revising the tariff, and then, true to our promises and pledges made to the people, we will revise it as they want it revised, unless the United States Senate refuses to do its part in the way of revising it. [Applause.] What assurances have the people that you would revise it after the election of 1908, if you should be returned to power? None whatever.

To admit that our present tariff laws ought to be amended is an argument, and a strong one, that the law as it now stands is wrong; to admit that it ought to be amended and revised, and then refuse to amend and revise it, is, in my judgment, the worst element of bad faith and should characterize the party in power as being unwilling to amend the law as it now is and unwilling to heed the cries of the people asking for its amendment and revision.

For years and years the Republican party has rung down the curtain all over this country that the panic of 1893 was due to a revision of our then existing tariff law. The history upon this subject is that the panic was on in full blast for more than fourteen months before the Wilson bill became a law. The loudest advocates of protection go so far as to say that it was for fear of a reformation of the tariff laws that the manufacturers and corporations of the country, long in advance of the time when the tariff was revised, brought the house down upon their own heads. Just as well may the argument be advanced that a man for fear that his house was going to be robbed burned it down for the purpose of preventing the robbery. [Applause.] In every campaign following the revision of the tariff in 1894 the Republican party has never tired of keeping in the foreground the panic of 1893 as one of the inevitable results following the tariff revision of 1892, when, in truth, the revision of the tariff in 1894 had no more to do with bringing on the panic than a South Sea Islander had.

If the election of Grover Cleveland in 1892, and the control of this House by the Democratic party, and the revision of the tariff following his election, one and all contributed to bring on the panic, then, my Republican friends on that side of the House, let me ask you, What was the cause of the panic in the fall of 1907, through which we are still traveling?

Was it due to the fact that your candidate for President says he is in favor of tariff revision, but wants it postponed until after the election of 1908? Was it for fear that others were saying it ought to be revised by a commission, or was it due to the demand of the farmers over the country, who are now insisting upon an immediate revision of the present unwise and discriminatory tariff law?

If you still insist that the panic of 1893 was due to the revision of the tariff which did not occur until 1894, by the same argument we would have the right to insist that the present panic was due to the demand for present revision of the tariff by your candidate for President and by the manufacturers, boards of trade, farmers, and consumers all over the country. We denied that the revision of the tariff of 1894 had anything to do with the panic of 1893, and we now deny that the present talk for tariff revision had anything whatever to do with the present panic. If every time the business man, the laborer, the farmer, the consumer, feeling the heavy burdens of an unjust tariff, talks and speaks for a revision of the law a panic must be brought on by the possessors of predatory wealth, gotten by means of a law showing the worst degree of favoritism that was ever shown by any law passed by this Government, then, indeed, we are in a deplorable condition, and the sooner we meet the issue the better for all concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I imagine that no more will we hear the story of the panic of 1893 heralded by the Republican party in any future campaign. I would sooner think that the farther you can get away from panics and the argument relating thereto the better satisfied you will be. [Applause.] The panic now on and through which we are just traveling can not be due to any free-trade scare. Was it due to the fact that on our statute books there is to-day a statute imposing a duty of more than 50 per cent upon all foreign-manufactured goods imported into this country? In loss of property and shrinkage of values the panic of 1907 far eclipsed the panic of 1893. It required the issuance of nearly $100,000,000 worth of clearing-house certificates, circulating as mediums of exchange, and, in addition to this, the dumping into Wall street banks by the Secretary of the United States Treasury more than $66,000,000 of the people's money with rush orders for gold from abroad. And, in spite of all this, with the newspapers and magazines of the country working overtime, telling the people "not to be alarmed," that "the worst was over," and that "business had resumed its normal condition;" still there was a loss of property and shrinkage in the values of securities in the United States of more than thirty-five hundred millions of dollars. [Applause.]

With your tariff law building a wall around us so high that in comparison with our natural resources given us by the all-wise and good God, in connection with the energy, industry, and initiative of the American people, it is and was well-nigh prohibitory.

Mr. Chairman, if I could make up my mind that a high protective tariff was for the best interests of all the people, unhesitatingly, as an American citizen desirous of doing the greatest good to the greatest number, I would unfalteringly support such a policy. I am unable to subscribe myself to the doctrine of high protection, because I am unable to see how any system of taxation inuring to the benefit of the few will bring wealth and prosperity to the masses of the people who "eat bread by the sweat of their brow." If the prosperous condition of our country prior to the present panic was due solely to high protection, as we are told it was by the protectionists and protectionist Congress, why not go a step further (indeed, we would not have much further to go) and apply the rule of exclusion? Why not prohibit all importation of foreign manufactured goods into this country absolutely? Why not say to the world: "We will do our own spinning and toiling. We want none of your interference in our affairs whatever." If the principle upon which you base your argument is sound—that a high protective tariff is always conducive to prosperity—the same principle ought to uphold itself to the end of the reason. There is no half-way place in your argument. It is either all one way or all the other. It is either right or it is wrong If it is right it ought to stand up under the argument of exclusion, and if it will not stand up under this argument it is wrong on principle; and if wrong on principle then the right thing to do is to formulate a law that will stand under the close scrutiny of careful analytical arguments.

If our prosperity in this country prior to the present panic was due to the policy of the Republican party in favoring a high protective tariff, why the almost universal demand going on for a revision of it, especially among the boot and shoe manufacturers of the New England States, including a large number of smaller manufacturing concerns in the United States? Why are the farmers over this country asking for a revision of the tariff, particularly in the West and Northwest, including such States as Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, and my own State, Indiana? One of the most sensitive parts about all of us is our pocketbook. This is human selfishness, but it is one of the best traits of selfishness that God has planted in the breasts of us all. A full pocketbook produced by honest toil is always conducive to happiness, and if the farmer, the laboring man, the manufacturer, who are as capable of judging of their own prosperity, and much more so than any other person, believe that it would add to their prosperity to continue the policy of high protection, instead of asking that the tariff law be amended and revised, with one accord they would stand for it to be raised instead of lowered.

Mr. Chairman, our Republican friends, especially the "stand-patters," would not believe a Democrat or a Democratic argument, though one should rise from the grave and tell it to them, but out of the mouths of some of the ablest men in your party to-day you shall stand rebuked and condemned in the presence of this mighty army of men and women who are asking a revision of the tariff laws, so that equal and exact justice may be given to them freely, "without purchase," and "speedily, without delay." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, Governor Cummins, a Republican, who has had the honor of thrice being elected governor of the great State of Iowa, in speaking upon this subject of tariff reform not long ago, said:

> All the robberies and thefts committed by all the insurance companies' officers since the business of life insurance originated do not amount to the extortion due to the Dingley bill for one year.

What an appalling statement! To the gentlemen on the other side, is this true, or would you characterize Governor Cummings as a dreamer? [Applause.] Mark you, this is a declaration coming from a live Republican, high in the councils of his party. Do you, my Republican friends, believe this statement to be true? If so, are you going to let this Congress adjourn without at least attempting to rectify and correct this collossal wrong? At this time I do not have the data at hand showing out of how much money the people have been wronged by the officers of all the life insurance companies since the origin of life insurance business, but suffice it to say that it has cost them countless millions of dollars.

While the life insurance companies have done an immense amount of good for the people, in coming to the rescue of many widows and orphans, yet the officers and men in charge of these life insurance companies have mercilessly plundered the people of their wealth. The investigation of the New York life insurance companies two years ago revealed an appalling state of affairs for rottenness, theft, robbery, and corruption; so much so that it startled the millions of policy holders of these companies throughout Europe and America. Its revelations were so startling that before the investigation was completed one of the presidents of one of these companies, unable longer to stand the disgrace, died. Others became exiles in foreign countries. Just a few days ago I read in one of the newspapers that one of the former presidents of one of the New York life insurance companies was returning home, broken in health, spirit, and power. The victims of his robbery had haunted him whither he went, in Europe or Asia. Longer unable to endure the strain, he set his face toward the setting sun, to return to his old home, where but a few years ago he held undisputed power at the carnival board of robbery in one of the great New York life insurance companies. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, if all the robberies and thefts committed by all the officers of all the life insurance companies since the business of life insurance first began does not equal the extortion due to the Dingley bill for one year, then think of the robbery and extortion that has been going on in this country for the past ten years, during the time the Dingley bill has been in force.

The amassing of immense wealth into the hands of a few individuals, corporations, trusts, or combinations does not bespeak for the universal wealth, universally distributed, which is the true and lasting wealth that does bring happiness and prosperity to all the inhabitants of the country; but, on the other hand, rather bespeaks for that dangerous centralized wealth, always inimical to the general welfare of all the people. The substrata upon which all wealth is based is the laboring man. No matter what his occupation or station in life be, if he be a producer of something of value, every item of his product adds so much to the wealth of the country.

Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of make-believe that prosperity is abroad in the land, arguments are made here by the gentlemen on that side of the House, and by the Republican newspapers throughout the country, that the past decade has been an era of great prosperity, and one of the cogent arguments in support of this proposition is the vast accumulation of wealth by the trusts and combinations of the country. One of the dangers to any country having a high protective tariff policy is that a few men of wealth, by combining their capital and energy, secure complete control of the wealth of the country. This is exactly what has happened under the operation of the Dingley bill. Mr. Chairman, the fathers of your protective tariff policy believed entirely different, and believed that while protection would protect us against foreign competition, yet they equally believed that home competition would prevent combinations and keep prices down for the consumer. In speaking of this very subject in 1889, John Sherman, then a Republican Senator from Ohio, said:

> The primary object of a protective tariff is to secure the fullest competition by individuals and corporations in domestic production. If such individuals or corporations combine to advance the price of the domestic product and to prevent the free result of open and fair competition, I would, without a moment's hesitation, reduce the duties of foreign goods competing with them, in order to break down the combination.

James G. Blaine, in his Twenty Years in Congress, says:

> Protection in the perfection of its design does not invite competition from abroad, but is based on the contrary principle that competition at home will always prevent monopoly on the part of capitalists, assure good wages to the laboring man, and defend the consumers against the evil of extortion.

Andrew Carnegie, writing for the American Manufacturer, of Pittsburg, July 5, 1884, says:

> We are the creatures of the tariff; and if ever the steel manufacturers here attempt to control or have any general understanding among them, the tariff would not exist one session of Congress. The theory of protection is that home competition will soon reduce the price of the product so it will yield only the usual profit. Any understanding among us would simply attempt to defeat this. There never has been nor ever will be such an understanding.

How different to the expectation of these great men have the conditions in this country changed since their prophetic prophecies. During the first three years of the operation of the Dingley tariff law 149 industrial corporations were combined, with a total capitalization of $5,364,000,000, or an average of nearly $36,000,000 each. I do not have a complete list of all the trusts formed since the Dingley bill became a law, but I submit a few.

TARIFF A BREEDER OF TRUSTS.

The American Linseed Company, combining forty-seven different companies, with an authorized capital stock of $50,000,000, representing 85 per cent of the linseed-oil productions of the United States, and in the domination of the Standard Oil Company.

The National Lead Company, with an authorized capital stock of $30,000,000, comprising twenty-six plants, and under the domination of the Standard Oil Company.

The United Lead Company, combining nineteen different companies, and also under the domination of the Standard Oil Company.

The American Sugar Refinery, controlling fifty-five different companies, representing from 70 to 90 per cent of the product, with a total capital issue of the parent and affiliated companies of $145,000,000.

The International Harvester Company, controlling six plants, with an authorized capitalization of $120,000,000, controlling 70 per cent of the industry.

The American Brass Company, with an authorization of $20,000,000, and controlling nine plants.

The American Thread Company, with an authorized capitalization of $12,000,000, owning or controlling thirteen different plants, controlling 50 per cent of the industry.

The Casein Company of America, known as the "milk-sugar trust," with a total capital issue of $6,492,000, owning five different plants, and controlling 70 per cent of the industry.

The Chicago Pneumatic Tube Company, with a capitalization of $8,000,000, owning seven plants, and controlling 80 per cent of the industry.

The Central Foundry Company, known as the "soil pipe trust," with a capitalization of $14,000,000, owning thirteen plants and controlling 80 per cent of the industry.

The Diamond Match Company, with an authorized capital stock of $15,000,000, owning eighteen plants and controlling 85 per cent of the industry.

The International Steam Pump Company, known as the "steam pump trust," with an authorized capital of $2,500,000, owning eight plants and controlling 80 per cent of the product.

The General Chemical Company, with an authorized capital of $25,000,000, controlling 70 per cent of the trade and twenty-four chemical plants.

The American Woolen Company, with a capital of $25,000,000 of preferred stock and $40,000,000 common stock, having about thirty plants and controlling upwards of 60 per cent of the sales.

The California Fruit Canners' Association, with a capital stock of $3,500,000, including eighteen different companies and controlling 65 per cent of the trade.

The glucose trust, controlling five companies and twenty plants, including the National Storage Company and the Illinois Sugar Refining Company, having an authorized capital stock of $30,000,000 preferred and $50,000,000 common stock and controlling a large part of the sales of the United States.

The candy trust, with a capital stock of $9,000,000, including sixteen different plants and controlling over 55 per cent of the sales of candy.

The National Enameling and Stamping Company, having a capital stock of $30,000,000 and controlling thirteen plants and 55 per cent of the industry.

The glassware trust, with an authorized capital stock of $5,500,000, having nineteen plants and controlling 70 per cent of the sale of glassware.

The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, having a capital stock of $50,000,000 and seventeen plants, controlling 60 per cent of the sales.

The United Button Company, having a capital stock of $3,000,000 and controlling three plants.

The Æolian Weber Piano and Pianola Company, having a capital stock of $10,000,000 and owning twelve plants.

The Allis-Chalmers Company, known as the "machinery trust," having a capital stock of $36,250,000, controlling four large plants and 50 per cent of the trade.

The American Agricultural Chemical Company, known as the "fertilizer trust," having a capital stock of $35,000,000 and forty fertilizer plants.

The American Can Company, known as the "tin can trust," closely allied with the American Tinplate Company, having a capital of $88,000,000 and 123 plants and controlling 75 per cent of the trade.

The American Cement Company, known as the "cement trust," having a capital of about $2,000,000 and controlling six plants.

The American Cotton Oil Company, known as the "cotton oil trust," having a capital stock of $33,000,000 and thirty plants and controlling 65 per cent of the industry.

The American Felt Company, known as the "American felt trust," having a capital of about $4,000,000 and five plants, controlling 65 per cent of the industry.

The American Glue Company, having a capital stock of about $3,000,000 and nine plants, controlling 55 per cent of the industry.

The American Hide and Leather Company, having a capital stock of $32,000,000 and twenty-two plants, controlling 60 per cent of the industry.

The American Radiator Company, having an authorized capital stock of about $10,000,000 and twelve plants, and controlling 80 per cent of the industry.

The American Seeding Company, known as the "seeding machine trust," having an authorized capital of $15,000,000 and six plants, controlling 90 per cent of the trade.

The American Sewer Pipe Company, having an authorized capital of $8,000,000 and controlling from 40 to 50 per cent of the industry.

This list, while far from giving all the combinations, yet it represents a total of 655 corporations now merged into thirty-three corporations or trusts. In this list I have not enumerated the United States Steel Corporation, the greatest of them all, and which is capitalized at the enormous figure of $1,404,000,000, in the year 1900, its alleged capitalization representing one-sixty-seventh per cent of the total wealth of all the United States and producing one-tenth of its entire manufactures. If its stocks and bonds had been issued in the shape of $90 shares, there would have been one for each family of the United States, or if their face value had been divided among the people, there would have been at the time of its formation about $18 for each man, woman, and child in the United States, or about 90 cents for each man, woman, and child on the face of the earth.

Will it be supposed or argued that the consolidation of these 655 industrial corporations into 33 trusts and combinations were organized and consolidated for the benefit of the masses of the people? I imagine no one will have the temerity for a moment to contend that the purpose of consolidating all of these corporations into these few trusts and combinations was for the purpose of benefiting the masses of the people.

OUR DUTY IS TO LOWER TARIFF ON TRUST-MADE ARTICLES.

Mr. Chairman, I am not opposing corporations, but, on the contrary, am at all times willing to defend them when they are in the right, but when they are in the wrong I want to record myself upon the side of the people in the open opposition to all corporations and combinations combined for unlawful purposes. Nor do I wish to be understood as saying that even all of these corporations are to-day grinding the people between the upper and nether millstones of protection, but I do say that a majority of them are to-day extorting from the people vast sums of money to which they are not in any way entitled.

Corporations have exactly the same rights as individuals and no more. Neither individuals nor corporations have any right by combining their wealth unlawfully and taking advantage of either natural or artificial conditions, made so by law, to impose a burden upon the masses of the people, and every time they do it they are violating natural as well as legal rights, and this is what the trusts of this country have been doing for the past decade, regardless of law—moral, statutory, or otherwise. But we have an anomalous condition of affairs in this country. We surround ourselves with a stone wall of protection by means of a high tariff, giving to the trusts the power to combine and control the law of competition, which such men as Sherman, Blaine, and Carnegie thought would prevent combinations and keep prices down to the consumer, and then pass a stringent antitrust law. You say by your acts that you are going to create a condition that if you want to take advantage of it by combinations you can do so, and you can rob the people of their hard-earned money and amass a fortune in a few years, but if you do we will prosecute you for this violation of the law.

Is not this exactly what has occurred in this country for the past fifteen years or more, and is it not just what is occurring now throughout the country? Instead of mulcting these combinations in large fines and costs, perchance imposing a burden upon innocent stockholders, would not it be better for us to revise our tariff laws, and revise them in such a way as to render it well-nigh impossible for these unlawful combinations to exist? It strikes me that it would. It looks to me that it would be a sane thing for us to do. The people are unable to cope with these institutions, and it looks like the Department of Justice is not making much headway against them, although the country is occasionally treated with flaring headlines of some newspaper that the beef trust, or the Standard Oil Company, etc., has been fined for a violation of the antitrust laws. But still these "monsters" go on, year in and year out, openly defying law and order. There is one way to forever settle this question and settle it right, and that is by either reducing the tariff on all articles manufactured by the trusts, or if this will not bring about relief put the same articles on the free list. While this would not root out the entire evil, yet it would largely mitigate it, at least as to all trusts that owe their allegiance to the Dingley bill. But our protective friends say this would not do, because it would affect the wages paid the employees working in manufacturing plants controlled by the trusts.

TARIFF GRAFT.

High wages or low wages in this country do not depend upon a high or low tariff, but depend upon conditions over which no tariff law has any control whatever. The Government has waged prosecutions against some of the trusts and corporations engaged in interstate commerce, which have violated some of the antitrust laws, until the aggregate fines imposed upon the corporations amount to upward of $30,000,000. While I think these fines were just and righteous, yet I do not think they will have the desired effect. I do not believe that this will give proper relief. I am in favor not only of imposing a fine upon the trusts, but of using all the judicial machinery of the Government against the heads of these institutions—the men who openly take advantage of the law for the purpose of enriching themselves at the expense of the masses.

A sentence in the State prison for one or all of the Standard Oil Company magnates, who for years and years have been robbing the people and devastating the field of competition by their unlawful combination, until to-day it can control enough wealth to bring the wheels of the Government to a standstill, would stop such oppressive giants as this great octopus. A prison sentence of some of the great packing interests of the country that for years have been controlling the prices of the farmer's products and the price of their commodities to the consumers will be equally as effective as against this class of greedy cormorants. Yet all of this is going on under a law that makes it possible for these barnacles that have fastened themselves upon us to exist, when by reducing the duty upon these things will make it practically impossible for them to exist.

Mr. Chairman, no wonder the President in his recent message is crying out against predatory wealth, unjustly and unlawfully accumulated. It is time that some one on the Republican side has the moral courage to rise above the rancor of party spirit and cry out against the gatherers of unlawful wealth.

The man of wealth is just as much entitled to the protection of the law as the man of no wealth, and the big corporation is just as much entitled to the protection of the law as the small corporation, but the big or the little man, or corporation, that is not doing an honest business, but who has taken advantage of existing conditions, either natural or legal, has placed himself beyond the pale of law. I have no means of estimating the amount of graft taken from the people by means of the Dingley bill since it has become a law. Byron W. Holt, on the 25th of October, 1907, before the National Civic Federation, at Chicago, said that:

> Prices have risen in this country in the past ten years about 55 per cent, and prices have risen in England during the same period 35 per cent. To be perfectly safe, suppose we credit only 15 per cent of this rise in prices to our tariff and tariff trusts. We probably consume about $14,000,000,000 in a year. Fifteen per cent of $14,000,000,000 is $2,100,000,000, the amount of the tariff trust graft. Estimated in other ways, and especially by considering the tariff duties on each item and the difference between foreign and domestic prices, it appears that the tariff graft is fully $1,500,000,000.

If this be true, and I have no doubt it is, no wonder Governor Cummins made the astounding statement that he did. No wonder that President Roosevelt in his recent message calls the attention of Congress to the trust conditions of the country and says that "the time has come when Congress must in some way assume control over these great institutions." [Applause.]

The trusts, by means of the duty on all foreign manufactured goods, get control of the raw material, and then limiting the output by this means they control the law of supply and demand—the very thing the forefathers of protection thought would never occur. By this means the prices of nearly all of the necessaries of life are placed as completely in their control as though the entire matter was in the hands of one concern. Soon after their organization prices of the prime necessaries of life soared 25, some 50, and others 100 per cent. The price of wire nails went up from $1.40 per keg in July, 1898, to $2.45 in July, 1899, and $3.30 in January, 1900. The price of barbed wire per hundred pounds went up from $1.80 in July, 1898, to $3.30 in July, 1899, and $4.13 in January, 1900. The price of tin plate went up from $2.85 per hundred pounds in July, 1898, to $4.05 in July, 1899, and $4.84 in January, 1900. The price of steel beams went up from $1.27 in July, 1898, to $2.40 in January, 1900. Statistics of production from the second annual report of the United States Steel Corporation for the two years ending December 31, 1903, are as follows:

Articles.	Productions of 1902-3.	Duty rate per ton.	Tariff profit.
	Tons.
Steel rails	3,855,101	$7.84	$29,635,000
Blooms, billets, slabs, and tin plate bars	1,275,929	$6.72 to $105.48	9,920,000
Plates	1,169,254	$11.20 up	12,850,000
Merchant steel, skelp, shapes, hoops, bands, and cotton ties	2,252,155	$11.20 up	22,520,000
Tubing and pipe	1,539,883	35 to 44.80 per cent	11,800,000
Rods	211,029	$3.93 up	1,800,000
Barb wire	700,000	$28.00	9,600,000
Wire nails	830,000	$11.20 up	8,250,000
Other wire and products	749,414	$33.60 up	8,400,000

EFFECT TARIFF HAS UPON THE EMPLOYEES' WAGES.

All the advocates of protection in the early history of tariff legislation in this country bottomed their argument upon the doctrine that it was needed to protect the infant industries of the country. But scarcely was the infant born when the "wise men of the east" saw its "star" and came to worship where the young child was. [Applause.]

This argument in 1791 was a potent argument. Diversity of industry was one of the essentials necessary to a building up of a great country. At that time we raised substantially all of the agricultural commodities that our people consumed, but articles not grown by the soil and which had to be manufactured we purchased abroad, and for the double purpose of raising revenue and to stimulate our infant industries the enormous protective tariff of 7½ per cent was imposed upon fourteen different articles manufactured abroad and imported into this country. After the infant argument was exhausted and these industries that had for years a high tariff cried out for Congress to protect them against foreign manufacturers, and when they no longer could make the people believe they needed protection or that they were in danger of destruction at the hands of foreign competitors the same institution raised the cry of "bug-a-boo" panper labor of Europe. They cried: "We must protect the laboring man against the pauper labor of Europe," and this argument was heralded broadcast for years and years; and when it was exhausted the policy of protection along these lines was abandoned to a class of selfish persons in this country who did not have the good of the country at heart, or whose hearts did not overflow with pure, unadulterated love for the laboring man, but were guided solely by a selfish purpose, until to-day the "stand-patters" declare for protection because it protects. As I have before said, if I believed it was by means of a high protective tariff that the laboring man of this country received better wages than the same laboring man in other countries engaged in the same kind of labor, I would without a moment's hesitation support such a policy.

So far as the day's wages paid the American employee is concerned, without reference to the cost of living, his earning capacity, or his own personal initiative, I will concede that it is higher than that paid to other employees in other countries engaged in similar occupations; but when the actual wages paid to the American employee, taken in connection with his superior ability over his competitor abroad and in connection with his increased cost of living, I deny the proposition that the American employee is paid better than the same employee abroad engaged in the same line of work. If the enormous profits made by some of the trusts organized under and kept alive by means of the Dingley bill indicate anything, it indicates that all the great trusts and combinations could, if they would, increase the pay of the laboring men very materially.

The bill imposes a duty ranging from 1 to 379 per cent upon articles imported into this country, all of which inures directly to the interest of the manufacturer, and not one penny thereof inures to the benefit of either the laboring man or to the consumer. Not one word in the entire bill requires the manufacturers to increase the wages of their employees in proportion as their profits increase by means thereof. All of this is left to the good will of the employer; and if the numerous strikes, lockouts, and shut downs is any barometer to go by, in the past ten years the manufacturers and the corporations have not been very liberal in the division of their profits with their employees in the way of paying them higher wages; but I admitted a while ago that, so far as dollars and cents were concerned, the wages earned by the employees in manufacturing establishments in this country were better than the wages earned by employees in other countries in similar manufacturing establishments. If this is not due to the Dingley bill, then to what is it due? In answer to this question let me quote some good Republican authority.

M. Leroy Beaulien, an eminent French writer and scientist, living in a high protective tariff country, in speaking of this question, says:

> There can be no question of the industrial primacy which she (the United States) has held probably since an epoch mainly between 1880 and 1900. It can be explained only on the assumption that the American workingman works harder than the workingman of other countries, or that he receives more efficacious assistance from machinery, or that both of these conditions prevail. We are perfectly justified in concluding from that that the work of an American workingman is, on the average, more productive than that of the British workingman and a fortiori than that of any other workingman in the world.
> The value of the products of manufacturers has increased more than sixfold during the last forty years, while at the same time the number of workingmen employed has less than quadrupled. Not only have the great number of laborers, in proportion to output, greatly decreased, but the number of manufacturing plants in 1900 in the steel industry and the plants of building and agricultural machinery have actually decreased in number, though the capital employed has been increased many fold.

Mr. Hill, one time statistician for the State Department at Washington, appointed three expert statisticians to investigate the question of wages in this country, with a view of reporting to the tariff commission of 1882, to see whether or not the duties should be lowered; and, all working in different directions, arrived at the following conclusion: That, according to the American consuls in Great Britain in that year, our 5,250,000 workmen produced double what England did with her 5,140,000 workmen.

In 1878, William M. Evarts, a Republican Secretary of State, reported that—

> The average American workman performs from one and one-half to twice as much work in a given time as the average European workman.

James G. Blaine, while Secretary of State, in 1887, speaking upon this subject, said:

> Undoubtedly the inequality of wages in England and American properties are more than equalized by the greater efficiency of the latter and their longer hours of labor.

Andrew Carnegie said a few years ago:

> It is not the lowest, but the highest, paid labor, with scientific management and machinery, which gives cheapest products. Some of the important staple articles in Britain, Germany, and America are produced cheapest in the last with labor paid double.

Senator BEVERIDGE, in his work entitled "Russian Advance," speaking of the wages in Russian factories, says:

> But low as these wages appear, yet in comparison with some American labor, that is, common working men and women, Russia may truthfully be said to be overpaid. Their wages are less than the wages of the American workingmen, and their working ability still smaller. One can not believe, either, that the Russian working man or woman for a long time will be as efficient as the American working man or woman.

Maurice Low, a protectionist, in his recent work entitled "Protection in the United States," says:

> We have the authority of all competent observers in America that one of the reasons to explain the secret of American prosperity is the great productive power of the American workingman, his output being so much larger than that of his foreign competitors that the cost of the American product is less than that of any other workingmen, and it has also been demonstrated that wages and labor cost bear not the relation that is ordinarily supposed; that is, it is not true that low wages are an indication of low labor cost, but rather the reverse, the low-priced workman being usually an unintelligent and unskilled workman and unable to compete with the high-priced worker of greater intelligence and skill.

All of these authorities are Republican, and all admit in the same statement that high wages in this country are not due to high protective tariff or to any tariff at all, but all base their argument upon the solid, sound, bed rock of greater efficeincy in the American employee, as well as more efficient machinery.

If the argument is sound that a high tariff is productive of high wages, we would expect the highest wages paid at the times when we were paying the highest duty on goods. Let us see about this. The McKinley tariff was enacted in 1890; under it the average rate of duty was a little more than 50 per cent. The Dingley tariff bill was passed in 1897; under it the average rate of duty was about 50 per cent. The Wilson bill was enacted in 1894; under it the average rate of duty was about 42 per cent.

Between the years of 1885 and 1901, the average rate of duty was about 41.6 per cent. The United States Commissioner of Labor recently compiled sixty-seven groups of labor from 1885 to 1901, covering three different tariff periods, showing the following result from 1885 to 1889, from 1891 to 1893, from 1895 to 1896, from 1897 to 1901, which table is as follows:

In 1883 the duties were low as compared with the duties under the McKinley and Dingley bills. According to the contention of high protectionists the number of men employed in factories ought to have increased very rapidly since 1890 under the McKinley, the Wilson, and the Dingley bills.

The following table shows the number of men employed in the factories between 1880 and 1900, together with the ratio of increase:

	1880.	1890.	1900.
Number of men	2,732,000	4,712,000	5,719,000
Absolute increase	----------	1,980,000	1,007,000
Per cent increase	----------	72	21

Now, let us consider the increase in the total sums paid in wages and salaries. The figures are:

	1880.	1890.	1900.
Wages and salaries	$947,000,000	$2,283,000,000	$2,735,000,000
Absolute increase	----------	$1,336,000,000	$452,000,000
Per cent increase	----------	141	11

The wages of England are always taken by the Republican party as a basis upon which to measure the laborer's wages in this country. Wages substantially all over the world in the last few years have increased, notwithstanding high or low tariffs. Protection or free trade, there has been for the past few years a steady tendency toward an increase of wages, and this is particularly true of England.

In a bulletin issued by the Department of Commerce and Labor on the 10th day of January, 1908, you will find the following in regard to the wages of employees in England, showing a steady increase in the daily wages in free-trade England:

During the first six months of 1907 the changes in rates of wages reported continued to show an upward movement, there being net increases in all groups of trade. Altogether 1,150,029 work people were reported to have had their wages changed, of whom 1,149,825 work people had a net increase of $524,818 per week, and 204 a net decrease of $122 per week. Thus the net effect of all the changes was an increase of $524,696 per week, compared with a net increase of $129,390 per week in the corresponding period of 1906. The most important changes in rates of wages reported during the six months were increases in the coal-mining and textile industries. The former affected work people employed in all the principal coal-mining districts in Great Britain. In the textile group advances took place in the wages of 145,000 card and blowing-room operatives, spinners, doublers, reelers, winders, warpers, etc., employed in cotton manufacture in Lancashire, Cheshire, West Riding of Yorkshire, and Derbyshire; of 41,700 jute operatives, preparers, etc., in the north of Ireland. The majority of the other work people affected were in the metal and engineering trades.

In 1906 the net result of all changes in wages reported to the Labor Department was an advance of $281,770 a week, or $6,905,563 for the year.

In the enactment of a high protective tariff we lose sight of one economic principle, and this is you can not shut out imports without shutting in exports. We can not hope to control the trade of the world and at the same time refuse to trade with the world. With substantially all of our public lands now taken up for settlement, with a present population of 87,000,000 people, with foreign immigration pouring in upon us at the rate of 1,200,000 per year, we can only take care of them and our ever-increasing population by securing the trade of the world. To-day, although the greatest nation upon the earth, with unbounded resources, we are distanced in foreign commerce by England, Germany, and France. In the year 1902 the foreign exports of English manufactured goods amounted to nearly $1,200,000,000; the foreign export trade of Germany amounted to nearly $750,000,000, France nearly $425,000,000, with the United States a little over $400,000,000. England, with a population of about 40,000,000 people, that year exported nearly $30 worth of manufactured goods per capita, while the United States exported about $5 worth of manufactured goods per capita. These figures are indeed significant. Instead of England defeating us in the foreign trade of the world, we ought to be leading not only England, but likewise France and Germany. The American manufacturer, as well as the American employee, only asks a fair chance in the field of competition.

With a protective tariff preventing competition in the line of manufactured goods we can not expect our manufacturers and the employees in their manufactories to compete with foreign competitors. Lower the duty upon many schedules now in the Dingley bill, and then, with the business energy, independence, and initiative of the American employee, in but a short period of time we would have complete control of the commerce of the world. [Applause.]

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I hardly feel at this late hour like attempting to address the weary hearers here, but because the time must be consumed as it can be obtained, I shall undertake to say some few things upon the live questions of to-day. I tried to hear the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], but could hear only a small portion of his two hours' address. I could hardly tell whether it was a eulogy of the Republican party or a funeral oration over its burial. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Perhaps it partook of both and perhaps it should have done so because, De mortuis nil nisi bonum. I wish to say that we on this side of the House are long since accustomed to the denunciations of ourselves from that side as demagogues, and we know that those who are for the people are always denounced as demagogues by those who stand for the classes as against the masses. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I was much amused by the broad and boisterous smile that rippled over the other side of the House when the chaplain in his prayer some mornings since prayed for the jingo and the demagogue and for deliverance from him, but I doubt if a few days or mornings later had the chaplain repeated the same prayer there would not have been a dry grin instead of a broad smile on the countenances of the same gentlemen when they found their own President advocating so many of the things that they have denounced as demagogy when proposed by us. As to the President's actions and as to your Republican President there seems to be a strange condition. If we praise him, you growl; if we criticise him, you howl. [Applause and laughter on the Democratic side.]

At first it seemed that you wanted none but yourselves to criticise him and none, not even yourselves, to praise him. But later some few of you have dared to offer belated praise to him. Fewer, I fear, will dare to follow him by joining the Democrats in enacting legislation which we have been so long demanding. As for me, I shall add nothing to what has been said, except to say that we criticise the President when we believe him wrong and we praise him for all that we believe right in him, and as to those things in which he is wrong, we have a leader who is free from his errors, and as to those things in which he is right, we have a leader who has taught him and who sheds a steady light where he has flashed and floundered. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Gentleman, I wish to recall some of the arguments that I have listened to now for more than a day. I wish to recall the argument of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] upon rate regulation being a Republican policy and a Republican specimen of legislation. I know that he can go back into the musty records of Republican Members and find, long years ago, where individuals of them have advocated this doctrine or that policy. The truth is that you can find advocates of any policy among the members of any party, if you will go far enough back and rake over the ashes of the past. But I wish to call your attention to the fact that, while you claim now that rate regulation has been one of your party shibboleths, nevertheless in three different platforms—in 1896, 1900, and 1904—the Democratic party has made a demand for rate regulation, while your platforms were silent upon it as the grave. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

You talk about the members of your party in the House and in the Senate who interested themselves in the passage of the original bill in 1887, I believe it was, and deny to that grand old commoner of Texas, John H. Reagan, any credit for the legislation that passed then, but we in Texas look upon him as the hero of the entire struggle for rate legislation. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He may not have suggested the idea of a commission, which is but the means to carry out a principle and a policy, but he struggled long, and for a long time without avail, to engraft upon the laws of this country the doctrine that the Government should regulate and control the rates charged by transportation companies. [Applause on the Democratic side.] You say he opposed the commission idea. This I do not know, but if he did I am not sure he was not right, because if the Commission is no more efficient in the future than the past it is not the best means to the desired end. But I would tell you something more. When Texas passed a railroad commission law more perfect than the Federal law and with the commission feature in it, John H. Reagan resigned his seat in the Senate, which he could have held for life, to accept a place on our State commission at only a little over half the salary of a Senator, to serve his people where they believed his great learning and fidelity could serve them best. The Federal law was passed while he was a Member of this House, and for ten years it was supposed to have clothed the Interstate Commerce Commission with power to regulate and fix freight rates. At the end of that time, however, you were in power and he was no longer here, when the Supreme Court declared that your Commission, though intended to be clothed with the power to fix rates, did not as a matter of fact have it; and immediately or at the next Congress after that declaration of the Supreme Court the Commission filed its report with Congress, as it was required by law to do. In this report they called attention to this decision of the Supreme Court and their want of power to make these regulations and asked to be given that power and Congress then, Republican as it now is and as it has been from that day to this, turned a deaf ear to their petition and declined to clothe them with the power you say they ought to have and that the original bill intended to give them. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Not to one session of this Congress alone, but for every session from the day that the power was denied by the Supreme Court until the last session of this Congress your Commission was knocking at the door of Congress and praying to be given power to fix and regulate freight rates. I have heard of a committee that buries bills, and I have heard of a chairman that does not permit bills to come before the House, and I have heard here to-day that Democratic Members were seeking to introduce legislation to clothe that Commission with the power, and you heard them not. In 1897, I believe it was, your Commission first filed that petition with the Republican Congress, but you paid no attention. In 1898 they again filed that petition; in 1899 they filed it; in 1900 they filed it, and in 1901 they filed it. That prayer was before you, but your ears were closed. Do you remember when old Elijah met on Mount Carmel the prophets of the false god and the challenge was made—

> Spread your sacrifice here and pray on your altars for your god to send down the fire?

Four hundred priests of Baal sent up their prayer from morning until noon, from noon until night, to their god Baal to send down the fire. If I remember rightly, for a second day they prayed from morning to noon and from noon to night, but there was no voice nor any that answered. Then old Elijah on the third day said:

> Cry aloud: for he is a god; either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

And so it was when this railroad commission prayed to you for some power to regulate freight rates, you were talking or pursuing or sleeping—for there was no voice nor any that answered. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, for nine long years that prayer rang in their ears, but was unheeded. But a year or two ago when this demand had been placed three times in the Democratic platform; when you had been silent in your conventions as well as in your Congressional halls; when Democratic bills had been killed in committee, you woke up, and now you tell us that all the time you were for rate regulation. Why do you say so now? I will tell you. You have got some grand and true men of the people in your party, and I am going to tell you of one of them here. Yonder in Wisconsin your Senator LA FOLLETTE stands for the people. LA FOLLETTE raised the flag of justice to the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He made such a fight against the railroad power as few men of any party in any State have made, and he stirred Wisconsin all over and all through. Down here in Georgia Hoke Smith was calling the attention of the masses day by day, through his paper as well as from the stump, to unjust rates which were levied in his State and in the United States. All over this country the magazine writers began to tell the story of unjust rates and oppressive rates by railroads. The storm rose, the clouds gathered, and the lightnings flashed and the rumbling of the thunder was heard in the distance and near by. The storm was visible to the naked eye, the thunder was audible to the dullest ear. Your newly elected President best rode the storm, and, strange to say, last session found a turmoil of active patriots seeking to pass some Republican rate legislation. And now the gentleman from Michigan finds that the dearest thing to the Republican heart has always been railroad rate regulation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield ten minutes more to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas is recognized for ten minutes' additional time.

Mr. HARDY. I was eminently pleased with the address of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], but I want to tell him now and this House who hear me that so long as you leave the Commission to struggle with a million different independent rates against the rapacity of grasping corporations, who have studied their lessons long and learned them by heart, and leave the Commission to meet these corporations and struggle with them for the fixing of each and every rate and specification, amid the difficulties of courts and injunctions and provisos and conditions in the law, you will never have any effectual rate regulation. I want to tell him that even last year they refused to enact parts of the provisions suggested by LA FOLLETTE that were most essential, especially when they refused to give the Commission the power to appraise and value the property of railroads, in order to fix a basis upon which to estimate and allow a reasonable income for roads.

And I wish to tell him that Congress can not, by the creation of a commission, shift the burden from their own shoulders and wash their hands of all responsibility to the people; but Congress must always be ready to see that justice to the people be done, and be ready to pass whatever laws are necessary to that end.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KÜSTERMANN] the other day said there was a little joker in your tariff law. There is a little joker of the same kind in your rate law. You put upon your statute book a law that said a railroad should not charge more for a short haul than for a long haul. That is the substance of it. If you had left it at that, it would have been well and would have prevented hundreds of millions of extortionate freight charges that have been put upon the people; but the little joker was added to that in the clause which read: "Provided conditions are similar," and when that joker was placed there the law read in substance: "No railroad shall charge more for a short haul than a long one, provided conditions are similar;" and the railroads knew full well that they would never go into court in any case where they could not show that conditions were not similar, and that, therefore, the law forbidding a greater charge for a short haul than a long haul would not be allowed to prevail. The long and short haul law rested in innocuous desuetude; it became and is a mockery.

Let me tell you, if you are in earnest, if you want to get at rate regulation right, if you want to protect the interior points against unjust extortion in favor of water points, if you wish to prevent discrimination between places, if you want to enable your water transportation to have a birth and a growth in this country, take that law and cut off the little joker that is in it. This subject comes home to me because in this day I believe there are more unjust burdens put upon the people directly through unjust tariff rates by railroads and transportation companies almost than through the tariff itself.

Now, let me give you some illustrations that are not new, because I have mentioned them before, but you did not hear me. We pay freight rates on lumber every day in my State, and freight is paid on lumber in the Middle Western States at rates that are higher for a very much shorter distance than they are for a very much longer distance, and there is no reason under the sun why it should be permitted except that it enables the railroads to kill water transportation somewhere and maintain their monopoly of transportation. Let me ask you why should a railroad be allowed to charge 18¾ cents per 100 pounds for the carrying of lumber from Beaumont to my town, 300 miles, and yet charge only 16 cents for carrying Beaumont lumber through my town and on to Memphis, 700 miles farther? Why should a transportation company be allowed to charge 25 per cent more for hauling rock from north Georgia to south Georgia than they do for hauling from the quarries of Vermont through north Georgia to south Georgia? The reason why they do it is simply this, that the people in my town are helpless and they can impose such burdens of tariff rates as they see proper. My town is an interior town. Likewise the north Georgia quarries are helpless, and they can impose such burdens as they see proper upon the quarries there. They are interior points. In the meantime the railroads, by these cheap rates from the Vermont quarries, kill what little shipping there might be on the Connecticut River and then on the Atlantic Ocean down to the rivers going to the south Georgia towns. All this and illustrations that could be given by the score and by the hundreds just simply show that the railroads wherever they come in contact with river transportation are allowed to lower their rates at points of contact and then raise them for recouping purposes on all intermediate points.

I am not talking for party or party advantage. I am talking for the interest of the people, and I want these Representatives here who come from interior points to hear me and to think, and I am proud to let it be known that after my first speech on this subject I received this telegram from the Commercial Club of Lincoln, Nebr.:

LINCOLN, NEBR., January 17, 1908.

To Hon. RUFUS HARDY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

Lincoln Commercial Club extends congratulations and hopes for a successful passage of your bill No. 4801 to enforce application of long and short haul clause for transportation charges on freight. We will cooperate with you to full extent and endeavor to secure support of Nebraska Representatives at Washington. Can you mail me 300 copies of the bill?

W. S. WHITTEN, Secretary.

Memphis is a city some 500 and odd miles from New Orleans by rail. The rate on cotton transportation from Memphis to New Orleans is only 17 cents a hundred pounds. My town is 260 miles from Galveston. The rate on cotton from my town to Galveston is 55 cents a hundred pounds. Corsicana pays more than three times as much to haul freight 250 miles as Memphis pays to haul it 500 miles. What is their reply when they are charged with discrimination? And, as the gentleman from Michigan was saying, he opposed discrimination between places as well as men, I want to know if that is earnest? Is it true? If so, why do you permit, without your protest, the interior points to be dragooned and to be imposed upon by exorbitant rates in order to enable the railroads to put down their rates at competing water points? Let me see how it goes. What is the result? The 17-cent rate by rail from Memphis to New Orleans draws the cotton freight off of the Mississippi River and similar rates draw off other freights and, with a stream that can carry the freight of sixty railroads, without a dollar of expense to improve it, with its waters rolling from St. Louis and Memphis to the sea, there is no vessel carrying traffic upon its bosom. Cotton is just an illustration; everything that might float in barges and in boats is driven from the river to the railroads; and what has happened to the Mississippi has happened to every other inland waterway in the United States. It is a shameful condition that demonstrates the complete triumph in this country of corporate cunning over common sense and common justice. So that nature's carriers, the great and small rivers of the continent, roll idly through our wheat fields, our cornfields, our cotton fields, our coal fields to the sea, while the combined railroad systems, paying just enough attention to the rivers to keep them rolling idly, are allowed to make a monopoly of all transportation and fix the rates of carriage at their own ungoverned will. I would that I could put it stronger, make it plainer. No words can put the condition stronger than the truth, but to make it plain and clear, to make the people, to make Congress see the truth is the difficulty. Since I came here I've been told that that great commoner of Texas, John H. Reagan, tried hard to secure just such a law as I am urging, but he failed. I am going to keep trying till I succeed.

I gave you another illustration; the rate on flour from St. Louis to Helena, Ark., is 20 cents a hundred pounds, and yet on the same article from St. Louis to Paragould, a point between and 125 miles nearer St. Louis, it is 60 cents a hundred pounds; and yet the laws of this country—State and national—are permitted to stand on our statute books—laws allowing the railroads to discriminate between places, overcharging one and undercharging the other, and after competition is killed overcharging all, and we have called it a representative Government. We say that we represent the people, but we permit this. We can not, or is it we will not, see? The law as we have it not only permits but suggests by its very terms that railroads should discriminate between places.

Well, I want to appeal for a law that shall fix the rate of freight according to the value of the services performed and shall never allow any discrimination between places; shall never allow a road to carry a carload of a commodity through any town cheaper than it carries it to that town. That is justice. That law will put boats on every navigable stream and reduce the average freight rates in this country more than all the railroad commissions, State and national, will or can do in fifty years.

Now, I have talked longer than I intended; I do not want to talk on the tariff, but I just want to say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], who talked so eloquently the other day about ship subsidy in this country, that the protective tariff of the Republican party has builded a scaffold upon which the prices of all the materials that go into the construction of a ship have been raised so high that—I admit it to be true—they are now out of the reach of shipbuilders, and our people can not pay the price of materials in our country and build the ships. You have built a scaffold that raised these prices, and now you ask us by subsidy to come and build you a ladder upon which your shipbuilders can climb to your scaffold in order to build. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

I will not help you to build a subsidy ladder, but I will help you to cut off the legs of that tariff scaffold, and bring the price of material down in order that you can get the ship built. [Applause.]

I want to say to the gentleman from Maine, if he is present, that his State, once known as the Pine Tree State, and an old-time Democratic State, has sold her birthright for a mess of pottage when she stands for high tariff and closes her shipbuilding yards and kills her merchant marine. Maine should come with us and if we ever go back to the doctrine of tariff for revenue only, the time will come when there will be American flags floating upon every sea and the seamen and ships of Maine will rest in every port of the known world. [Renewed applause.] But you can not build a tariff scaffold and subsidy ladder and run the American marine on subsidies, because the people have been robbed on so many things that they will not stand for it when you come openly and put your hands into their pockets and take from them their money to build up another. [Renewed applause.] I am amazed that some of the newspapers haven't asked for a subsidy, because our tariff has put up the price of paper. 'Twould be in keeping; but they haven't yet.

Well, I might close here, and ought to, but I will add——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman allow me just one word more?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield another minute to the gentleman.

Mr. HARDY. I want to say only one thing in conclusion. I have heard it from both sides that "the people are coming into their own." Strange phrase on Republican lips when the Republicans have been so long and are still in power; but we are coming next November 8,000,000 strong. "We are coming into our own" to inaugurate the man the people love and trust; to inaugurate William J. Bryan and a new reign of Democratic prosperity. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentlemen on the other side occupy some of their time?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield fifty minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Chairman, with the indulgence of the committee, I wish to speak on the subject of the President's message and the necessity it suggests of parliamentary reform in the House. After the many eloquent speeches of the past two days, I rise with a great deal of diffidence to speak on subjects of such peculiar delicacy. Particularly do I wish to avoid both personality and partisanship, neither of which I approve in debate. But as I have convictions on these great questions for the public good, and, this being the House of Representatives of the people where free speech is in order, I am going to express my convictions to the membership and to the country, in fear of God and no man.

Years before I had the honor of being a Member I had read of the rules, but I had only a vague idea, as most people have, of the immense power concentrated in the Speakership and the corresponding surrender of rights and privileges by the individual Members. Indeed, the people know little of the rules, and less of the surrender of their rights under these rules, and still less of the effect of such surrender upon legislation in the interest of all the people. During Speaker Reed's time, no doubt, people read of his counting a quorum, of his putting a stop to the filibuster, and of his refusal to put dilatory motions. He appeared to be acting for the public good, and the country approved of his action. There is since then the erroneous idea lurking in the minds of many, especially editors, that somehow Members of Congress who complain of the present rules would revive the old obstructive practices that were in themselves innovations under the rules. Of course, no Member of either side of the House would do that, and could not if he would. Now the pendulum has swung over to the other extreme, and, instead of a few minority Members, goaded by harsh legislative treatment, resorting in the open to ill-advised tactics of obstruction, we have a few majority Members so "intrenched in the forms and usages" that under the cloak of the majority they are enabled to perpetuate their own rule and control the House for their own purposes.

After close personal observation during an entire session of conditions as they actually exist, I was at loss to account for the extraordinary spectacle that I saw in this body. I saw before me a high class of men, for such is the large majority of the membership of this House; men, each one of them, the choice of forty thousand sovereign voters, representing two hundred thousand people; legislators who, by virtue of official experience, mental capacity, and approved integrity, must constitute the highest types of American citizenship that the country has to offer to its most important public service. I saw these able men meekly submit to a deprivation of their constitutional rights, privileges, and powers under conditions that, it would appear to me, would touch in the most tender spot their self-respect, their manhood, and their love and pride of individuality, which are above all price. I could not account for it. It was a mystery to me.

Seeking further light, I made a careful investigation and study of what the best parliamentarians, scholars, and statesmen, at home and abroad, had written on this perplexing subject, parts of which I shall print in the RECORD as a basis of my remarks.

It is not my purpose at this time to go into any extended discussion of the rules of the House. I wish now merely to direct your attention to one great immediate necessity for parliamentary reform suggested by the President's message. But before passing to the consideration of the message I shall briefly summarize what the best writers have said of our parliamentary procedure.

It is the consensus of opinion that practically all the power of this body has been merged in the Speakership. He is the House.

It is the consensus of opinion that the individual members have surrendered their constitutional rights, powers, and privileges, to such an extent that their importance has become insignificant, in fact, is generally regarded as a negligible quantity. One writer has even said that "The members of the House are a pint of sand carried in the Speaker's pocket; the smaller the particles the better."

It is the consensus of opinion, both as to revenues and expenditures, that the control of the purse, which the Constitution vests in this House so as to keep it close to the people, has, because of our own rules and usages, substantially passed over to the control of the other branch of the Congress; and the standing of the House has suffered on account of it, not only before the country, but also in the eyes of the statesmen of the world.

It is the consensus of opinion of the best writers that the business of the country is not dispatched speedily, economically, and considerately, but, in fact, that the rules have become so complicated, cumbersome, and unwieldy, that fully three-fourths of the business has to be done outside of the rules—under suspension of the rules, by unanimous consent, or through riders on appropriation bills. The House, it is said, is no longer the forum of legislation, as it was in the days of old, but the real legislative work of Congress now takes place, where they still have rights, in the Senate.

Mr. Chairman, in no other country of the world, be its government in form republican, monarchical, or imperial, has there been such a complete surrender of powers and prerogatives by the representatives of the people in the one chamber to its presiding officer, or to the other law-making branch of the Government. We, the representatives of a free people, whose traditions, whose history, whose very existence, is a living protest against one-man power, the rule of the few, now furnish the most illustrious example of such a system of law-making. Where is there a spectacle to be seen of such inconsistency between parliamentary practices and fundamental principles of government as we exhibit at the present time for the history of mankind? Unfortunately, it has not yet dawned on the American people that the tendency to centralization of power and privileges in the few, that has been so strenuously at work in politics, in finance, and in the trade, industry, and commerce of the country, has not passed by the Hall of this House, which the fathers thought would be for all time the palladium of American principles of government.

The processes of surrender of rights, of absorption or usurpation of power—call it what we please—has been studied and set forth by students of our parliamentary system. I want to mention these, lest I be charged with attacks on the present or past Speakers, Republican or Democratic. I am speaking of principles that are eternal, and not of men that are passing.

It was the plan of the framers of the Constitution that the Speaker should be merely a moderator, an impartial judge, according to every Member his just rights and enforcing at all times the square deal. This plan was copied after the speakership of the English House of Commons, where the presiding officer is an impartial judge, as are the presiding officers of the great parliamentary bodies of the world.

The first misstep occurred when the appointment of the committees of the House was taken from the membership and conferred upon the Speaker. It is said that no one dreamed of the evil consequences that flow from this transfer of power. The Senate resisted this innovation at the time, and wisely so; and had it not, we would have seen the spectacle to-day suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin, my colleague [Mr. COOPER], that virtually two officers, the presiding officer here and the presiding officer there, would have controlled the business of the country.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, if it will not interrupt the gentleman, I should like to ask him one question.

Mr. NELSON. I have only a limited time.

Mr. OLMSTED. I simply want to ask what rule it is that takes away from the individual members of the House, or from the membership of the House, and places in the power of the Speaker, the appropriations and the revenues, and what writer it is who has said that it has been taken away from the membership and lodged in the hands of the Speaker?

Mr. NELSON. The gentleman did not understand my statement.

Mr. OLMSTED. I refer to the statement the gentleman made a moment ago.

Mr. NELSON. I said our powers in these respects had substantially passed over to the Senate, and if you want to read what has been written on that subject, read Prof. Maurice Low's article, read Senator Hoar's article, read Professor Reinsch's book on American Legislatures and Legislative Methods, and you will find it clearly demonstrated.

Mr. OLMSTED. What rule of the House is it that transfers that power?

Mr. NELSON. The best proof of it is Speaker Cannon's own statement, made when he was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, when he said, in substance—I can not now remember the exact language—that "This body, close to the people, is in danger of becoming a mere bender of the pregnant hinges of the knee," a "mere tender" for the Senate, and that if another body did not change its methods of procedure, he suggested we would revise our rules so as to compel them to recognize our rights here. [Applause.] I have only a limited time, and I hope the gentleman will do me the courtesy not to interrupt me further.

Mr. OLMSTED. Of course, I will not interrupt the gentleman if he does not desire it.

Mr. NELSON. The next stage was the election of a political leader to be Speaker of the House. This is recognized the world over as a mistake. We copied our parliamentary system after the English system, but their speaker is an impartial presiding officer. He divests himself, although elected to the House of Commons, of all party affiliations, and is reelected from time to time, irrespective of the party in power. Obviously a political leader, to carry out great party purposes, is apt ruthlessly to override not only the rights of his opponents, but also the rights of his associates, well knowing that in the storm and stress and passion of party politics the people will little know or care of the violation of the rules and forms and usages in the attainment of legislative results.

Unfortunately, bad precedents are thus established, which are followed by other Speakers when not justified by great party emergencies. A political leader is out of place in the office of Speaker. My distinguished colleague [Mr. COOPER] has well stated a great truth in asserting that it would be far better for the country if the able parliamentary expert at the Speaker's desk presided over the House, and the party leader championed party measures upon this floor.

The next step was the surrender and control of the floor. The struggles leading up to the civil war caused a great deal of strife for the floor. The Speaker, if he was a partisan—and he generally was—if he favored slavery, he would recognize in preference his slavery friends. If he was an antislavery man, he would recognize his fellow-abolitionists. There was not much of a stretch of power left to reach the present practice of a Speaker absolutely controlling the right of recognition and denying the right of appeal.

The final step, it has been stated, was taken when the Committee on Rules was created. In comparatively recent years this committee, composed of only five members, three of which are of the majority party, with the Speaker as chairman, has been given or has taken unto itself the control of the business of the House. It can nullify all rules. It can prescribe by rule when a measure shall be in order—how it shall be voted upon, with or without amendment or debate. It can even prescribe beforehand the details of a measure to the crossing of a "t" or the dotting of an "i."

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. NELSON. I beg the gentleman's pardon, but I do not wish to be interrupted. I do not wish to be discourteous to the gentleman, but I have only so much time, and I would be very glad to proceed.

It has the power to repress all measures it does not favor, and virtually to pass nearly all the measures it does favor. It is true that the rule of the committee must be approved by a majority of the Members. In theory this seems to be satisfactory, but in practice is there a man that takes any thought but that as a matter of course the rule will be adopted? Why? Because this committee, with the Speaker as chairman, has in its power, in many ways, to induce Members to vote that way. It controls the appointment of committees. It controls their right of recognition. It controls the fate of measures upon which the legislative fortunes of Members largely depend. Naturally, under such circumstances, the committee is sustained as a matter of course, except, perhaps, in extraordinary times, when the people bring pressure to bear on Members.

In accounting for the strange submission of Members to present conditions, it has been emphatically and frequently stated that it is not due to inefficiency, nor want of integrity, nor lack of patriotism on the part of the personnel of the House. In part it has been charged to the changing membership; in part it has been said to be due to the motives fear or hope, for the Speaker and the Committee on Rules have it in their power to reward or punish Members in many ways, as already suggested. There is the sword of Damocles hanging over the head of every Member who dares rebel against the established order.

In my humble judgment, having conferred with many Members, I do not believe that this submission is entirely accounted for in the ways stated. The Members of this House believe that we must have rules, and that any rules are better than no rules. We voted for the rules, because it has been found impractical to change the rules satisfactorily in a few hours' discussion at a caucus, or, for that matter, during the first thirty days of the opening of Congress, with committee appointments hanging over the heads of Members, as was found, I think, some years ago to be the experience of the distinguished genteleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] who made a contest along these lines.

If parliamentary reform is to come it must be brought about through a large portion of the membership of this House on the Republican side acting with a large portion of the Members on the other side [applause on the Democratic side]; Members, having the courage of their convictions on both sides, mutually agreeing beforehand upon some programme for parliamentary reform. This is not so great a task. The vast portion of our parliamentary law is entirely unobjectionable. So far as it is parliamentary it has grown with the growth of our country, and is peculiarly adapted to the requirements of our Constitution and American institutions. The only quarrel is with the political power that has been put into the parliamentary practice.

It is difficult to explain the effect of the rules on the membership without going into a technical discussion. I have tried to picture to myself the effect in a number of ways. It might be made clear, I have thought, if one would fancy that all the Members had gone home, disgusted with the rules, save fifty, who may be said to have legislative power. I think fifty would be a maximum number. It is a fact that each Member may pass some private pension bills; it is true that Members are quite generally recognized to pass bridge and other minor bills under unanimous consent, but on the vital measures it is safe to say that less than fifty Members have any real legislative power. Indeed, it may be truthfully said even these fifty may be reduced to three—the majority members of the Committee on Rules, and these three may be further reduced to one—the Speaker. In the last analysis it may be shown that he alone independently possesses real power, and the other Members shine, more or less, by light reflected from the Speakership. I may use the figure of speech, merely as such, and say that the other Members are satellites that move about the Speakership in fixed orbits. We know, and they know, that if they deviate from the prescribed orbits they are in danger of an eclipse and may be submerged in the darkness that envelopes the less favored Members.

Again, conditions may be imagined if we compare the House to an umbrella. The handle is the Speakership. Whoever secures control of the handle controls the umbrella; whoever secures control of the Speakership controls the House. The ribs of the umbrella are the spokesmen of the Speaker. The ribs have braces, the spokesmen have friends. The whole membership is the cover. The umbrella moves up or down as the holder presses the spring, so the person that holds the Speakership controls the House. The people see only the outside of the umbrella. The machinery within has been arranged by the rules. The minority party was intended to perform the function of the fastener on the outside of the umbrella, but as the button, so to speak, has been destroyed by the rules the minority party is now a useless legislative flap. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Again, it may be imagined that the rules of the House confer upon the Speaker the power of hypnotism, and while the minority Members may not be said to be rendered entirely speechless [applause and laughter on the Democratic side] they are perfectly helpless, the majority Members obey the will of the Speaker. At times they break away, but not for long. They are soon brought back under the spell. There is no question but that the Speaker has the power of hypnotism over the majority under the rules.

But passing over to the consideration of the President's message, I wish to call attention to what the press has had to say with reference to it. I have here some of the leading daily newspapers that we all receive. I will not take time to read extracts from the news columns or the editorials; the gist of it all is that there is an issue squarely between the Congress and the President. It is said that the programme of the leaders of the House is to do nothing, and the President wants legislation. Speaking for myself, I desire to say that I do not believe that there is any issue between the Congress and the President. I believed, and now I am certain of it, after the speeches I have listened to in the last few days, that the great majority of the Republican Members of the House are with the President. If there is any issue, and time will tell, it is between the President and the rules of the House. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I agree with the newspapers that say that this do-nothing policy is not wise, either from a personal or party point of view. We can not as individual members go back to our constituents and point with pride to the passage of some pension bills, special or general, or to many appropriation bills. We must pass the remedial legislation advocated by the President. I do not believe that it is well for an individual to fool his fellow-men. I do not think that he can do it and succeed very long. I do not believe that it is well for a political party to appear to be fooling the people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We can not do that and hold the people's confidence. We must dispel any such appearance and pass remedial legislation.

Why not, then, take up the consideration of the President's policies? Why not consider remedial legislation in the interest of the people?

Why not revise the tariff, to the extent at least of removing the protection now afforded to some of the notorious trusts and combinations of the country? Why not pass a bill creating a tariff commission to investigate and report a measure to the next session of Congress? Why not consider an income tax, as recommended by the President, to adjust the burdens of taxation among the people? [Applause on the Democratic side.] Why not consider an inheritance tax, so as to return a part of the "swollen fortunes" of the "predatory classes" to the people, from whom these fortunes were unrighteously taken? Why not consider amendments to the antitrust laws, in order to strengthen the Department of Justice in the prosecution of some of these gigantic combinations that oppress the people? Why not consider measures for the control of corporations, which the President says is so needed at the present time? Why not empower the Interstate Commerce Commission to fix a valuation of the railways of the country, in order to ascertain the only proper basis of rational rate making? Why not consider measures for the suppression of gambling in stock and dealing in futures, practices that depress prices on the products of the people at times disastrously [applause on the Democratic side], which gambling spirit everybody recognizes was the cause of the present panic? Why not enact some, if not all, of the many policies of the President? We would then have done something as Members of the House to which we can point with pride. And then, too, there would be no question of our party success in the coming campaign.

Just a word of a personal nature. I am but one Member, the least of all the Members in point of ability, yet I have some rights and some corresponding duties as the Representative of my district. When I was a candidate for a membership in this House, I pledged in platform declaration and in public speech that I would sustain, to the best of my ability, the policies of the Administration, and I have been ready to redeem that pledge. I took my seat in the second session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, and listened to the splendid message of the President; but, so far as I can recall now, the only policy of the President that received consideration in that session was the matter of spelling; and in the language of the street the House "didn't do a thing to that." I excused the leaders of the House because it was the short session, believing that during the long session the President's policies would be permitted to come up for consideration. But sixty days went by. We had done little more than pass pension bills, and one or two appropriation bills. The Democrats charged us with wanting to kill time, the Republicans laughed, and then came the special message. The country knew what we were doing; the President knew what we were doing; he would not submit to it; so he sent in the special message; and I thank God he did; and I hope he will send many more special messages to this Congress. [Applause.]

We have been through this contest in Wisconsin. We know what it means. I was not misled by the character of the free literature that I was getting from all over this country. It was easy to see that there was a concerted action on "to beat" back this great reform movement championed by President Roosevelt. He understood it, and he had the courage and the foresight. At the right time he sent in a message that stirred the nation and stirred this Congress; and we are going to get some legislation, as the gentleman from Iowa pointedly said. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Why can not these policies of the President be considered at this session? Why can not I as a Member of this House be permitted to redeem my pledges to my people? What is to hinder us? I pause for reply. Why? Because, well—let me read what Speaker Reed has said. He knew the rules of this House. He knew the possibilities of them, and I want to commend what he said to the membership of this House. This was written after he was defeated, or rather after his party was defeated. A Democratic Congress was coming in, and he was warning the country of what they would be likely to do and what they could do under the rules. Speaker Reed said:

> There are many interests which are concerned to perpetuate the rule of the few. The southern men—

May we not translate a little here and say Wall street over in New York and its ramifications over the country?

> The southern men are fearful that this nation will some day awaken, as it has once before awakened, from the false idea that commerce is all, and that peace and quietness ought to be purchased at any price, to the nobler idea that human liberty is beyond all price, and that the government of all by all is the very foundation of our system. There are some men who desire, when this happens, that the few shall be so intrenched in forms and usages that they may keep the many entirely out of control. The same may be said of all vested interests and vested wrongs. These are all enlisted on the side of repression.

Now I want to quote the paragraph which follows, because here he is specific, whereas in the other he was general:

> But the great immediate power which has for so many years prevented the manifestation of the power of the majority—the power which has kept the control in the hands of the few—is the combination or concert of old Members who, knowing the rules and being skilled in all the arts of killing bills without being caught, and of depriving the community of what it wants while exhibiting zeal the other way, are enabled to govern the House and perpetuate their own rule.

But lest it be said that he is merely talking of a concert or combination of old Members in the minority, let me read what follows, and I commend it to the new Members so that they may know just what Mr. Reed saw would happen to them when they adopted the rules. He says:

> It will be an interesting spectacle in the new House to watch the process by which the new Members will be persuaded to surrender their rights, to go gently under the yoke, and to witness their wonder and perplexity when they find that somehow or other they can not do what they want to do, even after they have convinced the majority that it will be the right thing to do. They will then find that the gentlemen who have so seduously hedged them in to protect them against the wicked Republicans (Democrats?) have reserved for themselves a veto power greater than is intrusted by the wisdom of the Constitution to the wisdom of the President. They will also find that there is no greater fallacy than the idea that majority and minority are predicated of political parties only.

And in that connection I will read another sentence from another article of his, in which he shows how these rules have been framed along the years. He says:

> Ever since the slavery question came to trouble the peace of the country the rules of the House have been framed with the view of rendering legislation difficult. The South—

May we not again translate and make it applicable to the present time?

> The South was anxious that there should be ample means at its disposal to stop any measure detrimental to its cherished institution.

The question comes into the mind of any thinking man, if the South, if the Democratic leaders, were keen enough in their day to protect through rules their vested interests, are they of Wall street and they who represent them any less keen to maintain and extend the same kind of rules, lest a special message of the President should disturb vested interests and vested wrongs? If Democrats can do something, Republicans can always do it much better, whether it be bad or good. [Laughter.]

But, Mr. Chairman, let us look at this from a common-sense point of view. We will soon be in the throes of a Congressional election. There will be a contest in each of the respective parties to determine the nominees, and finally in each Congressional district 40,000 voters will decide by majority vote who shall represent them in the Hall of this House to record their will and express their wish. At the next Congress the same old motion will be made to adopt the rules. The country should know, the membership of the House should know, what the effect of the adoption of that motion will mean for at least one Congress. It will mean that the adoption of the rules places manacles upon the legislative hands of the Member, places a gag upon his tongue, and clamps upon his brain for all the purposes of vital legislation in the interests of the people. He is helpless to initiate laws, he is helpless to deliberate upon laws, and he will have only a qualified right to vote, which vote a caucus will at times attempt to control.

Mr. Chairman, we are now to enter a Presidential campaign. There will be a preliminary contest to determine who shall be the standard bearer of the Democratic party, if it is not already settled; there will be a preliminary contest to determine who shall be the standard bearer of the Republican party. Then these two nominees will engage in a tremendous contest for the election. Speeches will be made by the mile, campaign literature will be distributed by the ton, editorials will flood the country, millions will be spent, business will be demoralized, and the people will be excited. What is it all for? To elect a President. For what purpose? To make appointments? To organize the Army, the Navy, or other departments of the Government? These are organized now from the bottom to the top. What is it all for? It clearly appears from the platform declarations and from the speeches that it is to continue or change policies of government. That means legislation. The President of the United States will send his message to the Congress, as he is directed to do by the Constitution. He will tell the Congress of the needs of the country. But it will be in the power of a few, in the power of one, intrenched in the forms and usages, to use the language of Speaker Reed, to defy, to ignore, and to defeat these recommendations.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to my Republican fellow Members who believe in the Roosevelt policies, let us look to the rules of the House. President Roosevelt has been trying to cultivate oranges for many years in the frigid climate of the Committee on Rules, but what has he gotton but the proverbial lemons? [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I wish to say to my Republican fellow Members who believe that Secretary Taft is the proper man to carry out the Roosevelt policies, look to the rules of the House.

I wish to say to my Republican fellow Members who believe that Governor Hughes is the logical successor to the President to carry on the progressive movement, look to the rules of the House.

I wish to say to my Republican fellow Members who believe that Senator LA FOLLETTE, because of his constructive statesmanship as Governor of Wisconsin and because o his legislative achievements as United States Senator, is the rightful standard bearer of the millions of American citizens who believe in the reform movement, look to the rules of the House.

Mr. Chairman, the policies advocated by the President are indeed of vast importance to the American people, but the most important, the most pressing, the most agonizing need of the country to-day is not one of these policies, but parliamentary reform in the House. It is fundamental; it is a condition precedent to the passage in this House of all popular reforms. We must give them the right of way. We must remove the barriers, the obstructions that have been placed in this House by the rules, lest the great reform measures before the country be knocking, knocking, knocking at the doors of Congress, and there be little or no response for years to come.

The messages of the President are important, because they emphasize the needs of the country in a vigorous, energetic, and patriotic manner, for which Theodore Roosevelt is famous, but, I submit, in conclusion, that the greatest good the message will do for the country is to direct the nation's attention to the immediate importance of parliamentary reform in the House.

In what has been said there has been no reference to personality or partisanship. I respect the present Speaker, who was a Member of this House when I was only a toddling child, 3 years old. I have the respect for him that should be had by a new Member for a legislator of thirty-four years of service in this House. I represent, however, a different generation. I recognize that he may not look upon the rules or the reform movement as I do, and he may not be as ardent an admirer, as I am, of President Roosevelt.

Speaker CANNON may not become President. History is against it. Only one Speaker of the House was ever chosen President of the United States. Speaker Clay tried and failed; Speaker Blaine tried and failed; Speaker Reed tried and failed. The people do not choose for this high office men who love arbitrary power. Yet the Speaker has a great opportunity before him. He can, not reluctantly, but voluntarily, willingly, gladly, sustain President Roosevelt in this great movement for the restoration of popular government in this country. With the President, he will then hold a high place in the hearts of his countrymen. But the Speaker can do even more before he lays down the mantle of long legislative service; he has it in his power to restore representative government in this House. Let him do that and the people will say for all time to come, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant." [Loud applause.]

APPENDIX A.

RULES OF HOUSE v. RIGHTS OF MEMBERS.

EWING COCKRELL: There exists to-day in our Federal Government a certain officer of whom the world knows almost nothing, yet whose political power is exceeded only by that of the President, and whose authority within certain limits is even greater than his. Neither the Constitution nor the statutes recognize or limit his authority. He is responsible to no State or section of country, to no political body—not even to any political party. This political creature, who is so powerful and unique, is the Speaker of the House of Representatives.—The Arena, vol. 22, p. 653.

Speaker JOHN G. CARLISLE: The Constitution of the United States provides that the House of Representatives "shall choose their Speaker and other officers," and that "each House may determine the rules of its proceedings." The powers and duties of the Speaker are not defined in the Constitution or in any statute, but are to be ascertained from the general practice of parliamentary bodies and from such rules as the House of Representatives may, from time to time, see proper to adopt. The framers of the Constitution were familiar with the law and practice of the British House of Commons, the great legislative assembly of their mother country, and it is not unreasonable to suppose that when they provided for the election of a Speaker, they had in contemplation a presiding officer with substantially the same powers, duties, and responsibilities as had belonged for many centuries to the presiding officer in that body.—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 150, p. 390.

Ambassador BRYCE: Moreover, the Constitution of the United States expressly confers upon the House certain powers which there is nothing in English law to prevent the House of Commons from delegating, if it pleases, to the Speaker. That the House of Representatives can not delegate these powers has been powerfully argued by Speaker Reed in the pages of this Review.—N. Am. Rev., vol. 151, p 394.

Editor MAYO W. HAZELTINE: It is undisputed by the Speaker that not only the members of what for the moment is the minority in the House of Representatives, but also the members of the majority, are more thoroughly gagged and shackled than are the members of any other parliamentary body in the world. What is the reason for such a state of things?—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 165.

Historian JAMES CLARK RIDPATH: The greatest man in the United States, chosen a Representative, may present his credentials, take his oath, and be assigned to a seat. There, if he be in the minority, he shall sit until the Speaker nod! He is as incapable of initiative as though he had never been born. He has no longer a vestige of a right. He can not speak. He can not effectively propose a measure. He can not advocate the most salutary resolution or denounce the most obvious fraud. He is absolutely subjected to the organic machine. The organic machine is, in turn, absolutely subjected to the will of the Speaker. The Speaker constructs his committees. In doing so he labors assiduously—to carry out his own purposes. Weeks are consumed in a transaction that ought not to occupy six hours. The Speaker marks his man. He who will be a chairman of a committee must be in accord with the Speaker. He must be the Speaker's man. All the chairmen must be of precisely this subservient type. Not only so, but the majority of each committee must be made up of the same complexion and quality as the chairman. The majority must be the men of the chairman, just as he is the man of the Speaker. The device is absolute. No driver of eight-in-hand, with all the reins gathered up and his feet on the board, was ever more a despot in control of his team than is the Speaker of the House in drawing up and limiting all the lines of influence and power. Woe be to any refractory horse! The bit in his mouth is severe, and the cut of the whip on his back and flank is sharp and dangerous.

It is by this process that the House of Representatives has lost its autonomy, its individual initiative, and its representative character. The members of the House are a pint of sand carried in the Speaker's pocket; the smaller the particles the better.—Arena, vol. 17, p. 973.

Gen. A. W. GREELY: The power of the Speaker of the House of Representatives has steadily increased from the First Congress to the present, and in its influence on national legislation is believed by many even to exceed that exerted by the President.—North American Review, vol. 166.

HENRY H. SMITH (ex-clerk Committee on Rules): That official is to-day practically the second officer of the Government. He appoints the committees of the House, which under the Constitution originate revenue bills and under the practice originate general appropriation bills; appoints the conferees on the part of the House on all conference committees; appoints the chairman of the committees of the whole House; has the sole power of recognition (from which there is no appeal); is chairman of the Committee on Rules—now the most important committee of the House—and practically dictates the action of the House of Representatives.

The political future of many Members of the House rests in the favor of and recognition by the Speaker. He may make or unmake them, either by committee assignment or refusal to recognize them for the consideration of local bills unanimously reported from committees, many of which have passed the Senate.—Chautauquan, vol. 24, p. 192.

During the past twenty years a system of "special orders" has grown up which supersede the daily order of business established by the standing rules. Some of these have been made by unanimous consent, others by suspension of the rules, and the remainder—fully nine-tenths—by resolutions reported from the Committee on Rules.

The result of this practice is that the Committee on Rules, composed of five members, of which the Speaker is chairman and practically the committee, has become, as stated, all powerful or omnipotent in respect to selecting, directing, and controlling legislation. That committee may give or refuse consideration to an important bill or amendment which would receive a four-fifths vote of the House if a vote thereon could be reached, and yet, if three members of this committee, a majority, shall vote against such proposed special order, neither such bill nor amendment can be considered.—Chautauquan, vol. 30, pp. 241–242.

Professor REINSCH: Thus it has come about that the majority itself is bound by the rules designed to make its action possible. The House acts through its leaders. Independently of them the individual Members can accomplish next to nothing.—Am. Leg. and Leg. Methods by Reinsch, p. 44.

But the Members of the House did not dare to brave the Speaker at this time, for so long as the committees had not been appointed the power of punishment and reward was still in his hands.—Am. Leg. and Leg. Methods, p. 50.

When we consider the rigorous discipline ordinarily enforced by the Speaker, we are led to inquire into the rationale of the submission of the House. What is the reason which compels its Members to extinguish themselves so utterly, to give up every opportunity of making their individuality felt, and of subordinating themselves, their wishes, and their action entirely to the direction of a few leaders and of the Speaker? It is certainly not by choice that the average Member submits to such a system.—Am. Leg. and Leg. Methods, p. 59.

Senator JOHN M. THURSTON: It has happened, however, in the progress of time, and by steadily progressive processes, that the House of Representatives, the so-called popular branch of the Government, has submitted to the enactment of rules under which almost all the power and authority of the individual members has been surrendered to the presiding officer—the Speaker of the House. The House of Representatives has ceased to be the great forum for full and free discussion. The methods of legislation therein are now the most arbitrary of those in any legislative body in the world.—Ind., vol. 54, pp. 961–962.

The House of Representatives, in my judgment, under existing rules has ceased to be what the founders of the Republic intended. The representatives of the people no longer share equally in the powers and privileges of this legislative branch of the Government. Free speech, as the framers of the Constitution understood the term, no longer exists on the floor of the House.—Ind., vol. 54, p. 963.

The Speaker, under the rules, is given the extraordinary power to appoint all the committees. To secure a place upon any committee, or a chairmanship of a committee, a Member must have the good will of the Speaker. This power of appointment is, or may be, exercised arbitrarily, and from the committee arrangements by the Speaker there is not the slightest opportunity for protest or appeal. The list of committees is not submitted to the House for approval. The make-up is not known, except to a few favored Members, until it is announced as the committees of the House.—Ind., vol. 54, p. 962.

When a bill is reported to the House it rests entirely with the Speaker to determine arbitrarily whether that bill shall be called up or considered. The Speaker can recognize or refuse to recognize any Member on the floor, and long usage and precedent have given him the right before recognizing a Member to ask him what his purpose is in seeking recognition, and when the Member states his desire is to call up a certain bill the Speaker may refuse to recognize him for that purpose.—Ind., vol. 54, p. 962.

This right to name all committees, let alone the other great powers of his office, is sufficient to sustain the Speaker in every action of parliamentary rule or procedure. The committees have such unbounded power in the respective matters of legislation referred to them that the success or failure of any particular measure depends largely on the good will of the chairman of the committee; and therefore all Members of the House, having either public or private bills, must necessarily endeavor to secure and hold the friendship of the committee chairman and of the more influential committee members. These respective chairmen and the ranking members of the committees, having been selected by the Speaker, are necessarily bound to support him, while other Members seeking legislation are necessarily bound to support the committee.—Ind., vol. 54, p. 962.

There is, in fact, to-day no such despotism of the majority over the minority, of the few over the many, of the one over the whole, as is exercised in the American House of Representatives under its present rules, precedents, and usages.—Ind., vol. 54, p. 963.

HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST (Commissioner, District of Columbia): The Members, individually and collectively, surrendered themselves into the keeping of one man, who wields a despotism as complete as that of the proverbial Czar. It is the Speaker who appoints the committees, arranging their personnel so as to secure harmony with his own views; it is the Speaker who, as the deciding member of the Committee on Rules, determines whether the House shall or shall not consider certain measures; and, finally, it is the Speaker to whom each Representative must appeal for recognition upon the floor of the House. The individual Member, unless he be the favored appointee to some prominent committee chairmanship, is rarely a factor in the proceedings of the House. The concentration of power in the Speaker's hands has practically destroyed all personality. Indignant constituencies have sent back to private life for apparent inefficiency Members who were never accorded an opportunity to prove their worth. Their political existence has been crushed out beneath the Juggernaut of despotic rules. The Washington correspondents, who are trained to observe the trend of national events, fully realize the change which has come over the House. There was a time, years ago, when every newspaper representative in the National Capitol appreciated the necessity of acquainting himself with the temper of the House upon every important proposition. To-day the labor is unnecessary. If the correspondent knows the attitude of the Speaker the problem is at once solved.—Forum, vol. 31, p. 425.

Consequently the pivot centers in the Speaker himself. Without his gracious sanction, no measure can come before the House. With him upon the side of any proposition, half the battle is gained; with him arrayed against it, the House is denied the opportunity of considering it, much less of voting upon it.—Forum, vol. 23, p. 345.

Certainly it needs no further argument or citation of fact to prove that the Speaker is, indeed, the autocrat of Congress. He frames the committees to suit his ideas; he decides what measures shall be heard; he recognizes or ignores any Member. Is the lodgment in him of such tremendous power a wise, prudent, or desirable thing? The question demands thoughtful consideration. Some there are—mostly recipients of favors from the Speaker's hands and secure always of his friendly cooperation—who will assert that, because his sovereignty has thus far been exercised more frequently for the country's good than to its injury, there is no occasion for its curtailment. With this more or less selfish view I can not agree. While it may operate occasionally for good, such power presents untold opportunities for evil. I doubt the wisdom of its continuance.—Forum, vol 23, p. 348.

Professor HART: That power is the Speaker, and he has reached his present importance by the absorption, based on the consent of the House, of five successive sets of power.

* * * The first Speaker, chosen in 1789, was simply a moderator. His duty was like that of other presiding officers—to apply the rules of the House so as to give the fairest opportunity of discussion, and permit the freest expression of the will of the House.

The first access of power came through the appointment of committees. * * * As committee government grew, the power of the Speaker to give opportunities of distinction to his party friends also increased. * * * The Speaker began to assert a control over legislation through his power to appoint committees. * * * The principle once completely established made the Speaker next in dignity and power to the President. He could decide at the beginning of the session what measures should not be brought to the attention of Congress; and he could have great influence, through the committees, in the preliminary shaping of the measures which would be submitted.

The period of the civil war did much to strengthen the powers of Congress at the expense of other Departments; it also gave the Speaker greater opportunities, both through the appointment of committes and through personal influence. The Speakership became more and more desirable, not only for itself, but because it was an avenue to the Presidency. Speaker Colfax was chosen Vice-President in 1868. His successor, Speaker Blaine, became a candidate for the nomination in 1876.

But the third development of the Speaker's power rose rather out of the increasing pressure of the "floor;" that is, for the opportunity to take part in debate. There had been many cases in the history of Congress where Members had been silenced, or the attempt had been made to silence them, by the infliction of some discipline. * * * The Speaker assumed the right, sanctioned by precedent, to refuse to permit a hearing for a proposition contrary to the principles of his party. * * * From this point there is but a short step to the practice of refusing to recognize Members because they are personally obnoxious to the Speaker. During the last thirty years Members have sometimes sat through an entire session, or even through two sessions of Congress, without ever being able to catch the Speaker's eye. * * * In all formal discussions, no Member, with the exception of the accepted party leaders, need expect to be heard unless he has previously requested the Speaker to recognize him; and arbitrary Speakers do not hesitate to deny the applications of men whom they personally dislike. * * * The powers of the Speaker as thus developed, as moderator, as party chief, as the appointer of committees, and as the dispenser of the right of taking part in debate, have made the Speaker's place more and more important, and more and more desired. But his authority has been negative rather than positive; the Speaker could prevent legislation, but he could secure none without a majority of the House. The Speaker might deny the floor, but he seldom occupied it.

The fifth and most important step in welding together the powers of the Speaker * * * has been taken within the past two years. The Speaker and a few other eminent Members from his own party have been constituted, by the consent of the party, an informal committee to decide upon an order of business. The commission of the Speaker rests simply upon the fact that he has been chosen by the members of his party in the House as their legislative leader. Without precisely intending to create a new or more powerful authority, the present majority has thus committed itself to the practice of intrusting to a small body, in which the Speaker must be the predominant member, the direction not only of the policy of the party, but of the legislation of the House. * * * The system is, therefore, likely to be continued in principle, if not in the same form, by each party when in the majority. The powers now exercised by the Speaker will probably be exercised by each succeeding Speaker, and will somewhat increase. Since the legislative department in every republic constantly tends to gain ground at the expense of the Executive, the Speaker is likely to become, and perhaps is already, more powerful, both for good and for evil, than the President of the United States.—Atlantic Mo., vol. 67, p. 380.

THOS. B. REED: Why is this system maintained? How can it have lasted so long? At first sight it would seem as if the picture drawn of the rules of the House could not be true. It is certainly very improbable to an outsider. To understand this apparent contradiction you must again recur to the fact that the House does but 8 per cent of its business, hence to a conservative man, a natural objector, the power to say what measures shall not come up is much greater than the right shared with the majority to determine that a particular measure shall or shall not be presented for action. In addition this negative power also arises from knowledge of the rules and is the especial perquisite of the old Member, who thereby possesses inordinate relative control.—Century Magazine, 37, p. 794.

Regulations and rules, then, are not made to protect those who are wrong, but to facilitate the proceedings of those whose action when it takes place becomes the law of the land. Of course, such rules ought to provide for debate and for due and careful consideration. But after debate and after due and careful consideration there ought to be no hindrance to action except those checks and balances which our Constitution wisely provides. If the majority of the House of Representatives—each man selected from at least 30,000 voters—can not be trusted, who can? Nor is this the only safeguard. Each one of these men is watched by the people. He renders account at the end of each term. If such a man so situated must be held in leading strings, representative democracy is a failure.—Century Magazine, 37, p. 795.

APPENDIX B.

RULES OF HOUSE V. RIGHTS OF HOUSE.

Speaker CANNON: Gentlemen, I have made my protest; I do it in sorrow and in humiliation, but there it is; and in my opinion another body under these methods must change its methods of procedure, or our body, backed up by the people, will compel that change, else this body, close to the people, shall become a mere tender, a mere bender of the "pregnant hinges of the knee," to submit to what any one Member of another body may demand of this body as a price for legislation.—Congressional Record, vol. 36, part 3, pp. 3058–3059.

Ambassador BRYCE: Although the Senate does draw off from the House many of its ablest men, it is not clear, paradoxical as the observation may appear, that the House would be much better off for retaining these men. The faults of the House are mainly due, not to want of talent among individuals, but to its defective methods, and especially to the absence of leadership. These are faults that twenty or thirty able men would not cure. Some of the committees would be stronger, and so far the work would be better done. But the House as a whole would not (assuming its rules and usages to remain what they are now) be distinctly a greater power in the country.—The American Commonwealth, p. 140.

Judge HANNIS TAYLOR: However this may be, one thing is certain, and that is that the inefficiency of the House does not grow out of any inferiority of its membership to that of the Senate, but rather out of the cumbersome and unwieldy parliamentary system by which its energies are paralyzed.—Atlantic Monthly, vol. 65, p. 769.

Senator HOAR: There are few subjects of equal public interest concerning which so much misunderstanding prevails among well-informed people as the course of business in the national House of Representatives. Most persons think that their Representative can at any time, if he choose, rise in his place and demand the attention of the House to a speech on any subject which may interest him or his constituents, and compel the body to record its opinion on any bill or resolution he sees fit to introduce. This is far from being true. The House of Representatives is governed by a complicated and artificial system of rules, so difficult to be understood that many able men of great national fame go through long terms of service without professing to comprehend it. It is not my purpose to write a treatise on this complex arrangement. I wish only to call attention to the operation of a few parts of the mechanism which seem to me to require alteration, and to show how they tend to diminish the authority, weight, and dignity of the House, and how they have deprived that illustrious body of the equality with the Senate which the framers of the Constitution contemplated.—N. Am. Rev., vol. 128, p. 113.

But the destruction of the rightful power of the House over the great appropriation bills which regulate and supply the Government in all its ordinary administrative functions, and which contain a very large portion of its general legislation, is rendered more complete by the method of doing business to which the House has confined itself by its own rules.—N. Am. Rev., vol. 128, p. 117.

The surrender of the power of amendment, then, as it has invariably been construed, was the surrender of the whole privilege. It has not only destroyed the advantage intended to be secured for the immediate representatives of the people, but has given the Senate a considerable preponderance of influence in legislation. It has enabled the Senate to exert the power of tacking clauses to bills of supply, and thereby to extort the consent of the House.—N. Am. Rev., vol. 128, p. 117.

Upon the great questions which move the heart of the nation and divide political parties, the body of the House and its leaders are commonly in full accord, and the representatives of the American people know how to make their power felt and assume their rightful and constitutional place in legislation. But even here it is not enough that the House preserves its power. The power to do what it will, and to refuse consent to what it will not, will not preserve its own dignity or its value as an important factor in legislation unless its will is the result of its best judgment; in other words, unless it preserves its function as a deliberative assembly. The difficulty is not that on great occasions and great questions the voice of the House is stifled. On such occasions the House and its leaders are in accord with each other, and commonly in accord with a public sentiment which the Senate will not lightly resist. But the practice I have been exposing tends largely to take from the House the character of a deliberative assembly. The barren and empty privilege of originating bills of revenue and bills of supply it has purchased at the sacrifice of that essential prerogative—essential to its own dignity and to that of every individaul among its Members—its freedom of debate.—N. Am. Rev., vol. 128, p. 120.

If the reader has followed this somewhat technical statement, he has observed that while the power of amendment reserved in our Constitution, as it is expounded in practice, allows to the Senate and to each of its Members the fullest opportunity to deal with appropriation and revenue bills as freely as with bills relating to any other subject, the rules and usages of the House leave that body with much less practical power of deliberation or amendment in regard to all those provisions which have their origin in the Senate than the House of Lords has in relation to money bills under the English system.—N. Am. Rev., vol. 128, p. 119.

It is needless to set forth at length the evils which this state of things brings forth. There is one which I regard as peculiarly unfortunate for the character and dignity of the House, and whose bad consequences can hardly be overstated. It is that almost inevitably the Speaker of the House is forced into the position of a party leader.—N. Am. Rev., vol. 128, p. 133.

I have failed to make myself understood if the reader has not seen how completely, by its own rules, the House has deprived itself of "that freedom of deliberation, speech, and debate" which our early American Constitutions declare to be "essential to the rights of the people."—N. Am. Rev., vol. 128, p. 122.

Degrading as this system is to the House as a body, its effect on the individual Member is still more remarkable. The whole power of legislation over that vast field which is covered by the Senate's amendments to the great appropriation bills is in practice delegated to two of the three Members who are appointed on the conference committee. No other Member gets a chance to discuss them, to vote separately on any one of them, to make any motion in relation to them, or even to see in print what the committee recommend in regard to them. "Gape, sinner, and swallow."—N. Am. Rev., vol. 151, p. 118.

Prof. A. MAURICE LOW: * * * Perhaps the most important divergence, which is almost the most dangerous to the rights and liberties of the people and to the future of the Republic, is the right arrogated by the Senate (which, I regret to say, has been ratified by the Supreme Court) to control the purse, which in its broader sense means not only the right to make appropriations but the higher privilege to impose taxation. The Constitution provides that all bills raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives; but the Senate has power to amend these bills. By this power of amendment the Senate has defeated the purpose of the Constitution, which was to retain the taxing power in the hands of the representatives of the people. The tariff, which is the great source of revenue, is no longer the creation of the House. The House passes a tariff bill, which the Senate proceeds to "amend" in accordance with its own views or the special interests represented by particular Senators. Surely when the Senate strikes out of a tariff bill passed by the House everything except the enacting clause, writes in a new bill, and returns it to the House with an ultimatum that the House must either accept the Senate "amendment" or no tariff bill will be passed, it is obvious that that particular bill has originated in the Senate, even though the constitutional form has been observed because its origin can be traced to the House.

When we turn to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to "money" or, as we now term them, "appropriation" bills, they are so numerous that it is impossible to catalogue them. As a matter of practice appropriation bills are, almost invariably, initiated by the House; but the Senate regards the House bill not as a finality, but as a "project" (to use the word applied by a Senator to describe a treaty sent to the Senate for ratification). In other words, the bill passed by the House is a scheme expressing the views of the House in regard to the disbursement of the public moneys, but of no more binding force than a recommendation made by the head of a department. It is notorious that the Senate almost invariably increases the appropriations made by the House; it is equally notorious that in any contest between the House and the Senate it is the House that, nine times out of ten, has to yield to the Senate. The reason for this can be easily explained.

The legislative surrender of the House of Representatives to the Senate began with the election of Mr. Reed to the speakership of the Fifty-first Congress. Mr. Reed found himself confronted with a state of affairs that demanded a drastic remedy. The majority, because of the adoption of foolish rules, was at the mercy of the minority. Practically, business could only be transacted by unanimous consent or the test of endurance. The House could be rendered impotent by the opposition offering diliatory motions which, under the rules, must be voted on to the exclusion of legitimate business, or by breaking a quorum. When Mr. Reed came to the chair he had vivid recollections of the bitter contest over the direct tax bill, when for twenty-six consecutive hours members sat behind locked doors while a call of the House was in progress and the Sergeant-at-Arms and his deputies were scouring Washington to bring Members under arrest to the bar of the House.

Mr. Reed resolved, very properly, that the majority, being responsible for legislation, should have the power to legislate. He framed a code of rules (and parenthetically it is interesting to add that the code framed sixteen years ago is virtually the code of to-day) that centralized all power in the hands of the Speaker and deprived the "private Member" of all power. Mr. Reed aimed at two things: to enable the House to transact business instead of wasting its time in mere idle talk; to check the rising tide of extravagance that threatened to swamp the Treasury. When the House had adopted these rules it was within the power of the Speaker to regulate to the fraction of a second the exact time to be allotted to the consideration of any measure; to permit a measure to be considered or to prevent its consideration.

No man entertains higher appreciation for Mr. Reed than I. His lofty ideals, his great reforms, and the courageous example he has set the country entitle him to the profound gratitude of the American people. And yet I am forced reluctantly to admit that Mr. Reed's rules had unfortunate consequences, albeit they were consequences that Mr. Reed could not foresee.

In his desire to prevent time from being frittered away it often happened that even vital measures were disposed of without proper consideration. When the time set for taking a vote arrived the gavel fell, often in the midst of a sentence, and all debate ceased. And because of the Speaker's rigid ideas of economy, Members who were unable to secure appropriations induced Senators to offer these bills in the Senate in the form of amendments.

The rules of the Senate are radically different from those of the House. In the Senate there is no limitation of debate. So long as the physical endurance of a Senator lasts so long may he speak; and by an unwritten but strictly observed rule the Senator who is weary may defer the conclusion of his speech until such time as he shall have sufficiently recuperated. Like the mysterious East, the Senate can not be hurried. It is this freedom of debate that makes the individual Senator so all powerful, which is in such marked contrast to the individual Representative, who has no individual power. * * * We have seen that the Senate has usurped legislative powers that the Constitution did not originally contemplate it should possess, and by that usurpation the importance and dignity of the House of Representatives has been correspondingly decreased. It no longer controls the purse, but has been forced to share that control with the Senate.—The Amer. Political Sci. Rev., vol. 1, No. 1.

HENRY H. SMITH (ex-clerk Committee on Rules): The logical effect of this is to increase, first, the power of the Senate, which in self-defense loads down the general appropriation bills, which must go through, with general legislation which it has previously incorporated in separate bills and passed, but which a majority of the House Committee on Rules—i. e., the Speaker—refuse consideration, and secondly, by increasing the power of the House conferees on general appropriation bills.—Chautauquan, vol. 30, p. 242.

Senator THURSTON: It has come to be understood in the United States that the great forum for public discussion is now transferred from the House of Representatives to the Senate. The people of the country now look to the latter body for the real consideration of public measures. Legislation is forced through the House by the arbitrary power of the majority. It is enacted under the whip and spur of the party in power. It is, in few cases, given time for anything like deliberative consideration. It is, in fact, the legislative enactment of the Speaker, the committee, and the caucus.—Ind., vol. 54, p. 963.

Professor REINSCH: This defense shows clearly the cumbersomeness of the entire system of financial legislation. In order to live up to the rules of the House it would be necessary for some twenty or thirty committees to act, before a legal basis for an adequate general appropriation bill could be laid. But only if they should act in harmony would such a result be possible. Who, then, is to elaborate the plan which would govern all these committees in their recommendations? Who is to look after the various committees and see that they actually bring in the legislation necessary for the complete realization of the plan? The very cumbersomeness of this machinery has for years driven the Committee on Appropriations to do what, under the rules of the House, was illegal, but what, from the point of view of the needs of the Government, was absolutely necessary. The House, conscious of this necessity, had tacitly agreed to this continued evasion of the rules, and it was only when the Committee on Appropriations tried to take a new step in the direction of centralization that opposition was aroused. The opposition to the resolution reported by the Committee on Rules was naturally very strong. It was pointed out that this was the most radical measure ever proposed by the committee; that there was no reason why one committee should be thus favored by having its bills freed from the impediments of points of order. It was further pointed out that this was a very dangerous precedent, in that, as 100 Members constitute a quorum in the Committee of the Whole, 51 Members might enact all sorts of legislation unhindered by points of order based on the rules of the House. Under this method of precedure it would be possible to keep in the bill indefensible favors for some of the Members of the House and their protégés. But notwithstanding all this opposition the resolution was passed, and the bill was thus freed from all further interference by points of order. * * * The recent modifications in the procedure of the House of Representatives have resulted in a decided increase of the influence of the Senate. On account of the strict rules of the House, cutting off debate and even the right of amendment, full discussion of a measure is rarely ever had in the House, and there has resulted an unmistakable loss of the sense of responsiblity among its Members. * * * Amendments to appropriation bills that would have no chance of passage in the House or which have been ruled out on a point of order will often be offered in the Senate, through the friendly offices of some member of that body, who, through such favors, makes individual Representatives dependent on his good will. * * * A controversy of long standing between the two Houses is connected with the introduction of bills raising revenue, which by the Constitution is left entirely to the House of Representatives. * * * At the end of the session, after legislative measures have been subjected to extensive discussion in the Senate, and when little or no time remains for action in the House, the conference committees meet to discuss the points of difference between the two Houses. At this time the representatives of the Senate are apt to use the inability of that body to close discussion as a cudgel to be held over the House of Representatives, in order to force it to accept the point of view of the Senate. Their arguments upon such occasions take the following form: "This is the best we can secure. Should we introduce an enactment complying with the wishes of the House it would inevitably be talked to death by certain Senators who are opposed to this measure. Therefore, if any action is to be had at all we must adopt the compromise proposed by the Senate." The repeated use of this argument finally drove the leaders of the House to remonstrance; after the incident of the claim mentioned above they made a declaration of independence. Under the rules of the House, general appropriation bills are not allowed to include changes of existing law. But the Senate has no such rule, and, in the words of Mr. Hull, "there is hardly a conference report adopted by the House that does not contain legislation which could not have been brought in under the rules."—American Legislature and Legislative Methods.

RULES OF HOUSE V. RIGHTS OF PEOPLE.

Historian JAMES CLARK RIDPATH: Under this scepter where are the people? Nowhere. Where are their rights? Purely mythical. Where is their power? Paralyzed and destroyed by the ascendency of party. Recently it has been loudly proclaimed that the actions of the House of Representatives are the actions of the people. It is said that the Representatives are "fresh from the people;" that they know the people's voice, and do the people's bidding. There never was a greater sophism, never a greater falsehood.—Arena, vol. 17, p. 969.

GAMALIEL BRADFORD: The complete anarchy and absence of leadership in the House of Representatives have evolved in the Speaker the greatest power of any individual in the country. By his power of making up the standing committees, in which, of course, he must pay his debts to those to whom he owes his election; by his further power of recognizing or ignoring whom he pleases in debate, and by the new power of counting a quorum at his pleasure, not yet fully crystallized, but in a very promising stage, he has become one of the greatest dangers to the liberties of this country. And this is all the more so that the Speaker, like every other Member, only represents a single district, is in no way responsible for legislation, and neither directly nor indirectly for the effect of laws upon the Administration. Instead of being an impartial presiding officer he is the purest instrument of party politics manipulated by the lobby.—Political and Social Science, vol. 4, p. 74.

HENRY LOOMIS NELSON: It has become the fashion for the occupant of the chair to set up as a censor over the House, and to refuse to permit the Representatives to have their way if he considers it a bad way. A good Speaker may, by exercising this kind of supervision, save the Government a great deal of money and keep the House clean from many a scandal that might otherwise rest upon it; but a bad Speaker may as easily help and encourage all manner of corruption. At all events, the practice is contrary to the theory of representative government—which is that the majority of the legislative body shall do its pleasure so long as it keeps within the limitations of the Constitution.—Atlantic Monthly, vol. 64, p. 72.

This power is enormous and, because many Speakers have endeavored to exercise it fairly and for the advancement of the public business, it is none the less dangerous. The order of business and the character of legislation of the House of Representatives rest largely in the discretion of one man, who is not held responsible because he is not charged with the task which he performs. The first thoroughly bad Speaker we have will show the country what an evil thing is.—Atlantic Monthly, vol. 64, p. 73.

It is an evil power, because its possessor is not responsible for its abuse. It is not wielded openly and in the presence of the country. Few people outside of Congress know that it resides anywhere, least of all that a certain measure has been brought up because the Speaker chose to recognize the mover, and agreed with him in advance that he would. It is not realized that very little can be done without the Speaker's consent, and that next to nothing can be accomplished against his opposition. It is a just theory of our institutions that all functions that are not exercised in public, and for the abuse of which no one can be held responsible, are dangerous to the welfare of the Government. It is the great evil of the Speaker's power that the temptation to abuse it, for his party, is forever pushing him in the direction of extreme partisanship. When he yields to the pressure, or when he connives at the passage of an unsound bill or the killing of a popular measure, he does not stand in the open light, under the gaze of the country, he deals his blow from behind and surreptitiously.—The Atlantic Monthly, vol. 64, p. 68.

HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST (Com. Dist. Columbia): The trouble is that the House is no longer a deliberative body, but is dominated by partisan influences and by autocratic rules which admit of no freedom of action. An inflamed condition of the public mind, inordinate desire for power, motives of party revenge—all these can easily be potent in securing the passage through the House of measures that would disgrace the statute books.—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 164, p. 758.

Armed with a plentitude of power beside which the authority of the President of the United States seems mean and insignificant, the Speaker of the House of Representatives is to-day the autocrat of Congress. He is the absolute arbiter of the destinies of all legislation. the court of last resort from whose decision there is no appeal. In the hands of designing or unscrupulous men the control now vested in the officer of Speaker could easily menace the Republic with gravest danger. Even as it is, these functions have reached that all-compelling degree which demands something more than mere casual attention.—Forum, vol. 23, p. 343.

Members of Congress are already becoming restive under the bonds which they have unwittingly forged for themselves. They find that the Representative of a flourishing manufacturing district, of the farming community, of the commercial center, is reduced to a mere cipher in the transaction of public business, and his legislative functions are usurped. His usefulness to his people at home is not only impaired, but is actually rendered nil, unless he manages to ingratiate himself with the Speaker. Chairmen of committees, when questioned regarding prospective legislation, are compelled shamefacedly to confess that it is the Speaker who is to be consulted. What is the result? If the individual member is outside the charmed circle of favored friends, his constituents clamor in vain while he chafes, silent and powerless, in his seat; if the bill which the chairman of the committee is supposed to have in charge finds not favor in the Speaker's eye, it remains coffined upon a calendar already burdened with legislative corpses.—Forum, vol. 23, p. 349.

THOMAS B. REED: But whether they venture on this action or not, the whole subject needs the sunlight of public opinion. If the American people do not get a Congress such as they wish, and legislation such as they need, it is entirely their own fault. I do not mean that they might have elected better men and are therefore to blame. They are at fault if they do not see that the work is done after the men are elected. Public opinion is the ultimate governing power, and if the people were thoroughly in earnest to prevent the waste of time and the injustice of delay involved in bad rules and worse practices, they would find that their servants would no more defy them than they would Him who put into their nostrils the breath of life.—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 149, p. 428.

* * * Members are representatives, not acting in their own right, but in the right of their constituents. As a body they represent the whole people of the United States, and have, therefore, no right to limit their own power. Rules should not be barriers; they should be guides.—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 149, pp. 424–425.

All other countries are growing more and more every day into the sound belief that common sense is the best sense, that a government on the general level is the soundest government, and that the people as a whole are wiser than the most learned men. The United States also ought to keep pace, within the limits of the Constitution, with the progress of the race, and at least demand that in its legislative assemblies the majority shall have the right to control to the extent of the full powers of the body to which they belong, and that the public business shall not be left at the mercy of obstructive politicians who have at heart the rule of party rather than the rule of the people.—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 154, p. 16.

When men learn that the truest foundation on which to build, perpetuate, and maintain a republic is confidence in the wisdom of the plain people, they will cease to deprive them of the power in order to lodge it in the hands of the few whose only claim to wisdom and virtue is their paucity of numbers. When the world reaches a real belief in government by the people, we shall find it the surest safeguard of liberty and property; we shall find States better ruled and cities better governed than by any of those devices which are based on the false idea that for the government of all the wisdom of the few is better than the wisdom of the many.—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 150, p. 390.

Speaker JOHN G. CARLISLE: While the right to enlarge or restrict these powers, duties, and responsibilities by its own rules was expressly conferred upon the House of Representatives, it can not be supposed that the authors of the Constitution intended, by this clause, to authorize the exercise of a power which would destroy or impair the free representative character of the body itself. Like all other powers delegated by the Constitution, the authority to make rules must be construed and exercised in harmony with the general spirit and plan of our republican institutions; and therefore any rule which confers upon the Speaker arbitrary power and allows him, at his own will and pleasure, to deprive members of the right to make ordinary parliamentary motions and have them voted on by the House is an inexcusable surrender of the privileges of a free constituency, and a gross perversion of a power which was conferred for the very purpose of promoting and preserving the independence of the Representative. Members of the House do not act for themselves, either in making rules or passing laws; they act for the people whom they represent, and whenever they put fetters upon their own limbs or stifle their own voices, they inflict a grievous injury upon their constituents.—N. Amer. Rev., vol. 150, p. 391.

Ambassador BRYCE: What are the results of this system?

It destroys the unity of the House as a legislative body.

It prevents the capacity of the best Members from being brought to bear upon any piece of legislation, however important.

It cramps debate.

It lessens the cohesion and harmony of legislation.

It gives facilities for the exercise of underhand and even corrupt influence.

It reduces responsibility.

It lowers the interest of the nation in the proceedings of Congress.

It throws power into the hands of the chairmen of the committees, especially, of course, of those which deal with finances and with great material interests.

Summing up, we may say that under this system the House dispatches a vast amount of work and does the negative part of it, the killing of worthless bills, in a thorough way. Were the committees abolished and no other organization substituted, the work could not be done. But much of it, including most of the private bills, ought not to come before Congress at all; and the more important part of what remains, viz, public legislation, is dealt with by methods which secure neither the pressing forward of the measures most needed, nor the due debate of those that are pressed forward.—The American Commonwealth, p. 119.

The marvel comes to be not that legislation is faulty, but that an intensely practical people tolerate such defective machinery. * * * The Americans surpass all other nations in their power of making the best of bad conditions, getting the largest results out of scanty materials or rough methods. Many things in that country work better than they ought to work, so to speak, or could work in any other country, because the people are shrewdly alert in minimizing such mischiefs as arise from their own haste or heedlessness, and have a great capacity for self-help. Aware that they have this gift, Americans leave their political machinery unreformed. * * * The national inventiveness, active in the spheres of mechanics and money making spend little of its force on the details of governmental methods.—Cosmopolitan, vol. 24, p. 634.

Judge HANNIS TAYLOR: Those who have carefully observed the procedure of our national House of Representatives during the last twenty years can hardly differ as to the fact that it is yearly becoming more and more unequal to the task of discharging the vast and intricate duties which are cast upon it by the ever-increasing wants of our complex national life. That this inadequacy will increase as our domain widens and as our population increases can scarcely be doubted, provided no way can be found to remove the impediments which now choke up the main channel of national legislation. The public generally understands that at every session, after ten thousand or more bills and joint resolutions have been dumped in upon the House, it goes through a protracted period of outward activity, during which it deliberates very little, and legislates less, so far as vital national interests are concerned. The House is thus beginning to be looked upon as a vast graveyard, in which all serious national business is laid to rest. The conviction is every day deepening that the overshadowing questions touching taxation, finance, the public defense, and the like enter its portals only to perish in a despairing struggle with the elements of political obstruction, which even their urgency has no power to overcome. In this way the House is ceasing to be the workshop of the Constitution; it is degenerating into an expensive and unwieldy machine, which does little or no business of real value and importance.—Atlantic Monthly, vol. 65, pp. 768–769.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Before that is done, I ask leave for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

The motion that the committee rise was then agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker, having resumed the Chair, Mr. PERKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 15219), the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent reference of the bill (H. R. 9205) to make the provisions of an act of Congress approved February 28, 1891 (26 Stats., p. 796), applicable to the Territory of New Mexico, was changed from the Committee on Agriculture to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By unanimous consent, reference of concurrent resolution No. 20, for printing report of the Board of Engineers on Rivers and Harbors on the proposed improvement of the Ohio River, was changed from the Committee on Rivers and Harbors to the Committee on Printing.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. HALE, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Andrew Baird, H. R. 5437, Fifty-eighth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to modify the order made last Friday, providing for one hour and a half more general debate to-morrow, the time to be equally divided between the two sides.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred, as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to enable certain lands in the Otoe and Missouria Indian reservations in Oklahoma to be ceded to the Society of Friends—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending authorization of the payment of the tribal trust fund to the Iowa Indians in Kansas and Oklahoma—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending authorization of the payment of the tribal trust fund to the Sac and Fox Indians of the Mississippi tribe in Oklahoma—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriation for the relief of Capt. George H. Penrose, United States Army—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, recommending legislation relative to tide lands in Washington claimed by Puyallup Indians—to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. CHANEY, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15846) to provide increased force and salaries in the United States Patent Office, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 643), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14016) to amend section 461 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act of April 2, 1888, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 645), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HULL of Iowa, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish three condemned cannon to the mayor of the city of Detroit, Mich., to be placed on the base of a statue of the late Maj. Gen. Alexander Macomb, United States Army, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 650), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. REYNOLDS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14021) to provide a manner for restoring lands to the public domain, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 651), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12398) to authorize the War Department to transfer to the State of Kansas certain land now a part of the Fort Riley Military Reservation, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 677), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. MADISON, from the Committee on Labor, to which was referred the resolution of the House (H. J. Res. 84) appointing a commission to investigate the recent mining disasters in certain States of the United States, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 678), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15660) to provide for the repayment of certain commissions and purchase moneys paid under the public-land laws, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 679), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. CANDLER, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10075) for the relief of Copiah County, Miss., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 644), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1406) granting an increase of pension to Hester Kite, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 652), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 523) granting an increase of pension to John S. Hyatt, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 653), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 524) granting an increase of pension to John Lowder, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 654), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1403) granting an increase of pension to Martha Stewart, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 655), which said bill and report were referrred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1408) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Sweat, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 656), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1405) granting an increase of pension to William C. O'Neal, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 657), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1404) granting an increase of pension to

John Lourcey, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 658), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1757) granting an increase of pension to Jane C. Stingley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 659), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10018) granting an increase of pension to Ophelia J. Gordon, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 668), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11145) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Nixon, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 669), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. McLAIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11217) granting an increase of pension to Emiline M. Strong, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 670), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12280) granting an increase of pension to Martha C. Pace, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 671), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13708) granting an increase of pension to William Goulding, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 672), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14338) granting an increase of pension to Eliza D. Ramey, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 673), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. McLAIN, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 14906) granting an increase of pension to Sarah E. Willis, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 674), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15068) granting an increase of pension to Martha Marble, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 675), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. RICHARDSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15401) granting an increase of pension to Louisa J. Long, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 676), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11464) granting a pension to Anna Borkowski—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5796) granting a pension to Mary A. Barrand—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 16180) for the relief of the estate of William F. Sharp—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on War Claims.

A bill (H. R. 16182) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against Thomas Martin—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ADDISON D. JAMES: A bill (H. R. 16360) to increase the amount fixed as the limit of cost of site and building at Bowling Green, Ky.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LINDBERGH: A bill (H. R. 16361) for the erection and construction of a public building in the city of Brainerd, Minn., for the accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 16362) to fix the fees in naturalization proceedings—to the Committee on Expenses in the Department of Justice.

By Mr. PATTERSON: A bill (H. R. 16363) providing for the erection of a public building at Edgefield, S. C.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky: A bill (H. R. 16364) to provide for the construction of roads to Lincoln Farm, in Kentucky—to the Committee on Appropriations.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting certified copies of the findings of fact filed by the court in the following causes:

In the cause of the St. Paul's Episcopal Church, of Selma, Ala., v. United States; and

In the cause of the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Powder Springs, Ga., v. United States.

The foregoing findings were, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. VREELAND, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented memorials of the Arion Singing Society of South Norwalk; Blucher Lodge, No. 28, Sons of Herman, of Colchester, and of the Schiller Stamm Turnverein, of South Norwalk, all in the State of Connecticut, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of the congregation of the Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church of Hinsdale, of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Dover, in the State of New Hampshire, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Moorestown, N. J., and of sundry citizens of Tribune County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which were referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. CULLOM presented a resolution of the legislature of the State of Illinois, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Forty-fifth assembly, house resolution 88, January, 1908.

Introduced by Hon. Johnson Lawrence.

Whereas it is a well-known fact that the men who served in the Union Army during the civil war and were captured by the enemy suffered untold hardships and privations unparalleled in the annals of war while confined in southern stockades and other so-called military prisons for many long and weary months; and

Whereas a measure known as the Hamilton bill will be introduced in the next Congress which proposes to pension all survivors of these prison pens at the the rate of $50 per month, believing the measure would do partial justice to this class of our volunteers: Therefore

Resolved, That we, the representatives of the people of the State of Illinois, heartily indorse the said Hamilton bill and respectfully request Congress to pass the measure; be it Further resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to each Member of Congress from Illinois, the Speaker of the House, and also to Senators SHELBY M. CULLOM and A. J. HOPKINS.

Adopted by the House January 28, 1908.

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Illinois, ss:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, James A. Rose, secretary of state of the State of Illinois, do hereby certify that the foregoing resolution of the house of representatives of the forty-fifth general assembly of the State of Illinois, passed and adopted at the regular session thereof, is a true and correct copy of the original resolution now on file in the office of the secretary of state.

In witness whereof, I hereunto set my hand and affix the great seal of State, at the city of Springfield, this 31st day of January, A. D. 1908.

[SEAL.] JAMES A. ROSE,

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1702) to reimburse H. R. King, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4541) to authorize the sale of 640 acres of the lands of the Cheyenne and Arapahoe Agency and the Arapahoe School, Oklahoma, and the use of the proceeds thereof, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FORAKER, from the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to whom was referred the bill (S. 389) for the relief of the Compañía de los Ferrocarriles de Puerto Rico, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. OWEN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4289) for the relief of the people of Hartshorne, Okla., reported it with an amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4922) providing for the platting and selling of the south half of section 30, township 2 north, range 11 west of the Indian meridian, in the State of Oklahoma, for town-site purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2893) providing for the disposition of the balance of the funds derived from the sale of town lots in the county seats of Caddo, Kiowa, and Comanche counties, Okla.; and

A bill (S. 2892) to provide for the repayment of deposits by bidders of Kiowa-Comanche and Apache ceded lands.

BRIDGEPORT COLLECTION DISTRICT, CONNECTICUT.

Mr. SMITH. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9217) amending sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, so as to change the name of the Fairfield collection district, to report it favorably without amendment, and I submit a report thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend the fifth paragraph of section 2533 of the Revised Statutes of the United States so as to read:

Fifth. The district of Bridgeport, to comprise all the waters and shores in the State of Connecticut west of the district of New Haven, in which Bridgeport shall be the port of entry, and Norwalk and Stamford subports of entry, and Greenwich and Stratford ports of delivery.

And to amend paragraph 5 of section 2534 so as to read:

Fifth. In the district of Bridgeport, a collector, who shall reside at Bridgeport.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MAJ. GEN. OLIVER O. HOWARD.

Mr. SCOTT. I am directed by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Military Affairs to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 3024) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Maj. Gen. Oliver O. Howard, retired, to be lieutenant-general, United States Army, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Maj. Gen. Oliver O. Howard, United States Army, retired, to be lieutenant-general, United States Army, with the pay and allowances established by law for officers of that grade on the retired list.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SURVEY OF BAYOU LE BATRE, ALABAMA.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. JOHNSTON on the 31st ultimo, reported it without amendment:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of Bayou Le Batre, in the State of Alabama, with a view to deepening the same, and to submit estimates therefor.

SURVEY OF CHICKASABOGUE CREEK, ALABAMA.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. JOHNSTON on the 31st ultimo, reported it without amendment:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of the mouth of Chickasabogue Creek, in the State of Alabama, with a view to opening the same, and to submit estimates therefor.

SURVEY OF BEAUFORT HARBOR, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by himself on the 31st ultimo, reported it without amendment:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey and examination to be made of Beaufort Harbor, North Carolina, with a view to improving the navigability thereof, and providing a channel of 8-foot depth from the channel at the bulkhead in the Newport River to the town of Beaufort and from the town of Beaufort to the channel at Gallants Point, and to submit estimates therefor.

SURVEY OF BOGUE SOUND, NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by himself on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of that part of Bogue Sound contiguous to the town of Morehead City, N. C., beginning at the mouth of Hard Scrabble Slough, running westwardly between the said town and the marshes in front of the same, to the main channel of Bogue Sound on the west of Sandy Point Shoal, with a view of estimating the cost of obtaining a channel in said part of Bogue Sound 100 feet in width and of a depth of 5, 8, and 10 feet at low water.

SURVEY OF WASHITA RIVER, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. GORE on the 4th instant, reported it without amendment:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Washita River, Oklahoma, from the point of its confluence with the Red River to the town of Mountain View, in Kiowa County, Okla., with a view of dredging, cleaning out, and widening the channel, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 12 o'clock on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I know the motion is not open to discussion, but I want to appeal to the Senator from Massachusetts, in the interest of the progress of the unfinished business, that he withhold his motion and not press it. There are a number of us who are willing to work, and it is a very good rule that when men are willing to work they should be given an opportunity.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not desire to press the motion if the Senator from Idaho is anxious to go on with the bill to-morrow. I will withhold the motion for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. LODGE subsequently said: I renew my motion. I understand that the Senator from Idaho makes no further objection to it.

Mr. CULBERSON. We did not hear the motion on this side; at least, I did not.

Mr. LODGE. I said that I renew the motion I made, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet at 12 o'clock on Monday.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Massachusetts will not press that motion. I have in charge the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition bill. I am going to try to get up the bill to-day, and if I can not get it up to-day I should like to bring it before the Senate to-morrow.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state that the motion is not debatable, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. I suppose there will be no objection to our conferring upon the subject, and I want to say one word.

It possibly may appear in adjourning over from Thursday to Monday that there is "nothing doing," as the common expression is; but that is a very great mistake. There are a number of committees that have very arduous labors. I myself am on a subcommittee that will be occupied all of to-morrow upon the nomination of a judge, which is contested. The next day the Judiciary Committee has to hear arguments upon a matter which the committee has been directed by the Senate to report upon. So we do not adjourn over to be idle, by any means; we adjourn over for the purpose of doing necessary work, and we can not work here at the same time we are doing the work there.

I hope the motion will prevail.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM A. HINSCH.

Mr. FORAKER. I report back favorably, with amendments, from the Committee on Military Affairs the bill (S. 3388) to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch, and I submit a report on the same. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the committee was, in line 5, after the name "Hinsch," to strike out the words "completed his three months' term of enlistment in Company F, Twelfth Regiment" and insert "was honorably discharged from Company F, Twelfth Regiment," so as to read:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to so amend the records of the War Department as to show that William A. Hinsch was honorably discharged from Company F, Twelfth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and was duly and properly mustered out of such service before enlisting for three years' service in the Fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other allowances may accrue or become payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

A bill (S. 5081) granting a pension to Isadore Wright Terry; and

A bill (S. 5082) granting a pension to William Fidler.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 5083) to amend section 1 of the passenger act of 1882, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 5084) for the relief of Elizabeth H. Rice, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 5085) authorizing the construction of a light-house tender for the light-house inspector of the twelfth light-house district, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 5086) granting a pension to James Cookley, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 5087) for the relief of Matthew McDaniel, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. KEAN introduced a bill (S. 5088) to provide American register for the steamer Eva, which was read twice by its title and, with an accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RAYNER introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 5089) for the relief of Frances Schnebley, administratrix of Jacob Schnebley; and

A bill (S. 5090) for the relief of James Phillips and certain other naval officers and their heirs or legal representatives.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5091) to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of James H. Gambrell, United States Navy, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5092) to remove the charge of desertion against the military record of James A. Windsor, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. McCREARY introduced a bill (S. 5093) for the relief of Christ Protestant Episcopal Church, Bowling Green, Ky., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 5094) granting a pension to John Hedrick, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 5095) to increase the efficiency of the United States Navy by building cruisers and torpedo boats after the design of Richard B. Painton, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 5096) granting a pension to Moses E. Osborn;

A bill (S. 5097) granting an increase of pension to Miles Wall;

A bill (S. 5098) granting an increase of pension to Randolph Hayman;

A bill (S. 5099) granting an increase of pension to Peter Grace;

A bill (S. 5100) granting an increase of pension to Delight A. Allen;

A bill (S. 5101) granting an increase of pension to C. W. Couser;

A bill (S. 5102) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Whittington;

A bill (S. 5103) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Jaquette;

A bill (S. 5104) granting an increase of pension to Henry Bisbin;

A bill (S. 5105) granting an increase of pension to John Kugle (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5106) granting a pension to Eleanor J. Bell (with an accompanying paper).

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 5107) to authorize the extension and enlargement of the post-office building at Lima, Ohio, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. WHYTE introduced a bill (S. 5108) granting a pension to Emil Kuhblank, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 5109) relating to the issuance or granting of injunctions, interlocutory orders, or decrees by circuit and district courts of the United States, or by any circuit or district judge thereof, suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State or the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute in certain cases, which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. BACON. I ask that the bill be read at length.

The bill was read the second time at length and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

A bill (S. 5109) relating to the issuance or granting of injunctions, interlocutory orders, or decrees by circuit and district courts of the United States, or by any circuit or district judge thereof, suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State or the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That no injunction, interlocutory order, or decree suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State or the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute shall be issued or granted by any circuit or district court of the United States, or by any judge or justice thereof, upon the ground of unconstitutionality, or upon any ground whatsoever, unless the application for the same shall be actually heard, and upon issue made and preliminary proof taken by affidavit or otherwise, the judgment thereon rendered, by at least three judges, and each of at least two of said three judges shall be either a judge of the circuit court of the United States or a circuit justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

No such injunction, interlocutory order, or decree shall be issued or granted except on hearing after not less than five days' notice to the governor of such State, and to such other officer or officers as shall be proper parties to said application. An appeal may be taken from any such injunction, interlocutory order, or decree issued or granted upon such application, which appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, and shall take precedence in the appellate court over all other causes, except causes of like character and criminal causes.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DIXON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the rebuilding of the flour, saw, and shingle mill at the Flathead Indian Reservation, subagency at Ronan, Mont., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

TARIFF RATES.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I submit a resolution which I ask may be read and lie on the table.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the tariff should provide for maximum and minimum rates of duty, the first to apply to all countries that will not grant to this country special commercial advantages in their markets and the second to apply to all countries that will grant to this country special commercial advantages in their markets, and that both maximum and minimum rates should be arranged according to the principles of protection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

ENLARGEMENT OF FREE LIST.

Mr. GORE. I desire to introduce a resolution. I ask that the resolution be read and go over under the rule.

The resolution was read as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that the following articles should be placed on the free list by Congress at the present session without awaiting the advice or delay of a tariff commission, to wit: Printing paper and wood pulp, farming implements and barbed wire, mechanics and miners' tools, and powder used in mining, coal, and petroleum, crude and refined.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following resolution, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Pacific Railroads:

Whereas the Northern Pacific Railway Company, a Wisconsin corporation, claims ownership of all the property and estate formerly of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation created by Congress, and in certain litigation instituted by the United States Government in the United States circuit court for the district of Minnesota for the enforcement of the act of Congress of August 7, 1888 (Rev. Stat., sec. 5269), relative to the exercise of telegraphic franchises, the said Wisconsin corporation, opposing the enforcement of said statute and of the duties and obligations imposed by Congress as to the Northern Pacific Railroad and telegraph line, asserted and averred that by reason of certain foreclosure proceedings and of the purchase of the Northern Pacific estate thereunder on and subsequent to July 25, 1896, the said Wisconsin corporation and the said property are relieved from any of the obligations created by the various acts of Congress which were set forth in the bill of complaint of the United States; and

Whereas said Wisconsin corporation has certified to the Interstate Commerce Commission that its capital stock of $155,000,000 was issued "for the purchase of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company's property," and from the statement of said Wisconsin corporation filed with the State of Montana (a certified copy of which is annexed to this resolution) it appears that all of said stock was issued on and prior to July 13, 1896, before any of said judicial sales occurred, and that, with the exception of forty-three shares thereof, all of said stock was issued in payment for the "stocks, bonds, and securities formerly of or belonging to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, or of interests therein," which stocks, bonds, and securities, it was recited in said statement, "had a cash value exceeding $40,000,000;" and

Whereas it is a matter of public concern that it should be ascertained whether the ownership by the said Wisconsin corporation of the Northern Pacific Railroad land grant and telegraph line is acquired by virtue of valid foreclosure sales divesting the title of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company or whether the same is acquired by purchase of certain securities of the latter company, to the end that it may be determined whether the legal title to the property itself—the railroad, telegraph line, and lands—is vested in a State corporation or in a corporation of Congressional creation over which Congress is possessed of direct and immediate legislative and visitorial power; and

Whereas to enable a vast and unwarranted increase to be made in the issuance and marketing of new stocks and bonds it is alleged that the said Wisconsin corporation upon acquiring the possession of the Northern Pacific estate at once placed upon the same a valuation many millions of dollars in excess of the actual cost thereof, as well as many millions in excess of the valuation which had been reported and returned for the same property immediately prior thereto whilst in the possession or ownership of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested to furnish to the Senate such information as may be obtainable from the Department of Justice, the Department of the Interior, and the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon the matters herein referred to, and to inform the Senate whether on behalf of the Government, through the Department of Justice or otherwise, any investigation has ever been made as to the method of the so-called "reorganization" of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, under which the Wisconsin corporation, known as the "Northern Pacific Railway Company," claims to have acquired the title to the Northern Pacific estate; and if so, with what result.

REPORT ON PUBLIC CREDIT.

Mr. KEAN. I ask to have printed as a document the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit, of January 9, 1790.

Mr. TILLMAN. It is Hamilton's report?

Mr. KEAN. It is.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is very wise to have it printed at this time.

There being no objection, the order was reduced to writing and agreed to, as follows:

Ordered, That the report of the Secretary of the Treasury on public credit under date of January 9, 1790, be printed as a public document, pages 1 to 58, both included.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on this day approved and signed S. 2662, an act to authorize the Arizona and California Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Colorado River at Parker, Ariz.

FRANCHISES OF PORTO RICO.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of section 322 of an act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenues and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, I transmit herewith certified copies of three franchises granted by the executive council of Porto Rico to Messrs. C. & J. Fantauzzi, their successors and assigns.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 6, 1908.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives nonconcurring in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to, and the Vice-President appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER.

SUBPORT OF KNIGHTS KEY, FLORIDA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3344) extending to the subport of Knights Key, in the State of Florida, the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, governing the immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement, returned from the House at the request of the Senate.

Mr. FRYE. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

INCREASE OF PRIVATE PENSIONS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4048) granting an increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war.

The amendments were, on page 6, line 7, to strike out "twenty-four" and insert "thirty;" on page 7, to strike out line 18, down to and including line 21; on page 8, to strike out line 1, down to and including line 4; on page 12, line 23, to strike out "Marth" and insert "Martha;" and on page 14, line 9, to strike out "Almire" and insert "Almira."

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

ACTION OF NEW YORK CITY NATIONAL BANKS IN THE RECENT PANIC.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that resolution No. 88 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution indicated by the Senator from Texas. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if any national banks outside the city of New York complained by telegrams or letters to the Treasury Department, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, or the Comptroller of the Currency, between October 1, 1907, and November 15, 1907, of the refusal of national banks of New York City to pay in cash New York exchange or to respond to calls for reserves; and if so, the Secretary is directed to send to the Senate copies of all such telegrams and letters.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the Secretary of the Treasury has raised an issue of fact by his response to resolution of the Senate No. 33, as to whether the national banks of New York City used the $75,000,000 of public money deposited with them, or part thereof, for speculative purposes, or whether it was used to meet the demands of the outside national banks for their reserve. In his response the Secretary has submitted a number of letters from the chairmen of the clearing house associations of certain cities upon this subject, and I think it is important that we complete the history of the matter by having the correspondence of the national banks with reference to it.

The resolution has not been introduced at haphazard. My information is that there is some correspondence upon this subject, and it is desirable, I think, in the interest of truth and in the interest of legislation, that we may know the real condition.

In addition to that, on the 16th day of December——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Texas yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator will excuse me——

Mr. HOPKINS. Just a moment, to inquire——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas declines to yield.

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not decline to yield. I was about to observe to the Senator from Illinois that he will please excuse me from yielding at this time. I want to state the facts with reference to this matter consecutively, and, as he knows, my time is limited. Unless it is a matter of some very great importance, I would prefer that the Senator would excuse me and permit me to go on without interruption now.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator from Texas in his connected discourse. I understood him to state that the Secretary of the Treasury had raised this issue in his report, and I should like, if it does not disturb him in his connected discourse, to state whereabouts we will find that statement in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. CULBERSON. I do not contemplate delivering a discourse, connected or otherwise, but merely wish to present certain facts to the Senate in connection with these resolutions, and probably the inquiry of the Senator from Illinois will be met as I proceed.

On December 16 I introduced in the Senate a resolution, which is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Finance be, and it is hereby, directed forthwith to inquire fully into the causes of the present financial stringency, and, at as early a date as practicable, make report thereof to the Senate, with such recommendations as in the judgment of the committee will bring speedy relief from existing conditions, prevent their recurrence, and properly conserve the legitimate business and general interests of the country.

On the 18th of December the following colloquy occurred between the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. ALDRICH), the chairman of the Committee on Finance, and myself with reference to the resolution:

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator if he can give any assurance that a report will be made upon this resolution if it is referred to the committee on the reassembling of the Senate after the holidays?

Mr. ALDRICH. The committee will certainly make a report upon this resolution if it is sent to the committee. The Committee on Finance have been in the habit of reporting upon all subjects referred to them, and certainly upon one of this importance the committee will make a report at the beginning of the next session of the Senate after the holiday recess, if the Senator from Texas then desires.

After that assurance, Mr. President, the resolution was that day referred to the Committee on Finance, and while this is the 6th of February, there is no report yet, so far as I have any information. In the meantime the Senator from Rhode Island has presented the theory of a majority of that committee to the Senate in a bill, and the Secretary of the Treasury has made his response to Senate resolution No. 33.

I ought to add that the bill of the majority of the Committee on Finance was reported before the response of the Secretary of the Treasury to that resolution was presented to the Senate and printed.

With reference to the report of the Secretary, I desire to submit—and I do it with deliberation, and have written it so that I can not be misunderstood—that the answer of the Secretary of the Treasury to Senate resolution No. 33, establishes—

First. That the Secretary violated the law in issuing Panama bonds, because the proceeds thereof were not necessary to "defray expenditures" authorized by the act of June 28, 1902, which provides for the construction of the canal, there being ample funds in the Treasury for such purpose.

Second. That the Secretary violated the law in excluding individual bidders in awarding Panama bonds, preferring national banks in the award, because the law provides that in issuing the bonds all citizens of the United States shall have "an equal opportunity to subscribe therefor."

Third. That the Secretary violated the law in using proceeds of the sale of the Panama bonds for the purposes stated by him in his report, because the law expressly provides that such proceeds shall "be used only for the purpose of meeting such expenditures" for constructing the canal.

Fourth. That the Secretary violated the law in issuing the 3 per cent certificates, because they were not issued "to meet public expenditures," as provided by the statute, there being ample funds in the Treasury for such purpose.

Fifth. That the Secretary violated the law in permitting national banks to issue circulating notes on the 3 per cent certificates, as the law limits the basis of such notes to registered bonds of the United States and Panama bonds; and Sixth. That the Secretary violated the law and abused his official discretion in distributing public money under the act of March 4, 1907, the distribution being unjust and inequitable, whether regarded from the standpoint of population or capital and surplus of banks, and much of said deposits being used by New York banks for speculative purposes.

It is not my purpose, Mr. President, at this time to discuss the first five propositions which I have submitted; later that will be done. My purpose this morning is to discuss, in connection with the two resolutions which I have presented, the sixth proposition, that this money was distributed inequitably and unjustly, and that it was used by the New York City national banks for purposes of speculation and extortion.

In 1903 a bill was pending in the Senate having for its general purpose the granting of authority to the Secretary of the Treasury to deposit receipts from customs in national banks in connection with other money of the United States. A suggestion was made in the debate then by the Senator from Georgia, who sits at my right [Mr. BACON], that this money, if deposited in the banks, ought to be distributed over the country in some equitable and just way, and the proposition, as I understood, was acceded to by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], although difficulties were pointed out by him. That bill, however, did not become a law. Last year a bill on the subject did become a law, being approved March 4, 1907, and a provision was inserted in it, on the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island, which I will read. It is—

Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall distribute the deposits herein provided for, as far as practicable, equitably between the different States and sections.

Mr. President, how has this law, which was proposed and passed as I have indicated, been carried out by the present Secretary of the Treasury, requiring him when money is deposited in national banks belonging to all the people to distribute it equitably between all the States and sections of the Union? In what I shall say I shall for the most part use round numbers in figures, and I shall not detain the Senate by a consideration of all the tables which have been presented here, taking only such of them as will afford convenient illustration of the propositions I desire to submit.

In August, 1907, there were 6,500 national banks in the United States, with a combined capital and surplus of $1,444,000,000; in December of the same year there were 6,600 national banks, with a combined capital and surplus of $1,450,000,000. Taking a group of States, Mr. President, for illustration, I find on August 22 the Eastern States, including New York, had a combined capital and surplus of $602,000,000, and on December 3 of $605,000,000. The Southern States had a combined capital and surplus on August 22 of $187,000,000, and on December 3 of $188,000,000. New York City alone, with thirty-eight or forty national banks, had a combined capital and surplus on August 22 of $223,000,000, and on December 3 of $226,000,000.

The public moneys deposited in the national banks of the United States on March 22, 1907, amounted to $140,000,000; on August 22, to $143,000,000, and on December 3, they had reached the enormous sum of $223,000,000.

Let us now inquire how this money was distributed. In the Eastern States, including New York, on March 22, there was $42,000,000 in the national banks; on August 22, $58,000,000, and on December 3, $112,000,000.

In the Southern States, on the 22d of March, there was $23,000,000 of public money in the national banks; on August 22 there was $21,000,000, or a reduction of about $2,000,000, and on December 3, $29,000,000.

In New York City alone, on March 22, the amount of public money on deposit in the national banks was $14,000,000; on August 22 it was $28,000,000, and on December 3 it was $75,000,000.

From these facts, Mr. President, I draw several indisputable conclusions, which I will submit to the Senate.

The first is that New York City national banks, having only about one-sixth of the capital and surplus of all the national banks, yet have about one-third of all the public money on deposit.

Second. That while the Eastern States, including New York, have only about three times the capital and surplus of all the Southern States, they have four times the amount of public money on deposit.

Third. New York City has $226,000,000 of capital and surplus and the Southern States $188,000,000; New York City having about one and one-fifth times the amount of all the Southern States in capital and surplus of national banks, yet New York City had about two and one-half times more public money on deposit than the whole South.

Fourth. The total increase of Government deposits from August to December, 1907, when the panic was on, was $79,000,000.

Fifth. The increase of Government deposits in the Eastern States, including New York, from August to December, 1907, was $54,000,000, and the increase of Government deposits in the Southern States from August to December was $8,000,000.

Sixth. The increase of Government deposits in New York City alone from August to December was $47,000,000, or about three-fifths of the entire increase of $79,000,000.

Now, Mr. President, as illustrating the subject further, I will take the State of Texas, with 4,000,000 people and with a combined capital and surplus of $40,000,000, and compare it with the city of Washington, though we are justly proud of this capital of our country. The city of Washington, having a population of 300,000, has a combined national-bank capital and surplus of only $8,730,000 as against $40,000,000 for the State of Texas, and yet Texas had but $1,738,000 of public money on deposit on the 3d day of December, while the city of Washington had $4,581,000. This includes only the country banks. The capital and surplus of the reserve city banks of the State is $16,000,000, and these banks had public deposits on December 3 of $1,000,000, giving a total of capital and surplus for the State of $56,000,000, and of public deposits $2,738,000.

Mr. President, let us go still further in illustrating the banking situation. Let us look at the individual deposits in all the banks of the United States. In 1900 they aggregated $7,000,000,000; in 1907 the aggregate was $13,000,000,000, showing in seven years an increase in individual deposits in all the banks of the United States, including national banks, private banks, and State banks, of six billions of money, reaching the greatest aggregate of deposits in the history of banks in the United States.

The individual deposits in all the national banks of the United States on March 22 were $4,269,000,000; on August 22 there were $4,319,000,000, or an increase of about $50,000,000, and on December 3, 1907, there were $4,176,000,000 on deposit in the national banks, or a reduction from August to December, due doubtless to the panic in some degree, of one hundred and forty-two millions of money.

The individual deposits—and to these I beg to especially invite the attention of the Senate—the individual deposits of national banks in New York City on August 22 amounted to $532,000,000, and on December 3 they amounted to $585,000,000, or an increase of $53,000,000.

Let me present at this point, Mr. President, a table showing the net increase of deposits in the national banks of New York City from August to December, 1907:

Net increase of deposits in national banks in New York City from August to December, 1907.

Increase in individual deposits	$53, 280, 936. 00
Increase in Government deposits	47, 576, 356. 00
Total increase	100, 857, 292. 00
Net decrease in national-bank deposits	10, 820, 511. 00
Net decrease in State-bank deposits	10, 670, 215. 00
Total decrease	21, 490, 726. 00
Net increase	79, 366, 566. 00

The Secretary of the Treasury, in response to Senate resolution No. 33, delivers a eulogy on the national banks of New York City, which I heartily wish was deserved. On page 9 of the pamphlet which he submitted prior to filing his report he says:

It is a striking proof of the energy with which the banks of New York extended aid to those of other parts of the country that the national-bank returns show a reduction in specie in the national banks of New York from $173,221,007 on August 22, 1907, to $147,974,918 on December 3, 1907.

And on page 5 of that document we find this statement by the Secretary:

While the action of the Department in placing large sums in the national banks in New York was subjected to some criticism, it was amply justified by the conditions as they then existed and as they have been disclosed in the light of subsequent events. Figures given further along in this report will show that the national banks in New York did not retain in their own keeping the public moneys received, but were enabled through their extended relations, as reserve depositaries with banks of all classes throughout the country, to employ these moneys to meet a large proportion of the calls made upon them.

I do not think, Mr. President, I can be mistaken when I say that the Secretary of the Treasury in these two statements practically declares that the national banks of New York City sent to the banks of the interior, whose reserves they were holding, the $25,000,000 of specie to which he referred in the reduction of specie, and the $40,000,000 reduction in their reserve holdings, and used the public deposits in part to do so. Is this statement of the Secretary upon this important question—and it is crucial upon this matter of public deposits—correct? On the contrary, I assert that the very details of the report which the Secretary has submitted with this pamphlet clearly destroys the statement. Let me present it briefly:

It is significant that while individual deposits in the national banks of New York City had increased from August 22 to December 3 by $53,280,936, and United States deposits more than 168 per cent, or $47,576,356, or a total increase in deposits of $100,857,292; the decrease in the net amount due national banks outside of New York City during the same period amounted to $10,820,511, or only about 5.1 per cent, and during the same period the decrease in the net amount due State and private banks and trust companies had decreased only $10,670,215, while loans and discounts had increased $63,060,149.16, indicating clearly that the assistance extended by the Treasury Department to the New York banks must have been employed almost entirely in the relief of the situation there, and not in aid of the outside banks, which were dependent upon the New York banks for the repayment of a very large percentage of their reserves.

Also, it is to be noted that the reserves held by the New York City national banks dropped during this period from $221,349,657, on December 3, to $180,448,128, a decrease of $40,901,529, which may not be attributed to the calling in of their reserves by the outside national banks, as the amount so held by the New York banks decreased during this period only $10,820,511.

The same is true of the reduction of specie from $173,000,000 to $147,000,000, and for the same reason, the net decrease in the amount due by the New York national banks to all other national banks being only $10,820,511.

Mr. President, let me state that proposition again. The Secretary of the Treasury says, in effect, that the $25,000,000 reduction of specie by the New York banks and the $40,000,000 of their reserve reduction, amounting to $65,000,000, was accomplished in large part through the use of the public money on deposit, whereas the tables in the report of the Secretary show clearly and distinctly that the net amount which the New York City banks owed all other national banks decreased between August 22 and December 3 only $10,820,511.

It is significant that although the New York City banks did not, between August and December, pay to the national banks outside of that city but $10,820,511—and I want these figures to ring in the ears of the American people—that while they only paid that amount to the outside national banks they increased their loans and discounts during the same time $63,000,000. The Secretary tells us in his report—and I repeat it—that this public money went in large proportion on the call of banks for their reserves. Let us see about that. What became of this public money? The Secretary says that the call for reserves was met with it, in a large degree, by the national banks of New York City. The Comptroller of the Currency in his report, at page 67, says:

On October 26 the New York clearing-house banks decided to issue clearing-house certificates for use in the payment of balances, and to limit, if not suspend, the shipment of currency to out-of-town banks. In this the New York banks were followed by those of the other central reserve and most of the reserve cities.

That is not all, Mr. President, on this question as to where this money went which was deposited by the Secretary of the Treasury in New York banks. I read a few extracts from the appendix of the report of the Secretary.

At page 221 of the report, referring to Buffalo, appears the statement:

The banks have met all demands upon them in currency, both for pay rolls and over the counter, supplying their needs, if necessary, through the purchase of currency at a premium.

On page 224, referring to Louisville, we find this:

As to the movement of currency, would say that we have received none from New York or Washington worth speaking of, except what has been bought at a premium ranging from $40 a thousand down to $10.

From Cleveland, Ohio, we find the following:

So far as to the movement of currency, compared to previous years, from New York and elsewhere, there was practically nothing doing. What currency that was received from New York was arranged for from 1 to 3½ per cent premium.

Mr. President, we have seen that this money, with the exception of $10,820,511, did not go to the national banks outside of New York City. Let us see if we can trace where it did go. On March 22 the loans and discounts of all national banks were $4,535,000,000; on August 22 they were $4,678,000,000; on December 3 they were $4,585,000,000. That shows that all the national banks, between the 22d of August and December 3, doubtless in view of this crisis, reduced their loans and discounts by $93,000,000. Now, what did the national banks of New York City do during that period? On August 22 the loans and discounts of all national banks in New York City amounted to $712,000,000, while on December 3 they were $775,000,000, or an increase of $63,000,000, showing that while this panic was on, while individual depositors were clamoring in vain for their money, while the New York banks were issuing clearing-house certificates and demanding that they be circulated in that city as currency, while the outside national banks of the country were unsuccessfully demanding their reserves, the national banks in the city of New York increased their loans and discounts by $63,000,000.

Mr. President, let me ask now to whom at least a portion of these increased loans and discounts went? The report of the Comptroller of the Currency of December 3 shows that of the $712,000,000 of loans and discounts the national banks of the city of New York had $251,000,000 of demand loans secured by stocks, bonds, and other personal securities; and in a letter from the Acting Comptroller of the Currency, dated this morning, he informs me that the demand loans of the national banks of New York City on stocks, bonds, and other personal securities increased between August and December, 1907, from $251,000,000 to $302,000,000, or an increase of $51,000,000.

Going further with these figures, I call attention to the fact that on December 3, 1907, the national banks of New York City had individual deposits aggregating $585,000,000, deposits of all banks and bankers of $438,000,000, and Government deposits of $75,000,000, aggregating $1,098,000,000, of which $251,000,000, on the 22d of August, was loaned on the collateral of Wall street; $302,000,000 on December 3 loaned on the collateral of Wall street, and yet the banks suspended payment to their individual depositors and to their banking correspondents throughout the country, and they did it when they had money in their vaults with which to meet their obligations. They had as late as the 3d day of December $7,000,000 in checks and cash items, $29,000,000 in legal-tender notes, and $147,000,000 of specie; yet they ceased cash payments, took the law in their own hands, issued clearing-house certificates and required the people to accept them, and sold the public money which had been deposited with them at a premium in some cases of $40 on the thousand and in others of 3½ per cent.

We have, therefore, or had, on the 3d of December, 1907, $223,000,000 of public money, wrung from the people of this country by taxation, on deposit in the national banks of the United States without interest, $75,000,000 of which was deposited in the banks of New York City alone. This money was not distributed over the country according to population or on the basis of combined capital and surplus, but was distributed unjustly and inequitably and often in pure favoritism. It was used by the national banks of the city of New York in large degree for purposes of stock speculation and to extort an exorbitant premium from their outside banking correspondents. Holding hundreds of millions of money belonging to outside banks as a reserve, the national banks of New York refused to permit those banks to have their own, and, instead, loaned it on speculative collateral or sold it on the streets of New York at exorbitant figures.

Only 5 per cent of the reserve held by the national banks of the city of New York was paid out on call of outside national banks, whereas the response of all the other reserve cities, including Chicago, during that period, amounted to 22 per cent and they did not enjoy the favor of excessive United States deposits as did the national banks of New York.

Mr. President, the situation in which the country found itself last fall was striking and extraordinary. The financial panic which then ensued can not logically, it seems to me, be attributed to natural causes. While the crop yield for 1907 was somewhat less than that for 1906, the value of the crop for 1907 exceeded that for 1906 by more than $400,000,000. The output of the iron furnaces of the country for 1907 was greater than that of 1906. When this panic began, the number of commercial, bank, and trust company failures for 1907 had been far less than for the same period of 1906. Cotton mills had advanced wages and were earning exceptional profits. The gross earnings of railroads for 1907 were the greatest in their history for a like time. Perhaps it may be safely said that every character of business, agricultural, commercial, industrial, and manufacturing, was prosperous and lucrative. With the exception of pessimistic interviews by railway presidents and the cries of trust magnates against the enforcement of the law, there was scarcely a discordant note in all the land.

Nor is that all. The per capita circulation in the United States was $33.23, and the volume of money in the country was apparently reasonably sufficient. As indicating this, the banks left unused the power to issue $300,000,000 of their circulating notes. As I have shown, the year 1907 surpassed all others which had gone before in the aggregate of individual deposits in the banks. The confidence of the public in these great institutions reached the highest mark that year. In spite of this general and widespread prosperity, national banks of New York, in betrayal of the trust in them, without warning, and so far as has been established without cause, lawlessly suspended payment, not only to their individual depositors, but to their interior banking correspondents as well. Prior to this there was no complaint from any quarter that money was being hoarded or that there was a scarcity of currency.

This action of the banks, whatever may have induced and inspired it, was immediately followed by that public distrust which swept over the land and which to a degree still exists and which produced a famine of circulating currency and a cessation of business activities. Yet, when confronted with this condition of affairs and with a demand for relief, the party in power, and which is responsible for legislation, refuses to make inquiry or even to report a resolution to that effect adversely; refuses to make inquiry into this illegal and perilous action of the New York banks and into the influences and motives which dictated and directed it.

More than that, Mr. President. Not only is an immediate and thorough investigation refused and denied, but this party presents as its distinctive measure at this session what is known as the "Aldrich bill," one which will give additional power to the banks, which will foster the spirit of bond speculation by the banks, and which will still further discriminate against the general public in the interest of the bond-holding class.

It may not amount to much, probably it will not, but against this policy, which is one of inaction and suppression of facts on the one side and on the other of surrender to the money power, I enter my earnest and emphatic protest.

APPENDIX No. 1.

[Extract from the report of the Comptroller of the Currency for 1907.]

But during the month of October the collapse of a highly speculative corner in stocks, dealt in on the "curb" in New York—not even listed on any regular exchange—brought suspicion upon an old, well-established national bank in the city of New York. Although examinations by the national-bank examiners and the New York clearing house committee showed this bank to be entirely solvent, with its large capital and a considerable surplus still beyond question intact, public interest had been aroused to such an extent that runs developed in New York City on a number of other banks and trust companies and some national banks between which and the bank first under attack there was known to be community of ownership and management. The national banks of New York City were all found to be solvent by the clearing-house committee, and being supported by the clearing-house banks none failed.

But, unfortunately, a few other banks and trust companies were not in such good condition, and many of them, not being members of the clearing house or any similar association, they were not so well prepared for cooperation and support of each other. The Knickerbocker Trust Company, with $1,200,000 of capital and $48,387,000 of deposits, closed its doors on October 22, and this was followed by a large number of failures among smaller banks and trust companies. During the months of October and November ten State banks and trust companies, two of which have since resumed, closed their doors in New York City and vicinity. There were long and serious runs on two large trust companies, which were only kept from failure by the support of the other trust companies and the clearing-house banks. One national bank, the First National Bank of Brooklyn, which was clearing-house agent for two large trust companies in Brooklyn which had failed, was compelled to close its doors on October 25 in order to avoid the responsibility for the clearings of these trust companies, and is now in the hands of a receiver.

On October 26 the New York clearing-house banks decided to issue clearing-house certificates for use in the payment of balances, and to limit, if not suspend, the shipment of currency to out-of-town banks. In this the New York banks were followed by those of the other central reserve and most of the reserve cities. The result was to at once precipitate a most serious bank crisis and a famine of currency for pay rolls and other necessary cash transactions. All domestic exchanges were at once thrown into disorder and the means of remittance and collection were almost entirely suspended. Money has been withdrawn and hoarded by individuals, corporations, and even more, perhaps, by the banks themselves, all of whom at once drew and held all the money of any kind they could obtain, often really in larger sums than needed.

It has been one of the peculiar features of the situation that there has actually been more of a panic among the banks themselves than there has been among the people. The banks have been fearful as to what might develop, and finding their usual reserve deposits only partially available, if available at all, they have been compelled in self-protection to gather from every source all the money they could possibly reach and to hold on to it by refusing payment wherever it is possible and satisfying their customers with the smallest possible amount of cash. It has been remarkable how patiently and with what forbearance the people in the business community generally have borne with the situation and helped the banks to deal with the emergency. With the exception of the first excitement in New York and some smaller runs in other places, there has really been surprisingly little excitement or uneasiness among the people.

The greatest hardship to business generally has been the derangement of the machinery for making collections and remittances. As can readily be seen, this has interfered with every kind and class of business and led to great curtailment of business operations of every kind. Factories have suspended, workmen have been thrown out of employment, orders have been canceled, the moving of crops has been greatly retarded and interfered with and exports have fallen off at a time of the year when they should be at their highest. Another result has been a reduction of the volume of the foreign credits available just at the time they are most needed to offset the large imports of gold which have been made.

The total net reserves due from approved reserve agents to outside banks amounted on August 22, 1907, to		$576,356,434
And on December 3 to		487,152,400
Or a net decrease of		89,204,034
Of which there may be credited to the New York City national banks, as heretofore shown, the sum of		10,820,511
Leaving to be credited to the other reserve cities		78,383,523

In other words, the New York banks, holding net reserves belonging to other banks on August 22 of $213,744,686, reduced this amount only a fraction over 5 per cent, while the other reserve cities of all classes holding on that date net reserves, aggregating $362,611,748, reduced this amount by $78,383,523, or very nearly 22 per cent.

It is interesting to compare the course pursued by the national banks of the city of Chicago during the same period, particularly in view of the fact that these latter banks received an increase of United States deposits of $3,592,991, as against the $47,576,356 of like deposits with which the New York banks were favored. It appears that—

On August 22 there was due by the Chicago national banks to outside national banks	$115,843,275
And on December 3 there was due in like manner	101,985,941
Or a decrease of		$13,857,334
But there was due from outside national banks to Chicago national banks on December 3	$41,244,967
And on August 22 there was due in like manner the sum of	39,092,682
Or an increase of		2,152,285
Or a net decrease in the balance in favor of the outside banks of		16,009,619

Or about 14 per cent as against the 5 per cent corresponding reduction made by the New York banks.

During this period individual deposits decreased in Chicago national banks	$10,275,164
And United States deposits increased	3,592,991
Leaving net loss of deposits of		$6,682,173
Or a net reduction in their indebtedness of		22,691,792
To this reduction of $22,691,792 should be added:
Net reduction in amount due State and private banks and bankers	$6,952,842
Decrease in amount due trust companies and savings banks	4,427,205
Or a further decrease of		11,380,047
Or a total net reduction of		34,071,839

As against a reduction of like character by the New York banks of $21,490,726, or considerably less than one-half of the United States deposits alone with which the New York banks were favored.

APPENDIX No 3.

[Editorial New York Evening Post January 13, 1908.]

THE PANIC OF 1907.

Saturday's statement of the New York banks showed, for the first time since panic began with the Knickerbocker failure on October 22, a surplus over the 25 per cent ratio of cash reserve to deposits required by law. In advance of this return to a surplus basis, the New York banks had resumed full cash payments to depositors; the currency premium had disappeared ten days ago; drafts on New York by banks of other cities are being met in cash; Chicago, Pittsburg, and Philadelphia banks are calling in for redemption the "wage checks" issued during the currency famine. All this proves that the period of suspension of payments, complete or partial, is at an end.

With its habitual absorption in the future, the business community is now discussing nothing but the chances for or against a similar recovery in general trade. On this head there is much to say; we shall at present, however, use the occasion rather to make some inquiry into the extraordinary episode which lies behind us. No doubt the most palatable comment would be congratulation to our financial institutions for having emerged from so formidable a crisis with relatively so little of outright insolvency. We shall not take this view. What, to our mind, stands out paramount in this panic episode is the refusal by the deposit institutions of this country, during nine successive weeks, to return to its owners, on their request, the money deposited by them in trust with such institutions; the public sale at a discount, during all this period, and in amounts running to the tens of millions, of certified checks on powerful and solvent banks, and, finally, the forcing upon wage-earners by employers in half a dozen cities, of a makeshift currency not exchangeable for real money in the city of its issue, and not receivable for payments in any other locality. Everyone knows that this is a plain and accurate statement of what has happened; had such a state of things occurred in any other country than our own, our people would have described it as a shameful exhibition of weakness and bad faith. Why of all nations should the United States, which a very few years ago was claiming title as the financial center of the world, have been the scene of this extraordinary performance?

We are not among those who hold our currency system responsible. An ideal system—a central bank, an elastic currency—would no doubt have mitigated the after effects of this breakdown of credit; but we are convinced, along with the best European critics, that no currency system in the world would have stood up against such a raid on bank deposits as occurred in last October. But this merely shifts the inquiry to another question, why the money-hoarding mania should reach in this country at such times proportions never imagined elsewhere in the world, and why the various banking centers of the United States should stand out habitually as a dangerous menace to one another the moment the American market falls into panic.

One explanation occasionally heard is that in affairs financial our people are impulsive, excitable, hysterical, and that just as they fling their savings into wild-cat speculation during such speculative crazes as that of 1901, so, at a time of shaking credit, they see no recourse but to pull out their bank deposits and hide the cash. There may be some truth in this supposition. But the French are notoriously a more excitable people than our own, and they are, moreover, far more disposed to keeping their savings in the chimney corner; yet nothing like this occurs in France. It must also be remembered that the practice of hoarding money, on the first signs of coming financial panic, has been directly encouraged by the experience of previous panics. The merchant, the small manufacturer, the dealer in land or produce, who remembered that in August, 1893, his bank refused for five weeks to allow him to draw from his deposit account the cash to pay his hands or consummate his purchases, can not be wholly blamed if, in October, 1907, he is sorely tempted to get a supply of cash in hand before his bank shuts down on payments.

But if the trouble lies with the banks, what is it? Why should our fiduciary institutions be driven to this humiliating recourse when it is never adopted elsewhere? We believe the simple and undeniable answer to be that our practice of redepositing bank reserves in banks of other cities, thereby diminishing the safeguard against deposits in the smaller cities, and entangling the banks of East and West with one another on a scale which no other community would dare to apply, creates a banking position which is certain to break down under strain of panic. Of the 6,544 national banks in the field last autumn, 6,178 were the so-called "country banks," which by law are allowed to deposit with banks in other cities three-fifths of their 15 per cent required reserve. Banks in the larger cities bid for these "country-bank reserves" by paying interest on them. The result, as shown in the national bank reports just before the panic, was that, out of the reserve of these 6,178 country banks, $420,000,000 was placed in more or less distant cities and only $201,000,000 kept on hand in cash, where it could be used to meet, at a moment's notice, the demands of a run of depositors.

These figures seem to us to go far toward explaining the suspension of payments, the blockade of interior exchange, and the numerous resultant embarrassments which mark such episodes as last October's. It will perhaps be rejoined that the Bank of England holds the reserves of other banks, precisely as do our larger banks in the "reserve cities." But the Bank of England maintains against such deposits a cash reserve, not of 25 per cent, as in New York, but of 40 per cent or over, and it furthermore would not dream of investing such funds in loans to stock-exchange operators—the chief use which is made of them at New York. Our own belief is, that until these reserve provisions of the banking law are remodeled, or until the practice is modified by the banks themselves, the most perfect currency system in the world will not protect us in the future from repetition of such discreditable exhibitions as American banking has made of itself this winter.

Mr. PILES obtained the floor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. PILES. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, it is not my purpose upon this occasion to attempt any general reply to the speech which has been made by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. I rise more for the purpose of calling to the attention of the Senate and the country generally the fact that every statement made by the Senator from Texas in an indictment of the Secretary of the Treasury has been answered by the Secretary in the report he has made to Congress. If any person will take the time and the trouble to read that report, he will find that all the objections which have been made have been completely answered; that the facts and figures demonstrate that instead of the Secretary showing any favoritism to banks in New York or to other banks, his action has been controlled by the most patriotic principles, and that he made the deposits in New York, in Chicago, and in other places as he believed would best meet the emergency which then existed.

At the time these deposits were made, or at least when they were largely made, we know there was an emergency in this country which threatened the stability of our financial institutions, and it would be just as fair to criticise a force of men as violators of law who would destroy a building in order to stop a conflagration that threatened an entire city as it is to criticise the Secretary of the Treasury under the circumstances under which deposits were made.

Now, without attempting to make any argument of my own I desire to call the Senator's attention to page 23 of the report, where the Secretary himself makes a statement of the reasons which caused him to make the various deposits in the national banks, especially with reference to the banks in the city of New York. The Secretary says:

Obviously when the pressure was focused, to the extent which has been set forth, on the financial center of the country, it seemed advisable to focus relief there also. The national banks of New York City held on August 22 only $28,253,386 in deposits of public money, aside from certain balances of disbursing officers, or considerably less than 3 per cent of the national banking capital of the city. The United States deposits in national banks in all other places were about $115,000,000, or more than 12 per cent of the national banking capital of the remainder of the country.

So on August 22 the national banks of New York City, instead of being favored, had only 3 per cent as against 12 per cent of deposits in national banks in other sections of the country.

The Secretary further says:

It is plain, therefore, under the policy of recalling the public funds, which was inaugurated in the spring, that the national banks of New York were not favored with any large proportion of public moneys, but, if any unintentional discrimination was shown, were treated less favorably than the banks of other sections of the country.

I desire to state that the tables and statistics which accompany the report confirm every word stated by the Secretary in this respect, and show that instead of New York being favored, if there was any discrimination whatever, it was against the New York banks.

The Secretary says again:

It may not be inappropriate for me to say in this connection, so that there may be no misunderstanding on this point, that I have not deposited a dollar of the public moneys in the national banks of the country upon any other basis than that of the public interest. These funds have been deposited and distributed without regard to partisanship, and no individual or association of individuals, no city or State or section, has received any other than that fair and impartial consideration to which each is entitled.

It is easy, Mr. President, to take a part of the statistics presented in the report here and compare them with the statistics as to some other section and produce thereby a disproportion in the two sections discussed, but when you take the entire report which has been made by the Secretary of the Treasury, it will be found that instead of there having been partisanship or sectionalism shown, he has deposited the funds in the different banks to meet the exigencies in every section of our common country.

The Secretary further says:

While the Secretary of the Treasury felt compelled, in order to meet the exigencies of the situation, to increase deposits largely in the banks of New York City, even the proportion left in their custody after the panic had subsided was smaller than the proportion in certain other cities and States.

Mr. President, I repeat that the figures and statistics which the Secretary has submitted with the report substantiate and support in every detail that statement made by the Secretary.

He says, further:

A table appended to this report shows the distribution of Government deposits on the date of December 7, 1907, by States and by sections of the Union. These figures show that the amount of public deposits on that date in the entire country was $222,352,252, which amounted to 15.3 per cent of national-banking capital and surplus, amounting to $1,451,296,366. While the banks of the State of New York appear as holders of public moneys to the amount of 26.8 per cent of their capital and surplus, the banks of the New England, Eastern, and Middle Western States, taken as a whole, and including New York, show a percentage of deposits to capital and surplus of only a little more than 15 per cent. The banks of the Southern, Western, and Pacific States, on the other hand, show a proportion of nearly 18 per cent.

More than 3 per cent over the banks of New England, the Eastern, and Middle Western States, including the State of New York.

The Secretary further says upon this point:

Full details of this distribution of public funds, as appended to this report, show that they are distributed among 1,421 national banks.

That statement alone would show that there could not have been any great favoritism shown, because we have nearly 1,500 national banks scattered over the entire country. All of these were favored with deposits, or, rather, the sections of the country where these banks are located were favored.

The chief object, of course, in distributing public funds is not to afford profit to banks as such, but to afford to the business community means for carrying on its transactions upon a normal basis of money supply and interest charges.

The Senator during his remarks made some comparison between the condition of the deposits in the national banks of Texas and the national banks here in the District of Columbia. It seems to me that if the Senator had been entirely fair in connection with those remarks he would have called to the attention of Senators the fact that the Secretary himself called attention to this apparent discrimination between the amount of deposits in the national banks in the State of Texas and the deposits in the national banks in the District of Columbia, and in my judgment he has given a complete answer to the criticism made by the Senator from Texas. Now, what does he say regarding the deposits here in the District of Columbia, and what does he say regarding the deposits in the State of Texas?

The State of Texas, on the other hand, which has banking capital equal to about four times that of Louisiana, has received only 5.2 per cent of this amount in public moneys, because the resources of the local banks appeared to be equal to the local character of the expenditures involved in the movement of the cotton crop.

In other words, Mr. President, there was no business or financial necessity for an increase in the deposits in the banks in the State of Texas. But why is it that the Secretary says that in the State of Louisiana the percentage was 27.4 per cent of its national-bank capital and surplus? He says that it was because of the movement of the cotton crop, and New Orleans being the financial center in the control of the cotton trade he deposited large sums of money there for the purpose of facilitating the transportation of the cotton crop, showing that he was looking after the interests of the southern section of our country as well as the interests of New York. When he saw the emergency, in order to facilitate the transportation of the cotton crop of the South, he made large deposits in the national banks in the city of New Orleans.

In speaking of Texas, the Secretary further says:

It may be added, in the case of Texas and in some other States where the distribution of public funds was small, that the banks showed by the large reserves of cash they held that they did not need Government assistance. Thus, the percentage of total reserve held against deposits was in Texas 25.72 per cent and in Arkansas 29.82 per cent.

Senators will remember that while the distinguished Senator from Texas was speaking of this disproportion in the distribution of the funds no complaint was made that the banking facilities of Texas were not sufficient to meet all the emergencies there. No claim was made that by failure to make deposits there any business interest whatever suffered.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HOPKINS. I would prefer to go ahead until I get through, if it is agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. CULBERSON. I anticipated that the Senator would say that, but I want to ask him, notwithstanding his feeling about it——

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well, if the Senator anticipated it and desires it, I will yield.

Mr. CULBERSON. Is the Senator aware of the fact that during a part of the period the banks in Texas asked the Secretary of the Treasury to designate them as depositaries and he declined to do it?

Mr. HOPKINS. The Secretary of the Treasury declined to make Government depositaries of banks in the State of Illinois, to my personal knowledge, but he did it for the same reason that he declined to make deposits in certain national banks in the State of Texas, because, as he has explained in this report, there was no financial or business reason why that should be done. He refused it in Texas as he refused it in Illinois and other States, but wherever he found that the business exigencies required a Government deposit be made it, as he did at New Orleans. That is an answer to the Senator from Texas upon that point.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to call to the attention of Senators the comparison that was made in the speech of the Senator from Texas between the deposits in the national banks in Texas and in the District of Columbia. If the Senator had been entirely fair and had desired to place the Secretary of the Treasury fairly before the Senate and the country, in making this comparison he would have called to our attention the statement that we find on page 24 of this report, which accounts for the large deposits in the national banks in the District of Columbia. Inasmuch as the Senator failed to read that paragraph to the Senate, that it may go to the country in the interest of fair dealing with the Secretary of the Treasury, I will now read the statement to the Senate. The Secretary says:

In this connection I desire to call your attention to what may seem, by comparison with other cities, an unusually large deposit of public moneys in the national banks located in the District of Columbia.

Under the laws governing the District of Columbia the taxes assessed on real estate are due and payable during the month of May in each year. The proceeds of these collections are immediately paid into the Treasury of the United States, thus taking out of circulation a large sum of money. In other cities these tax funds are placed on deposit with the various banks by the municipal authorities. In order to meet this emergency, the Treasurer has each year made deposits with the local national banks of an amount aggregating the taxes paid into the Treasury in May. These deposits have been made with the banks in proportion to the individual deposits as compared with the amount to be distributed. The banks repay this money to the Treasury in ten equal installments, on the first day of each month, commencing July 1, which enables the Treasurer to meet the expenditures of the District authorities as they may fall due without withdrawing from circulation for so long a period a sum which would cause, and has in the past caused, a marked and unnecessary stringency in local financial conditions.

At the last date (December 7, 1907) named in the accompanying statement of deposits of public moneys, there was on deposit with twelve national banks of Washington a total sum of $4,816,631.31, of which $1,936,500 was the remainder of the temporary deposit on account of the tax collections referred to above.

So you see by going to the report itself that it not only answers the comparison that is made between the national banks of Texas and the District of Columbia, but if I had the time I could show from this report that every one of these charges of unfairness made against the Secretary of the Treasury is absolutely and completely answered in this report.

It is an easy matter, Mr. President, for any Senator to rise upon this floor and take these figures and by a species, I will not say jugglery, because, perhaps, that word ought not to be used, but by assembling them in various forms make it appear that there was an unfair division in deposits. But when you take the complete report and the figures that have been given by the Secretary of the Treasury they substantiate and support the statement that no partisanship has been shown by him and no section has been disregarded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie on the table.

ALASKA-YUKON-PACIFIC EXPOSITION.

Mr. PILES. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 627) to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] wishes to submit some remarks upon the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Washington.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 627) to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909, which had been reported from the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions with amendments.

Mr. PILES. Before I ask for action upon the amendments of the committee I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, as I understand it now, we have by a vote of the Senate taken up under Rule IX the Alaska-Yukon Exposition bill. I should like to ask the Senator from Washington if it is his desire and intention to press the bill to a vote at this time?

Mr. PILES. I should like very much to have the bill disposed of to-day.

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to say to the Senate I had rather hoped I would have a little more time to get together, as it seemed to me somebody ought to get together, a little of the records, that we might know just what we are doing in these exposition matters and just what we have been doing. We have all been very busy, and it seems to me that I have been unusually busy in the last few days, or since this measure came up, and I asked to have it go over under Rule IX.

As I said, I have no disposition in any way to prevent this measure from coming before the Senate, even though I could, because I have never had very much respect for an attempt simply to delay legislation or to prevent a vote from being had upon it.

I will also say at the beginning that I appreciate the fact that one is in a very unenviable position when he undertakes to oppose the passage of a bill in which any Senator has so much interest as the Senator from Washington has in this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that he need not do that through courtesy to me at all.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Senator from Nebraska will proceed.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, as I was saying when I was interrupted by having the unfinished business laid before the Senate, I appreciate how unpleasant it is for one to have to oppose a bill that any Senator is so much interested in and that his part of the country is so much interested in as the present case.

However, of course we shall never have before us an exposition bill that will not occupy exactly this same relation toward somebody. I do not know that ever again an exposition bill will be championed by a Senator whom we all think so much of personally as we do of the Senator who is advocating the pending measure; but it does seem to me that the time is coming when the Senate by its vote ought to determine these matters, as I believe Senators individually feel in regard to it. I have had more than one Senator say to me that this exposition business should be stopped, or at least that some methodical way be taken up to consider them and to handle them and hold them.

As I have said, I have not had a great deal of time to collect data, but I want to give to the Senate a little of the facts in reference to expositions of the past. I have collected them within the last twenty-four hours, or since the bill was put under Rule IX, and I was notified that the Senator from Washington desired to get it up to-day.

I was very much interested, as we were all entertained, instructed, and delighted, with the speech the Senator from Washington made the other day. As a western man, I can appreciate the truthfulness of what he said. As one who has gone over the northwestern country and is familiar with it, I can appreciate all he said that was good of those people and that was good of that country.

I must say, however, that the statement that Alaska was the particular part to be benefited by this exposition fell almost upon deaf ears, so far as I was concerned. As far as I have been able to run this scheme back to original sources, Alaska did not originate and plan the Alaska-Yukon Exposition. I have on my desk now a letter that I received from a man in Seattle. I do not know that I ought to have it read, but he makes the direct assertion that it was begotten and planned and pushed forward and has been promoted by a lot of boomers up there in Seattle for the purpose of booming real estate and booming their own private interests, and he says that the solid, substantial commercial interests of the State of Washington are being outraged, just as they have been in every city where these expositions have been held.

I undertake to say that if you could get back to the facts, it would be found that every exposition which has ever been held has been planned and designed and originated, in the main, by a class of men who did not have to bear the responsibility and who did not have to pay the bills when they finally had to be paid.

Expositions and institutions of that sort usually are promoted by a class of boomers for that particular locality. They conceive some great demand to start an exposition, and they unload their ideas on the community, on the country, and on the whole world. I say the whole world, for they usually become world-wide. I maintain that it is an imposition, year after year, to have the promoters of these expositions come here and demand our attention and the money of the Government and the money of other nations of the world.

What benefit is Alaska to receive from this exposition? The Senator spoke of the great resources undeveloped in Alaska. There is not any doubt about that; but let me say to the Senator from Washington he does not need an exposition in Seattle to tell him about the undeveloped resources of Alaska. There is not a man in the State of Washington, or in that northwestern country, who needs an exposition in Seattle to tell him about the undeveloped resources of Alaska.

Sir, if we are going to have an exposition for the benefit of Alaska, to advertise its resources, we should bring it down in some of the commercial centers in the middle or eastern portion of the United States, where they are not in direct contact with Alaska and need the information. Very few people, comparatively speaking, who ought to know about Alaska can or will get out to Seattle. Seattle is circumscribed by mountains and handicapped for exposition purposes by her long distance from the greater portion of the population of this country.

This simply means a little exposition to that comparatively little community of people who already know about the industrial resources of Alaska. So, I submit, that if the exposition is to be for the benefit of Alaska, if it is to show to the 90,000,000 people of the United States what great opportunities there are in Alaska from an agricultural and mineral standpoint, it ought to be moved a little farther along, where more of the people of this country could get to it. But I maintain that Alaska does not need any advertising just at present. The discoveries of gold has made Alaska the most familiar spot on the map of the world. People are going and coming; books and magazines and newspapers all tell of the glories of Alaska.

I want the Senate to know that it is not a sudden frenzy of mine that I am displaying here to-day about expositions. I want the Senate to know that I have opposed every exposition since I have been in Congress. I have not opposed all of them on the same grounds as I do this one, but because they were ill-planned and inopportune. There is absolutely no call for this one outside of the minds of those enterprising people of the State of Washington. I have looked in vain through this bill to find if some of the errors that were in other bills have been covered, and I regret to say that they have not all been guarded against. I call attention to the lamented exposition that has just closed down here at Jamestown, with a million dollars of deficit. I remember when that measure was before the House. I was a Member of the House at that time, and I asked the friends of the measure to point out where there was a dollar of money behind the exposition to be held at Jamestown. There was a subscription list somewhere; there were some appropriations that were going to be made by the States; there was a lot of money, a lot of influence behind it; but when the thing finally was consummated and brought to an end we find that practically all there was ever behind it was the appropriation that this Government made and the $1,000,000 that we loaned them out of the United States Treasury.

Of course the bill would not show anything as to their financial condition, but I submit that the report should tell us all about what is behind the exposition—what their financial condition is. I have gone through the report, and it stated that $500,000 in subscriptions were called for and in one day $625,000 of subscriptions were made. You could raise $625,000 of subscriptions under the right sort of conditions, I expect, on the floor of the United States Senate, and it is not a very wealthy body either. You could take up subscriptions anywhere on certain conditions or provisions that you could write. Nowhere are we told what the conditions and the provisions are of those subscriptions out there nor are we told in this report whether a dollar of them have been paid. I am safe to say, I think, that if any of these subscriptions were paid, a report so recently made and presented to the Senate would have stated it. It refers to——

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. PILES. I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that probably he did not notice it, but that I stated on the floor of the Senate that $412,000 in cash had been paid of the subscription of $625,000. The balance is not due until next April, and it will be promptly paid.

Mr. BURKETT. I accept the Senator's statement. I did not hear it on the floor of the Senate, or of course I would not have made the statement I did. I tried to listen to the Senator's speech. I recall, however, that I was called out for a few moments, and I presume it was in that time the statement was made, or at least I did not catch it.

However, Mr. President, we do know now that this exposition to which we are asked here to appropriate $700,000, has only $412,000 of capital. We do not know what that capital consists of nor in what it has been invested. In short, without knowing anything about it, without inquiring anything about it, or having anything to do with the management of it, we are going to approprate $700,000 out of the Public Treasury for an exposition the total of whose capital paid in is $412,000. The Government is at once the largest partner and has absolutely nothing to say.

Not quite to the same extent, perhaps, but it borders on the same ridiculous legislation that was enacted in behalf of the exposition that has just closed down at Jamestown, and that promises to give us so much trouble. The whole thing at Jamestown was that they did not have enough of original capital. So far as our information goes the people of Seattle are expecting the Government to bring an exposition out there to boom their particular part of the country. I do not think we ought to do it.

In saying what I have I am not opposing expositions altogether. I believe there is a legitimate call for legitimate expositions. I believe they do much good. It is a proper means of advertising our industrial progress, our commercial development, and our agricultural advancement. We are proud of what we have done and the whole world should know of it. Expositions are proper means of display. But when we do it, it seems to me that the Government ought to initiate the thing, and should say when it is to be, and where it is to be, and how big it is to be, and then we would know something about it, and the world at large would have confidence in it.

I can say that I think there has been but one exposition, and that is the little one held eight or ten years ago in my own State, that has not caused the Government more or less trouble either before or after. At the time of the St. Louis Exposition, after having given about six and a-half million dollars, we then were asked for a loan of $5,000,000, and I will say to the Senate here, and the records will bear me out in it, that it was the fight some of us made on the floor of the House against that $5,000,000 loan that put the clause in the bill that secured its repayment, and by which we got the money back that we loaned to the St. Louis Exposition.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate just now to this fact. I presume that all Senators do not know it. There are pending on the floor of the Senate right now five bills for expositions of more or less consequence calling for a greater or less amount of money.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I will ask the Senator whether the Government ever appropriated any money for an exposition at Omaha in his State?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes, sir; it did.

Mr. FLINT. Will the Senator please enlighten us as to what good the country gained by that appropriation?

Mr. BURKETT. The Government appropriated $200,000, and I will say that the Omaha Exposition was the only exposition that has ever been held which not only paid out but paid every dollar back of the money that was put in by the stockholders. I was not in Congress at that time, and I do not propose to be held in line for these appropriations, as some Senators may think they have to be held simply because their particular States have before had one of these expositions.

Mr. FLINT. I should like to ask the Senator a further question.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield further to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I ask the Senator whether from his experience, having traveled over the country as he has done a great deal, he will not state as a practical man that there is more likelihood of an exposition being a success in Seattle than it was in the city of Omaha?

Mr. BURKETT. No; I would not say that, after the experience we have had with one or two others not very far away. We can not speculate, as far as that is concerned, I will say to the Senator from California. We can not know what the success of this exposition is going to be. It is not probable that any exposition of this kind will pay its expenses, and then pay back all the money to the stockholders as the Omaha exposition did. Anybody would wager ten to one that this exposition would not pay its expenses and dollar for dollar all the money that was put into it. So I say it would be a safe statement, if I cared to make it, and if it was necessary to make it, if it would do anybody good to make it, that this exposition will not be as great a financial success as the Omaha exposition. No other exposition ever was as great a success as was that exposition.

Mr. FLINT. I will ask the Senator from Nebraska, whether he ever examined the figures for the exposition that was held in the city of Portland, and whether that did not show better returns than any other exposition ever given in the country.

Mr. BURKETT. It did not.

Now, Mr. President, as I was about to say when the Senator interrupted me, I can not favor the pending measure because we happened to have an exposition out in Nebraska, for which, I think, we got $200,000 from the Government. I think I might as well be honest about it, and say that it was a very unwise thing for the Government to appropriate that money so soon after others, although, as the results show, there were more people who gathered there in proportion to the amount of money that was expended than at any other exposition which has ever been held. So what money was put in that exposition for that display did more good, if expositions do any good, in point of numbers comparatively speaking, than any other exposition that has ever been held. But it was the pluck and energy and wisdom of the men who were behind it that made it go. The word failure was not in their dictionary. And while it was a success, nevertheless the success was not on account of the wisdom of the appropriation.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. May I ask the Senator when the exposition in Omaha was held?

Mr. BURKETT. In 1898.

There are now pending before this Senate five bills for expositions. All of them, with one exception, have been reported, as I have them here. No. 627 is the number of the Senate bill for the exposition at Seattle, the bill which is now under consideration.

Then we have Senate bill No. 2424, a little appropriation for an exposition in New York which the Senate passed a few days ago; Senate bill 4633, providing for taking part in an exposition at Quito, which the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] called up the other morning and had passed; Senate bill 4634, providing for an exposition at Santiago, Chile, which is reported here, and I have the number of the report, which is 139; Senate bill 4639 is for an exposition at Tokyo, Japan, which has been reported by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], making five of these exposition bills which are now pending; and if we are to believe what we read in the newspapers, there are at least as many more threatened within the next five or six years in this country.

I realize, in talking to the Senate as it is composed at this hour, that these words are not going to be received with very great favor perhaps; but, nevertheless, I can not help saying that it does seem to me that there is a time, and that that time is now, when we ought to stop this indiscriminate holding of expositions, when we ought to say that we are not going into every exposition on no greater provocation than simply an invitation from some particular city. Take the city of Seattle. Within a year, or at least only two or three years ago—the buildings are still standing; the flagstaff has not yet been taken down—within 150 miles from this same city we had another exposition. Portland, Oreg., had an exposition two years ago. Alaska was displayed in that exposition; Alaska was displayed at St. Louis on just as great a scale perhaps as it will be displayed in this proposed exposition. Alaska has been displayed at every exposition. So have the Philippines and Hawaii and all the other possessions of this country. I dare say, under this appropriation of $25,000 for the Philippines, that it will be a simple mockery and a ridiculous exposition in comparison with the display of the Philippine Islands that we saw at the exposition at St. Louis. So Senators will see that these expositions are not so much for the benefit of those possessions of ours, but simply to get enough of a display to attract people to the community where the exposition is to be held. As stated in this letter written by a citizen of Seattle, it is simply a boomer's scheme to collect people in that community.

Mr. President, in the hurry and in the shortness of time that I have had to go over this matter, I have got a list of the names of all the expositions which have been held, not only in this country, but abroad, and in reading this list of five bills that are pending here you will notice that two or three of them are for foreign expositions. We have permitted towns, without let or hindrance, under the authority of an act of Congress, to invite all nations of the world to participate in expositions and to become a part of some great international exposition here and there. When we have done that we have assumed a responsibility to the other nations of the world; we have undertaken an obligation that when those nations invite us we must respond in kind; and God only knows where the end will be if we must respond for expositions in all the countries that have responded to our many invitations.

We are going a second time into some of our cities. I read in this list that Charleston has already held two expositions. We are going the second time up into the Northwest country, within five years, and all the other countries of the world have the right to come in and demand that we accept their invitation, as they have accepted our invitation, to participate in expositions which we have held in this country.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. TILLMAN. The Senator from Nebraska is usually so accurate that I am surprised when he states that Charleston has had two expositions. I recall but one.

Mr. BURKETT. I have a paper here from the Secretary of the Treasury giving the list. Let me see if I am correct. I will read the list of expositions which have been held in the United States. I intended to read it anyway. First, Philadelphia in 1876. We appropriated for that $2,294,319.65. Cincinnati, in 1884; New Orleans, in 1884; Louisville, in 1884; Cincinnati again, in 1888; Chicago, in 1893; Atlanta, in 1895; Nashville, 1897; Omaha, 1898; Philadelphia again, in 1899; Buffalo, in 1901; Charleston, in 1902; Portland, in 1904; St. Louis, in 1904; Jamestown, in 1907.

I see I am wrong as to Charleston, I will say to the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I do not know how I made the mistake. Cincinnati is the city in which two expositions have been held. I had it in mind that it was Charleston. I am much obliged to the Senator from South Carolina for calling my attention to it, but it demonstrates the same thing.

The total money that we have paid out for those expositions has been $27,187,773.72. Of this there has been paid back a part, and the St. Louis Exposition paid back a part of this as her loan, but after all deductions there is still a net outlay of $20,960,727.27.

I want to call attention to these facts and those dates that I have read. We began in 1876. Down to the Chicago Exposition in 1893 we had only held five or six expositions in all the history of this country. Since the Chicago Exposition in 1893 we have held nine of those expositions. We voted $500,000 to another one that never was held, and we are now getting ready to vote for another here, making eleven expositions in fourteen years, since 1893, when we started in this miscellaneous exposition business.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. I would ask the Senator from Nebraska if the country has not made the greatest progress in its history during the fourteen years that we have held these expositions?

Mr. BURKETT. I will let the Senator from California answer that.

Mr. FLINT. I should say that we have. We have had the greatest progress during these years, due in great measure to these expositions.

Mr. BURKETT. I would not say that. I think, perhaps, this country could probably have wiggled along if we had not had some of those expositions. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, since 1893, as I said, we have held nine expositions. We appropriated $500,000 for Toledo, and they did not even hold an exposition. We are now making this appropriation, making a total of eleven. I call attention to the Toledo Exposition as a case in point to show with what anxiety, almost, Congress seems to want to appropriate money for expositions. There was an exposition only talked of at Toledo. In fact, it never did hold an exposition; it only sent word here to the Senate and House of Representatives some way or other—I do not know just how they got the word down here—that they were going to have an exposition in Toledo, when Congress rushed to the front and appropriated $500,000 for the Toledo exposition. That was so much bigger than Toledo had expected that it scared them perhaps; at least, for some reason or other, they withdrew the whole proposition, sent the money back, and never did hold the exposition, which shows how quick Congress is in this particular to appropriate money.

We appropriated money for the exposition down at Jamestown, and we are all regretting the lamentable result there.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. BURKETT. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, so far as the appropriation for the exposition at Toledo is concerned, I can give the Senator from Nebraska information about that if it is desired. Congress did not rush in that matter to make an appropriation. That proposition came before the Senate in connection with a bill providing an appropriation in behalf of the exposition at Buffalo. Two were provided for at the same time. The appropriation with respect to Toledo, however, was on condition that the State of Ohio would appropriate, I believe it was, an equal amount within a certain time. The State of Ohio, after considering the matter, declined to make an appropriation, largely because it was thought inadvisable to have an exposition in progress at Toledo at the same time there was an exposition in progress at Buffalo. We thought one would be enough for that year. That is about all there was in regard to that matter. I do not know just what point the Senator from Nebraska was desiring to make about it; but there was no going out of the way on the part of Congress to act favorably on that matter.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that there was not anything said in detriment of Toledo or of the State of Ohio. The Senator says he did not know what point I was undertaking to make. I take it that he has just come in, and so I will say to the Senator that I was not undertaking to make any point against Toledo or against the State of Ohio. The conditions were just about as the Senator explains them. He simply goes more into the details and the facts. There was a little stir up there in Ohio and in the city of Toledo; there was a little talk among some of the people up there that there might be an exposition, and Congress rushed to the front and appropriated money for it. It was wise enough, however, I will say in that particular to the Senator from Ohio, to put a provision into the bill that it should not be binding if the State of Ohio did not appropriate a like sum. If we had done the same thing at the last exposition, I surmise, perhaps, that we should not have got into so many difficulties as we have been in or they have been in, and as we will probably be in before that exposition gets through.

As I stated, that is the amount of money we have appropriated. But that has not ended our troubles. I have here a summary, a list of expositions that have caused us trouble after they have been held. After we had appropriated out at Buffalo nearly a million of dollars, as I remember the figures, in round numbers, when that exposition closed down there was some indebtedness, and it cost the Government $500,000 to pay the floating indebtedness of that Buffalo Exposition after it had closed its gates.

In Philadelphia there was also an appropriation required to pay the floating indebtedness there after the exposition had closed its gates.

If we are to believe what we hear—and I have a statement here somewhere which shows that after the Buffalo Exposition had closed its gates we had to appropriate $500,000 to pay deficiencies for labor and expenses of the exposition that had not been paid, making, as I say, more than a million-dollar appropriation. At Charleston we appropriated $160,000 to make up deficiencies; at Chicago, $28,974.64 to make up deficiencies; at Philadelphia, $334.59, and the Secretary of the Treasury says here that there is due from the Jamestown Exposition at the present time $897,953.57, showing that among the nine or ten expositions that have been held in the past eight or ten years in this country four or five of them have come back here and asked for appropriations to make up deficiencies.

The other day, when the great deficiency bill was under consideration, Senators arose upon this floor and complained because the heads of Departments in administering the necessary affairs of Government had found it necessary to use more money than Congress had appropriated, and yet here we are authorizing expositions which are coming back with deficiencies time after time. We are inaugurating a practice, we are taking cognizance of a thing that in the future, from the precedents that have been established, will build up deficiencies. When we get through with the exposition that has recently been held at Jamestown there is not a man who dares even guess as to the additional amount of money that it is going to require.

We go ahead and appropriate money for them without knowing a thing of the financial condition or of the stability of the expositions. Who knew anything about Jamestown? It was rumored that there was going to be an amount of money appropriated down there, and that the States were going to do this, that, and the other, and yet when the end comes $897,000 is the deficiency owing to the Treasury of the United States for borrowed money.

As I said in the beginning, Mr. President, it is not a pleasant thing to stand up and oppose a bill that a Senator is interested in. It is not a pleasant thing to vote against it, and I doubt very much if all the Senators who have said to me that the time had come when we ought to stop this exposition farce will have the courage to stand up and vote against it. They will be too gracious, and we will pass this bill. Why? As a matter of courtesy to one of the members of the Senate, when according to our best judgment we know it is not a wise thing to do.

We must stop this exposition business somewhere. We can stop it now, and receive, as I believe, the commendation of the country.

Mr. TILLMAN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. BURKETT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TILLMAN. As I understand, the Treasury is supported by taxation from all over the country, each State contributing, and when one State sees a public bonus, so to speak, in the shape of an appropriation for an exposition at Philadelphia, or Chicago, or Boston, or Jamestown, or any other old town, coming out of the National Treasury for a local benefit, so to speak, how can the Senator undertake to say that this is an appropriation granted as a courtesy to an individual Senator here? It is simply a recognition of the fact that as all the money comes from all the people, and some of the people have had some of the money, and some of the people have not had any of it, and why should not the others have a slice of the pie? [Laughter.]

I want to say, Mr. President, while I am on my feet, that while I recognize that this is a sort of luxury as well as an extravagance, and that we have wasted a good deal of money apparently in holding expositions, I believe that the travel which these expositions have induced has been of incalculable benefit in causing people who would never have left home to travel in other parts of our great nation and see what a great country we have got. We never would have had this intercourse between North and South and East and West but for these expositions, and while they may be luxuries, this country can afford them.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say in reply to the Senator that that is absolutely the only argument there is for passing this bill.

Mr. TILLMAN. I am glad the Senator admits my having given an argument better than his, because the Senator has given no reason why we should not pass the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. The only argument for passing the bill is that one locality has had money and therefore every other locality ought to have money. That is what I have been contending, but I could not do it so vigorously as the Senator from South Carolina. In my feeble way, however, I have been trying to impress upon the Senate that absolutely the only argument for this appropriation is the fact that Charleston had one and that——

Mr. TILLMAN. Charleston had one and a great many Northern people have been civilized by going to Charleston. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator, however, that if we had taken the money that we put into Jamestown and Charleston——

Mr. TILLMAN. And Omaha.

Mr. BURKETT. I will include them all, so as to make no invidious comparisons—and distributed it the great public could have done more traveling than they have done apparently from the gate receipts of those expositions. The money that we put into Jamestown would have carried more people around the world apparently than attended the Jamestown exposition.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. President, we do not want to go around the world, but there is great need for more intercourse between the different parts of this country, and anything which will induce that intercourse and seduce people to spend their own money on the railroads to traverse this great nation, and to go from State to State, and make them realize what a great country we have got, is a substantial benefit; and you can not get it in any other way except by travel.

Mr. BURKETT. I will submit that if we are going to carry that idea out, it would not be very reasonable to put the exposition so far away. You ought to put it where people will not have to go so far. More people would be liable to go if it were in a more convenient locality.

In the beginning I admitted that there was an argument in favor of expositions in that they served to enlighten the people and promote an interest in the different sections of the country, but I do not believe that any Senator on this floor will contend that there is a call for eleven expositions within fourteen years. I think the Government would do well to finance a great exposition and locate it properly in this country every ten years. I think it could well afford to do that, but to finance these privately conceived expositions, in my judgment, is not a wise thing to do.

Now, speaking of the different sections of the country, although it is a good section of the country where this exposition is proposed to be held, the Senator must remember that within two years the people of this country have all been invited up to that same section of country for another exposition, which the Government of the United States helped to finance. I submit that the time is not ripe yet for another exposition within 150 miles of the city where we have so recently held one.

Mr. President, I have nothing further to add by way of explanation of my objection to this bill. I shall vote against it if I get a chance to vote against it, and it has seemed to me that somebody somewhere ought to stand up and voice what I am certain is the sentiment of a good many here, because they have spoken it to me that these demands upon the public Treasury should be stopped. If we do not stop it now, where will the end be? Here is New Orleans already talking of an exposition, and I see some town in Florida is talking of an exposition in celebration of the Panama Canal or something in connection with that. One town has as much right to come here and demand money as any other place, and it occurred to me that a good place to stop this demand for appropriations for exposition purposes would be up here at this particular place where we have held an exposition within two years, and for which we made an appropriation.

If we do not stop it; if we do not say to towns in this country that we are going to stop this exposition business, every town has the same right to come in and ask us to finance its exposition as other towns have. With three or four in contemplation, with three or four in the course of construction, with eleven within fourteen years, I submit that the time has come for somebody to stand up here and protest, although we do not have much hope of defeating the bill. If we can do no more, we can notify the country that we want the thing stopped; that they can not come in here with such slight provocation as that a little fair is going to be held in some particular town, for which an appropriation is desired. I dare say that there have been State fairs held in the United States that have been bigger than some expositions—perhaps greater than the one recently held down at Jamestown. I dare say that there are State fairs in this country that very probably are bigger than the proposed exposition at Seattle. Where are we going to draw the line of discrimination? What is going to be the end of this? If the proposed Seattle Exposition does not pay there will be a deficiency left and we will have to meet it. We have had to meet it at other expositions. I say it is our duty to make some inquiry into this appropriation, to find out where the money is going, what the capital stock is upon which this great appropriation is based, and to advise ourselves whether there is a possibility, or probability even, of there being a deficiency coming back on us to meet.

I should like to have permission to insert as an appendix to my remarks some tables from which have come the figures that I have read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

The papers referred to are as follows:

Exposition appropriations (fiscal years 1872 to 1907, inclusive).

Expositions held	30
Domestic	15
Foreign	15
Total amount expended under appropriations	$27,187,773.72
Total repaid to Government	6,227,046.43
Total outlay	20,960,727.29

Of the total amount appropriated, there was appropriated by the Government after expositions were over for the payment of creditors, $1,587,262.80.

The above sum was divided as follows:

July 1, 1902, Buffalo	$500,000.00
July 1, 1902, Charleston	160,000.00
Chicago (various appropriations)	28,974.64

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, nor do I think it necessary to do so.

According to the logic of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], every county fair in the United States should be abolished, and all the great fairs of the States to which he has made reference should be discontinued henceforth. It certainly does not befit us here to take the view that it is contrary to wise public policy to encourage an exposition now and then of the industrial productions and the scientific achievements of this great nation. It is true we have held eleven expositions in fourteen years, and it is true that but yesterday or the day before we provided for participation in the great exposition projected in Japan. These international expositions are very rare occasions, presented for the commingling of citizens of different countries in generous rivalry in the arena of peace and its achievements.

I recall that at Omaha we, too, indulged this ancient system of visiting by providing that Indians might congregate at Omaha from all over the United States and visit one with another, indulging in old-time camp-fire stories in the spirit of long ago. I have no doubt that visiting Indian combination contributed very largely to the success of the Omaha Exposition. The Indian from Bering Sea met the Indian from Patagonia; the Indian from Florida met the Indian from Nebraska, and even the Indians were improved, and instructed, and elevated, and ennobled by the meeting. So were the whites.

Mr. President, if equity in distribution is to be considered at all—and it seems to be of little consequence to the Senator from Nebraska—I challenge attention to the figures he presents. We have, he says, appropriated $27,000,000 in aid of great expositions. I think no better or wiser appropriations have been made by Congress than these identical appropriations. From them no disturbance of peace has come, no semblance of war or destruction, but a continuous stimulus to human progress in every avenue of human endeavor. Twenty-seven million dollars disposed of by appropriation within the period of time he refers to, and yet of that sum only $475,000 appropriated for the whole country west of the main range of the Rocky Mountains! A principle of fair dealing, it seems to me, considering the matter from the geographical point of view, would constrain the Senator to insist that justice so long deferred should now be done to that great empire west of the mountains.

The Senator speaks of a central point as a proper place to hold an exposition. Let me cite the Senator to the fact, which he has probably overlooked, that if you desire to strike the central point of the United States east and west, or of the territory of the country, you will land at a spot in the Pacific Ocean 100 miles west of the city of San Francisco.

The Territory of Alaska, Mr. President, which it is designed through this exposition especially to exploit, was regarded, as the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES] so aptly said the other day, as a chimerical scheme having its inception in a desire to be complimentary to the Russians because of their sympathy for the Union during the war of the rebellion. Yet that country was left without law for ten years after we acquired it.

The Senator from Washington thinks I had better withdraw the word "rebellion" and say the "war between the States," inasmuch as he is anxious to have this matter treated right on the other side of the Chamber. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, that long-neglected and ill-considered country has yielded to the people of the United States within the last twenty years over $100,000,000 in acual gold, to say nothing of the mighty contributions made to our commerce by the fisheries and the seals caught on the Pribilof Islands. The State of Washington, which, as a part of the Oregon country, had in 1843, as suggested by the Senator, a population of only 500, is to-day one of the majestic States of the Union, with a population of over a million, and the proposition which that State presents is not, as the Senator from Nebraska conceives, a mere private enterprise, but it is a project presented by this great vigorous young State not only to exploit its own mighty resources, but likewise to bring forth the country far beyond—the Alaskan country; a country so large, Mr. President, that we can scarcely on the map conceive its limits. Let me show how it can be best understood.

If you will put Alaska down on the map of the United States, beginning in the Northeast, Alaska will reach from the coast of Maine to the Mississippi River, along the Canadian border; it will run down that river thence to the south line of Tennessee, and the line would then be extended eastward to the Atlantic Ocean, five hundred and odd thousand square miles of country, with majestic rivers and waterways, with innumerable lakes, and with prospects of golden yield that entitle the Territory of Alaska to be justly denominated the treasure house of the American nation.

Mr. President, if we can bring the people of the United States to a realizing sense of what that country is worth, if we can bring to the Congress of the United States a fair conception of its mighty possibilities, this paltry sum here sought will be most judiciously invested. The Congress is not called upon to direct the President to extend an invitation to the nations of the earth to participate in this exposition, as in the case at St. Louis. The Government is not called upon to assume any responsibility other than that of any other exhibitor at the exposition. Neither the faith nor the credit of the Government is invoked in this case. A great State of the Union, representing a mighty region, is going to hold an exhibition of the products of that great region. It is industriously seeking to make it somewhat international in character, in so far as the oriental country is concerned, a country with the trade whereof we are as much concerned as is the State of Washington, and those people ask us to say that this Government will participate merely as an exhibitor out in that region.

Alaska is voiceless and unable to make an appropriation for its own exhibit. It has no legislature. It has no board of commissioners. It is wholly and solely and absolutely under the control of the Congress of the United States and at the mercy of Congress. This country, which will during the current year produce over $30,000,000 in gold, peopled now by solid and substantial citizenship, stands here asking us to permit it to participate in an exhibition on the shores of the Pacific which will enable it somewhat to show to the outside world the pent-up resources existing there.

Mr. President, what does Alaska ask? A district which has paid into the Federal Treasury within the last ten years more than a million dollars in excess of the cost of the government there asks us for an appropriation of a hundred thousand dollars of its own surplus money practically, to enable it to bring down whatsoever it has to exhibit at Seattle. To deny that would seem to me to prove recreant to a most important duty we owe those people. To prevent the Hawaiian Islands, by refusing an appropriation, from participating would likewise seem to be a serious refusal to perform a plain duty.

Then there is but a small amount left, after we provide for the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, and the Alaskan country, for the Government to do what? To send its paid employees out there with a number of exhibits, such as are currently presented at an exhibition, and which are now on hand in Government storehouses in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and let them put up a building adequate for the accommodation of those exhibits and there remain during the period of the exhibition.

Mr. President, I deem it a privilege to vote for a bill of this kind, and believe that in the long run it will prove a great benefit to the whole country as well as a special benefit to that favored and little known region on the North Pacific Ocean.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I did not think there would be the least opposition to this bill, and speaking certainly for the East, which pays the largest amount of taxes, if the contributions to the Treasury are to be taken into account, I believe we are unanimously in favor of these expositions, and especially of this one.

I am somewhat of an expert on national expositions. I attended the one at Philadelphia in 1876, when Mr. William M. Evarts, of New York, delivered that historical oration, which is one of our classics. I know of nothing at that period which did so much to revive the study of Revolutionary history and to create patriotic sentiment and to educate the youth of the country as did the lessons of the exposition of 1876. We who are old enough remember that the Revolutionary war had been forgotten almost. Its heroes, with the exception of one or two, were no longer remembered, and in the schools the teaching of the history of the origin and growth of our country was no longer a prominent part of the curriculum; but there was a revival of patriotic discussion from the exposition of 1876 which has been going on continuously ever since.

In addition, it gave to our people, those who could not travel abroad—and it was difficult to travel abroad at that time—the first opportunity to examine the productions of other countries and to observe what we ought to do in order to rival them. There is no doubt that the exposition at Philadelphia resulted in an impetus to American manufacturers in lines which had never before been practiced that was of immense value to the country.

Mr. President, I delivered the oration at the opening of the Columbian Exposition, at Chicago, and that necessarily kept me there for a week or more. A study of the material part of that exposition was in itself a liberal education; but, outside of that, the whole country began to read about Columbus, and, with Columbus, about the early navigators and the discovery of this country, and the people of different races who came here, and the people who ultimately dominated it, and what the result had been to the civilization not only of this country, but of the whole world.

I had the pleasure and honor also of delivering the oration at the opening of the Charleston Exposition, and was there with my friend the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]—there from New York, from the center of its predatory wealth and its big banks, which have been so eloquently assailed this morning by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], from that standpoint of teaching civilization, as the Senator said, to the people of the United States with a Southern flavor. It led to my being adopted temporarily as the third Senator from the State of South Carolina. It was an honor which I appreciated at the time, although it never materialized in any power outside of South Carolina for the few days I was there. I will say, however, that the courtesies of South Carolina, the wonderful hospitality of Charleston, the whole-souled way in which it entertained those who were its guests, gave an actual realization of that romance of Southern hospitality of which I had heard all my life and had pictured in the imagination as beyond the possibility of practical experience. But I found that practical experience surpassed all that I had dreamed in the imagination.

I also delivered the oration at the opening of the Omaha Exposition, and I never saw a more wildly enthusiastic people on the subject of expositions than the constituents of my friend the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT]. Every man, woman, and child was telling me upon the street, as soon as they got an idea who I was—the speaker of the occasion—what a great thing it was for the country to have that exposition; how the country would see what Nebraska was, and seeing what Nebraska was, the people would appreciate what the Western States were, what the Great West meant.

Then there was a little incident which indicated that whatever may be the financial ability of the Yankee, on occasions it is surpassed when he gets West and settles in one of those Western States. I was led by the manager of the exposition into one of the side shows which it was said had been a failure. It was empty when I entered, but soon filled up; crowds stood on the benches. My guide said he could not understand it. When I went out I found that the barker at the door was shouting, "Walk in, ladies and gentlemen, step in; only 10 cents to see the orator of the day." So I was utilized both as the speaker and as an exhibit. [Laughter.]

Now, for the representative of a people who have the enterprise and ingenuity to promote a great world exposition to rise here in the Senate and oppose another exposition anywhere in this country seems to me an effort which can not but be repudiated at home.

The Jamestown Exposition was a failure in the material sense, because no exposition can succeed unless there is a contributory population within the immediate radius for whom it is easy and cheap to get to the fair. Unfortunately, to preserve the historical unity, instead of having the exposition at Richmond, where it would have been a success, they had to have it where John Smith landed, and while John Smith and Pocahontas are a beautiful picture upon the canvas, they do not materialize for an exposition. [Laughter.]

But, sir, that exposition had its educational influence. I was in Europe during the summer, and everywhere, especially in England, I heard conversation with reference to the exposition at Jamestown. It was caused by two reasons. One was that Jamestown was the first English settlement upon this continent. The other, that the Bishop of London had been sent here to bring a Bible from the King, representing the sentiment of the English people toward the first church that had been built upon this continent and which is still in existence as it was originally founded, and where worship is still carried on in the old form, with the liturgy of the Church of England. There was a special interest in the old country because of romantic associations connected with everything which relates to Virginia and Pocahontas and of her reception as a princess when she went over with her husband, and the fact that he came near being tried for high treason at that period when Divine right hedged about the throne for having, as a subject of the king, married a princess of royal blood. Unhappily Pocahontas died and was buried over there, but I believe the blood of Pocahontas can be found in hundreds of thousands of proud and patriotic Americans, if you will believe the genealogy which they themselves furnish. [Laughter.]

But, as a matter of fact, sir, the speech of the President on that occasion was one of the best he ever made. He has made a great many speeches, some to the public, some to Congress [laughter]; and the country appreciates them all. He is the only man in public life whose public utterances are like the Marseillaise among national anthems—which goes itself and stirs the blood. His speech on the three hundredth anniversary of the coming of people speaking the English tongue and all that went with it—Magna Charta and the liberties acquired by our ancestors—and then his description of what followed up to the completion of the centuries, was a noble and inspiring address, and it went all over Europe. It gave an idea over there of our country and led to study of its institutions, resources, power, and history which no other utterance had done in a generation. Throughout our own country everywhere, in the colleges, in the academies, in the common schools, in debating societies, in reading rooms, and at the gatherings of our people, wherever they are accustomed to meet, it inspired a discussion and study of what that exposition meant and the lessons it taught which could have been had in no other way.

Now, this exposition, sir, seems to me to make less demand upon the Treasury than any which have preceded it, when we consider the magnitude of what is to be presented and what is proposed to be done. Suppose an exposition has been held within 150 miles. The Portland Exposition was for the State of Oregon, and this exposition means much more than a State. This exposition will include not only the State of Washington, not only the Pacific coast, not only the story of the American pioneer in his prairie schooner, braving the dangers of the wilderness, wild beasts, and savage Indians, so graphically, eloquently, and beautifully portrayed here the other day by the Senator from Washington [Mr. PILES]. It will also be a demonstration of the wealth of the Pacific coast, and the wonderful resources of Alaska, of which as yet we know little, and whose surface has barely been scratched. Sir, if I remember aright the figures, Alaska is yielding every year more than seven times as much as Secretary Seward paid for it.

There is now being organized in New York City a competitive automobile race, to start from New York and go through Alaska, crossing over Bering Sea and down through Siberia to St. Petersburg, and thence to Paris. As day after day reports come in from that country, which we have believed ever since it was purchased, until recently, to be most inhospitable, both as to climate and soil, if it appears that this automobile trip is a success, and these new machines can get through, they will develop great possibilities, not only in mining but for large settlements of agricultural population.

But in the meantime, more than the automobile and its narrow pathaway across Alaska will be, with the assistance which can be given by the Government, an exhibit of its minerals of various kinds, of its woods, of the products of its fields, its rivers, its coasts, and the marvels which will result from their development. All of these things, potential with wealth and prosperity to the whole people of the United States, will be exhibited at this exposition at Seattle as they could be in no other way.

Besides that, sir, it will bring over to us the Filipinos, showing their progress since we took possession; the Hawaiians, exhibiting their progress since we came into the sovereignty of those islands, with all that is educative both for us and for them when they go back home—to the Filipino in his rise to self-government and to the Hawaiian in what is necessary for his improvement.

Here in this city of Washington are gathered materials of inestimable value. They form all the elements of a broad national university. Few of our people ever see them in their various repositories. But gathered and arranged in a Government building, they educate and graduate visiting thousands, who carry their information to near-by and distant homes, north, south, east, and west.

I trust, therefore, sir, that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] will curb on this measure his economical tendency, which is generally an admirable trait in a legislator; that he will remember the generosity of the country to his own State on one occasion; that in recalling the enthusiasm of his people, and their deep, intense, overwhelming, and resistless anxiety for an exposition at Omaha, he will withdraw his opposition and let this bill pass unanimously.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendments reported by the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions will be stated.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 3, line 4, after the word "at," to strike out "said exposition" and insert "the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, to be held at Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909;" in line 17, after the word "consumption," to insert "or use;" in line 24, after the word "consumption," to insert "or use;" and on page 4, line 2, before the word "or," to insert "use," so as to make the section read:

That all articles that shall be imported from foreign countries for the sole purpose of exhibition at the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, to be held at Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909, upon which there shall be a tariff or customs duty shall be admitted free of the payment of duty, customs fees, or charges, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Treasury shall prescribe; but it shall be lawful at any time during the exposition to sell for delivery at the close thereof any goods or property imported for and actually on exhibition in the exposition buildings or on the grounds, subject to such regulations for the security of the revenue and for the collection of import duties as the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe: Provided, That all such articles when sold or withdrawn for consumption or use in the United States shall be subject to the duty, if any, imposed upon such articles by the revenue laws in force at the date of withdrawal; and on articles which shall have suffered diminution or deterioration from incidental handling and necessary exposure the duty, if paid, shall be assessed according to the appraised value at the time of withdrawal for consumption or use, and the penalties prescribed by law shall be enforced against any person guilty of any illegal sale, use, or withdrawal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, section 2, line 4, after the word "from," to strike out "its Executive Departments;" in line 5, after the word "Institution," to strike out "and" and insert "the;" in line 6, after the word "Museum," to strike out "the International Bureau of American Republics;" in line 7, after the word "material," to strike out "as" and insert:

Of an historical nature as will serve to impart a knowledge of our national history, and especially of the history of Alaska, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands, and that part of the United States west of the Rocky Mountains. There shall be exhibited from the Executive Departments of the United States such exhibits as will;

In line 14, after the word "Government," to strike out "in time of peace and its resources as a war power, tending to" and insert "and;" in line 17, after the word "people," to strike out "and" and insert:

Special attention being given to such articles, materials, and exhibits as will most practically prove of educational value in connection with the development of commerce in the countries bordering upon the Pacific Ocean; the preservation of forests; the reclamation and irrigation of arid and semiarid lands; the improving and enlarging of transportation facilities and the safeguards of navigation; and the economic value of the investigations and operations of the Government with reference to public health, patents, geology, weather, animal industry, plant industry, soils, entomology, experiment stations, coast and geodetic survey, and public roads. And the International Bureau of American Republics is hereby invited to make an exhibit of the resources of the American Republics, particularly with a view to establishing closer trade relations between the United States and said Republics, and space in any of the United States Government buildings shall be provided for this purpose;

And on page 5, line 11, after the word "management," to strike out "shall be" and insert "is hereby," so as to read:

SEC. 2. That there shall be exhibited at said exposition by the Government of the United States, from the Smithsonian Institution, the National Museum, and the Library of Congress, such articles and material of an historical nature as will serve to impart a knowledge of our national history, and especially of the history of Alaska, Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands, and that part of the United States west of the Rocky Mountains. There shall be exhibited from the Executive Departments of the United States such exhibits as will illustrate the function and administrative faculty of the Government and demonstrate the nature of our institutions and their adaption to the wants of the people, special attention being given to such articles, materials, and exhibits as will most practically prove of educational value in connection with the development of commerce in the countries bordering upon the Pacific Ocean; the preservation of forests; the reclamation and irrigation of arid and semiarid lands; the improving and enlarging of transportation facilities and the safeguards of navigation; and the economic value of the investigations and operations of the Government with reference to public health, patents, geology, weather, animal industry, plant industry, soils, entomology, experiment stations, coast and geodetic survey, and public roads. And the International Bureau of American Republics is hereby invited to make an exhibit of the resources of the American Republics, particularly with a view to establishing closer trade relations between the United States and said Republics, and space in any of the United States Government buildings shall be provided for this purpose to secure a complete and harmonious arrangement of such Government exhibit a United States Government board of management is hereby created, to be charged with the selection, purchase, preparation, transportation, arrangement, safe-keeping, exhibition, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 7, line 7, after the word "as," to strike out "the Secretary of the Treasury" and insert "he," so as to read:

Said buildings shall be erected from plans prepared by the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to contract for said buildings in the same manner and under the same regulations as for other public buildings of the United States, but the contract for said buildings, including the preparation of ground therefor and the approaches thereto, and the interior and exterior decorative wiring and lighting thereof, shall not exceed the sum of $300,000, which sum or so much thereof as may be necessary is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. The Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and required to dispose of said buildings, or the materials composing the same, at the close of the exposition, giving preference to the State of Washington or to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition corporation or to the city of Seattle to purchase the same at an appraised value to be ascertained in such manner as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 12, line 7, after the word "board," to strike out "authorized" and insert "created;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That the allotment of space for exhibitors in the building or buildings erected under authority of this act for the use of the district of Alaska, the Territory of Hawaii, and the Philippine Islands shall be done and performed without charge to exhibitors by the Government board created by this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 9, after the words "SEC. 7," to strike out:

That upon the approval of this act the Secretary of the Treasury shall, upon the request of the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition corporation, cause to be coined at the mints of the United States not to exceed 250,000 gold dollars, of legal weight and fineness, to be known as the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition gold dollar, struck in commemoration of said exposition. The words, devices, and designs upon said gold dollar shall be determined and prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and all provisions of law relative to the coinage and legal-tender quality of all other gold coin shall be applicable to the coins issued under and in accordance with the provision of this act. That the said coins shall be disposed of by the Secretary of the Treasury to the said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition corporation at par, under rules and regulations and in amounts to be prescribed by him.

Said medals shall be coined by the coining press located in and being part of the Government exhibit, and without cost to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition: Provided, That said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition shall furnish free of charge the electric power necessary to operate said coining press.

In line 16, after the word "provisions," to strike out "whether penal or otherwise, of said coinage act" and insert "of law," and in line 18, at the end of the section, to insert the following:

Said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition shall furnish without cost to the United States all materials used by the printing and engraving presses exhibited by the Government at said exposition in the production of the usual souvenirs of appropriate design, and said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition is hereby authorized, through any agent, employee, privilege holder, or concessionaire appointed by its proper officer, to vend and sell at or near the place of manufacture any medal, print, or engraving authorized under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the vending and selling of all such medals, prints, and engravings shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury;

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That dies for medals bearing appropriate devices, emblems, and inscriptions commemorative of said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition and of the awards to be made to the exhibitors thereat shall be prepared by the Secretary of the Treasury at some mint of the United States for the board of trustees of Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition, a corporation, subject to the provisions of the fifty-second section of the coinage act of 1893, and upon the payment by said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition of a sum not less than the cost thereof; said medals shall be coined by the coining press located in and being part of the Government exhibit, and without cost to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition: Provided, That said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition shall furnish free of charge the electric power necessary to operate said coining press and all provisions of law against the counterfeiting or imitating of coins of the United States shall apply to the medals issued under this act. Said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition shall furnish without cost to the United States all materials used by the printing and engraving presses exhibited by the Government at said exposition in the production of the usual souvenirs of appropriate design, and said Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition is hereby authorized, through any agent, employee, privilege holder, or concessionaire appointed by its proper officer, to vend and sell at or near the place of manufacture any medal, print, or engraving authorized under the provisions of this act: Provided, That the vending and selling of all such medals, prints, and engravings shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 15, line 22, after the word "appropriations," to strike out "hereafter" and insert "herein;" and in line 23, after the word "made," to strike out "by Congress therefor," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That nothing in this act shall be construed so as to create any liability upon the part of the United States, directly or indirectly, for any debt or obligation incurred or for any claim for aid or pecuniary assistance from Congress or the Treasury of the United States in support or liquidation of any debts or obligations created by said United States Government board in excess of appropriations herein made.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11, page 16, line 5, after the word "act," at the end of the section, to strike out:

The management of said exposition having expressly declared that it will not ask or accept from the United States any loan of funds for any of the purposes of said exposition, and that it will not ask or accept from the United States at this or any future session of Congress any appropriation whatsoever in connection with said exposition other than that appropriated by the provisions of this act;

so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11. That the United States shall not in any manner or under any circumstances make any loan, directly or indirectly, to the Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition or for the benefit of said exposition or for any of the purposes thereof, and shall not appropriate for any purpose whatsoever in connection with said exposition any sum of money other than that provided in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 12, in the following words:

SEC. 12. That the appropriation herein made of $1,175,000 in all, shall take effect and become available upon the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The committee reported to strike out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 485) to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Amarillo, Tex., and for a clerk to said court, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2 and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

After the word "Texas" in line 2, page 2, insert: "Shall be held twice each year at the city of Amarillo, in Potter County, Tex., beginning on the third Monday of April and the fourth Monday of September in each year;" and the House agree to the same.

C. D. CLARK,
KNUTE NELSON,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JOHN J. JENKINS,
C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
R. L. HENRY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the unfinished business be laid before the Senate and proceeded with.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the next section of the bill which was passed over.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 50. [Whoever shall receive, conceal, or aid in concealing, or shall have or retain in his possession with intent to convert to his own use or gain, any money, property, record, voucher or valuable thing whatever, of the moneys, goods, chattels, records, or property of the United States, which has theretofore been embezzled, stolen, or purloined by any other person, knowing the same to have been so embezzled, stolen, or purloined, shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both; and such person may be tried either before or after the conviction of the principal offender.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, when the bill was last before the Senate for consideration the principle involved in the change presented by the section just read had been under consideration with reference to the preceding section, 49. The same principle is involved in the changes presented by the committee in sections 49, 50, and 51. We were discussing the legal effect of the proposed change in these sections. Under existing law it is provided that a party may be tried, either where the offense is committed or where the party is captured, with or without the possession of the goods. I desire to make a further suggestion upon a more mature consideration of this change.

Mr. BACON. The Senator, I presume, did not intend to use the language he did.

Mr. HEYBURN. I may have been inadvertent.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator to say the law as it now stands would give jurisdiction either where the offense was originally committed or wherever the party might be captured, either with or without the goods. I do not think that is the law. It gives jurisdiction where the party may be found with the goods or wherever he may have carried the goods.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not intend the term "with or without the goods" to be applicable to the entire statement I made. If I stated it otherwise it was an inadvertence.

Mr. BACON. I supposed so, of course.

Mr. HEYBURN. In order that it may be connected with the suggestions that I shall make, I will state that the existing law is—

That any person who shall embezzle, etc.—

Enumerating the offenses—

moneys, goods, chattels, records, or property of the United States, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and on conviction thereof before the district or circuit court of the United States in the district wherein said offense may have been committed, or into which he shall carry or have in possession of said property.

The Senator from Georgia referred strongly to the law of a number of the States permitting the trial in either jurisdiction, but I think the Senator from Georgia failed to distinguish between the rule that might be provided by the legislature of a State and the law which we are compelled to observe in Federal enactments.

The Constitution of the United States provides that a party shall be tried only in the district in which the offense is charged to have been committed. That limitation has no application whatever to the State courts or to the powers of the legislature of a State, and we must bear that in mind.

It is a serious question, now under consideration by the courts, as it has frequently been, whether or not under the limitations of the Constitution of the United States, where a district is divided into divisions, a party can be tried in a division of that district other than the one in which the offense is created. The question arose some years ago in Missouri, where a judicial district had been divided into divisions pending the consideration of an offense, and it was held there that under the Constitution the party was entitled to his trial in the district where the offense was committed, and that Congress had not the power to confer the jurisdiction to try him elsewhere than within that mentioned in the Constitution.

These statutes have been upon the books of the United States for a number of years, but if the statutes were broader in their provisions than the Constitution of the United States warranted, does it not follow that it was the plain duty of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to treat this section as they would treat a statute that had been held to be unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, and to eliminate the statute, or that part of it which was in violation of the limitations of the Constitution of the United States?

When we adjourned upon the occasion when the bill was last under consideration, I had only imperfectly and partially expressed the views of the committee upon this question and given their reasons for providing, as is provided in the sections under consideration, and they all involve the same principle, that the party should be tried in the district in which the offense was committed, because it was in conformity with the provisions and the limitations of the Constitution of the United States.

I think there is no other change in these sections that needs to be considered except this one change, and those are the reasons for making it.

Mr. BACON. My attention was unfortunately diverted during a portion of the remarks of the Senator from Idaho, and consequently I do not know that I gathered his entire statement. But so far as I did gather it, it was limited to the question whether or not there would be a violation of the Constitution of the United States in fixing the jurisdiction in any other district than that in which the larceny or embezzlement was originally perpetrated. I think, of course, the proposition is beyond question that a man must be tried in the district in which the offense was committed; but the principle on which the law as it now exists rests is that the offense is committed not only in the place where the larceny was originally perpetrated, but that in every place into which he carries the goods it is a fresh larceny.

Therefore, if I am correct in my understanding of the proposition submitted by the Senator from Idaho, there is no possible ground upon which to rest the contention that it would be a violation of the Constitution, because the offense is not only committed where the larceny was originally perpetrated, but in every jurisdiction in which the stolen goods may be carried. I do not know that I correctly understood the Senator. I labor under the disadvantage of not having heard all he said.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I correctly understand the Senator from Georgia, the point presented is this: Is a new offense created by having in possession goods that have been stolen or embezzled in another jurisdiction? Do I correctly state the point presented by the Senator?

Mr. BACON. I think it is undoubtedly the correct principle of law that every jurisdiction into which the stolen goods may be carried the law contemplated as a fresh asportation.

Mr. HEYBURN. If I am correct in that, and I understand the Senator to accede that I am, then the only offense for which the party could be tried in the jurisdiction where he was apprehended other than the jurisdiction into which he originally took the goods would be that of having them in his possession, because the legal definition of larceny or of embezzlement is utterly inconsistent with that of having in possession goods that may have been purloined or embezzled perhaps on the Pacific coast and found in the possession of the party in the State of New York. So it can not be said that the party found in possession of the goods in New York would be guilty in the State of New York of larceny or of having embezzled the goods. He could only be guilty of having them in his possession. We can not create an offense by legislation contrary to the spirit of the prohibition I have called attention to.

It was the intention of the framers of the Constitution that the party should be entitled to a trial in the vicinity where the offense was alleged to have been committed. If he is charged with larceny, he must be tried for the larceny in that jurisdiction—in other words, within the district where the larceny was committed. If he is charged with having in his possession stolen goods, he must be tried in the district where he committed the offense of having in his possession stolen goods. If he is to be tried for embezzlement, the embezzlement is complete when he has taken to his own possession the goods intrusted to him within the legal definition of that word. Then the offense is complete there, and he must be tried in that district under the constitutional provision. The fact that he had carried them somewhere else is not the commission of an offense.

The courts have dealt with this question. I wish to emphasize the distinction, always to be borne in mind, between the power of Congress to legislate Federal jurisdiction of these offenses and the power of the legislature of a State to legislate upon that question. The prohibition of the Constitution of the United States has no application to the legislature of a State in matters of this kind; it has no application to the jurisdiction of the State courts, and the States through their legislation may provide for the jurisdiction or the determination of the trial of these offenses without regard to the prohibition in the Constitution. It applies only to Federal legislation and to Federal jurisdiction.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Idaho will find upon a careful examination of the authorities on the criminal law that he is mistaken in reference to this matter. A larceny consists in the taking, stealing, and carrying away of the property of another with intent to convert it to the taker's use. There must be an intent to steal and there must be an asportation of the property. When the property is taken by the thief it does not become his property, and if he carries it into another jurisdiction he is carrying the owner's property into that other jurisdiction. It is still the property of the owner. Whenever he asports the property in that jurisdiction with the intent to steal it and convert it to his own use he is guilty of larceny in that jurisdiction.

In our State the constitution requires that the offender shall be tried in the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; and yet it has been held time and again that if a man steals property in one county and carries it into another, and into another, and into another he may be tried in any county into which he carries it, because in every county it is a fresh asportation of another man's property with the intent to steal it and to convert it to his own use. I think that is the rule in every State in the American Union. I do not think there is any dissent from that by any of the courts of highest resort in any of the States.

But I agree with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] that the accused ought to be tried in the United States court in the jurisdiction where the original offense was committed. I agree with the Senator from Idaho not only for the reasons he has suggested, but especially for the very potent reason that was suggested day before yesterday, I believe it was, by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND], where he showed how difficult it might be, very frequently, in some distant jurisdiction to get the witnesses or the evidence in behalf of the defendant, especially if he be an indigent defendant, and if he be charged with an offense of which he might be innocent; and of course the presumption is that he is innocent until he shall have been convicted. I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] is eminently correct in the proposition of law which he has stated.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I do not propose to press the matter, but I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] to this point. I do not think there is any doubt about the correctness of the law, as stated by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. McLAURIN]. I have endeavored myself to state it. Of course, there is no question as to the provisions in the Constitution of the United States which would require that the defendant be tried in the district in which the offense was committed. The only question is whether or not it is a fresh offense. It is not necessary or profitable for us to pursue that discussion. The Senator from Idaho and myself differ as to the effect of carrying goods into a new jurisdiction—whether or not that in itself is a fresh commission of larceny. However, as Senators seem to be agreed upon this matter I shall not press the point, but simply call the attention of the Senators in charge of the bill to the fact that wherever the committee propose to change the law and there is not a strong and sufficient reason for it in the minds of Senators, to that extent the final passage of the bill is jeopardized.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I fully realize the importance of the last suggestion of the Senator from Georgia. It is not the policy of the committee in charge of this bill to insist upon such changes in existing law as are subject to the strong objections of the Senator from Georgia or of any other Senator; that is to say, in the judgment of the committee, it was their duty to bring to the notice of the Senate the inconsistency in existing law, and the committee were of the opinion that the provision that the party might be tried in either of two jurisdictions in the Federal court was obnoxious to the sixth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. In order that it may be made a part of this discussion in the RECORD I will read that amendment, so that Senators may see how strong and positive it is in its reference to the jurisdiction in these cases:

ARTICLE VI.

In all criminal prosecutions, the accused shall enjoy the right to a speedy and public trial, by an impartial jury of the State and district wherein the crime shall have been committed, which district shall have been previously ascertained by law, and to be informed of the nature and cause of the accusation; to be confronted with the witnesses against him; to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, and to have the assistance of counsel for his defense.

That amendment to the Constitution grew out of a long-existing evil, one that existed before the formation of our Government and one that is recited in the Declaration of Independence. It was not unusual during those years preceding the Declaration of Independence that people charged with offenses in the colonies were taken to England for trial. So the people had had the necessity of some such legislation or some such provision as this in the organic law forced upon them by the burdens and hardships which followed the transportation of a party charged with a crime from the place where he was charged with having committed the crime, from the locality where he might be surrounded by his friends and those who would come to his assistance with ready knowledge of the facts, to some distant place where he was either taken against his will or to which he had gone in the ordinary course of life. In other words, that a man should not be caught away from home and subjected to trial in a foreign jurisdiction for an offense that, if he were tried at home where it was alleged to have been committed, he might, without great expense or burden or hardship, make a sufficient defense; while if he were compelled to go to trial far distant from his home, he would be unable to bring to his assistance that relief in the way of witnesses, conditions, and circumstances that would enable him to present his defense to the best advantage. That was the purpose and the wisdom of it.

It seems to me that this law, as we find it now written in the statutes of the United States, was passed in forgetfulness of the purpose of the sixth amendment to the Constitution, was passed pursuant to the almost universal law in all of the States that permits this to be done.

The area of the State is much smaller than that of the entire country. The inconvenience and expense of being tried in any selected portion of a State is not so great as that which would result in compelling a party to go to trial perhaps three or four thousand miles distant from where he is charged with having committed the offense; and it was because of that, with full consciousness of the fact that in nearly every State of the Union a provision similar to that in the Federal statutes exists, that your committee felt impelled to make the report in accordance with their views as to the effect to be given to the sixth amendment to the Constitution of the United States.

The Secretary read the next section passed over, as follows:

SEC. 51. [Whoever shall cut, or cause or procure to be cut, or shall wantonly destroy, or cause to be wantonly destroyed, any timber growing on the public lands of the United States; or whoever shall remove, or cause to be removed, any timber from said public lands, with intent to export or to dispose of the same; or whoever, being the owner, master, or consignee of any vessel, or the owner, director, or agent of any railroad, shall knowingly transport any timber so cut or removed from said lands, or lumber manufactured therefrom, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. Nothing in this section shall prevent any miner or agriculturist from clearing his land in the ordinary working of his mining claim, or in the preparation of his farm for tillage, or from taking the timber necessary to support his improvements, or the taking of timber for the use of the United States.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Idaho will pardon me, there is one other suggestion which I should like to to make as to the preceding section. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the last clause of the second section of the original statutes is entirely eliminated.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call the attention of the Senator from Georgia to the fact that we have a general section, which we passed the other day, which covers that.

Mr. BACON. Very well. It is not entirely eliminated, then?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not eliminated at all; it is simply transferred to another place in the bill.

Mr. BACON. I refer to that portion of the section about presumption.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am perhaps mistaken as to the Senator's reference.

Mr. BACON. The latter part of it, the provision that the receiver "may be tried either before or after the conviction of the principal offender" is retained in the proposed section; but the provision contained in the last three lines, to wit:

But if the party has been convicted—

That is the principal—

then the judgment against him—

That is the receiver—

shall be conclusive evidence in the prosecution against such receiver that the property of the United States therein described has been embezzled, stolen, or purloined.

The point that I want to call to the attention of the Senator is this: I think the present provision that it shall be a conclusive presumption or that it shall be conclusive evidence, is too harsh, too peremptory. But I wanted to ask the Senator if his committee considered the question whether or not it would be wise to make it prima facie evidence? That would leave to the defendant the defense, in case he raised the issue, that the goods were in fact not stolen. I do not know whether the committee have considered that or not. It seems to me there would be no hardship upon the defendant in providing that the judgment against the principal should be prima facie evidence only of the fact that the goods were stolen or embezzled.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, this provision of existing law that the record of the conviction of the principal "shall be conclusive evidence in the prosecution against such receiver" is evidently unconstitutional. It has been so held by the Supreme Court of the United States in 174 United States, page 47. The Senator suggests that it might be amended by striking out the word "conclusive" and inserting the words "prima facie." In my judgment it would then be just as obnoxious to the objection as it would in its original form. The point of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States is that it violates that provision of the Constitution which requires that every accused person shall be confronted with the witnesses against him; and when you make a record of a conviction either conclusive evidence or prima facie evidence in a case, you have denied to the defendant that right which is guaranteed by the Constitution, that he shall be confronted with the witnesses.

While I am on my feet, Mr. President, I want to call attention to the difference between section 49 and section 50. The argument has proceeded upon the theory that the language in both sections is the same, but the language in section 50 is even more objectionable than that contained in section 49. The existing law, for which section 49 is proposed to be substituted, provides that the accused person may be tried either in the district where the offense has been committed or into which he shall carry or have in possession said property, so embezzled, and so on. The existing law for which section 50 is proposed to be substituted provides that the accused person shall, on conviction before the circuit or district court of the United States in the district wherein he may have such property, be punished, and so on, limiting it to the district in which he has the property, and denying jurisdiction to the district in which the offense was originally committed. It seems to me there certainly ought not to be any such limitation as that.

Mr. TELLER. Is that the existing law?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is the existing law. The committee has stricken out that provision and reported it in the form in which it is found in the bill. So it seems to me, when we come to consider all these various questions, where there is grave doubt as to the constitutionality of a provision, and hardship is to result to the defendant, etc., certainly these sections ought to be amended as the committee has suggested.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say that it seems to me that the committee has done the proper thing in that particular case, because the existing law is perfectly absurd; and I do not believe the proposition could stand for a minute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, objection was made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to section 51. The Senator thought that that section did not sufficiently guard the rights of persons who were permitted under existing law to cut timber under certain conditions. I think the Senator is entirely correct about that, and the committee is as anxious to protect such persons as is the Senator. I therefore propose the following amendment to that section——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will read the amendment:

And nothing in this section shall interfere with or take away any right or privilege recognized or conferred by existing law of the United States to cut or remove timber from any public lands.

Mr. MCLAURIN. I ask the Senator if that amendment is to come in at the end of the section?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes; at the end of the section.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] does not intend to press the consideration of the pending bill any further to-night.

Mr. HEYBURN and Mr. SUTHERLAND. No.

Mr. TELLER. And that this section will be taken up at the next session, when the bill is under consideration?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 51, line 23, it is proposed to add the following:

And nothing in this section shall interfere with or take away any right or privilege recognized or conferred by existing law of the United States to cut or remove timber from any public lands.

Mr. KEAN. I understood the Senator was going to lay aside the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I submit the amendment so as to have it pending.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to move an executive session, Mr. President, but I thought the Senator from Idaho wanted to submit a request to lay aside the unfinished business.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not necessary to make a request to lay it aside to go into executive session, provided that no legislative business is done in executive session.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 10, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate February 6, 1908.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Robert O. Eaton, of Connecticut, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Connecticut, in place of W. Frank Kinney, resigned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY FOR ALASKA.

George B. Grigsby, of Alaska, to be United States attorney for the district of Alaska, and assign him to division No. 2, vice Henry M. Hoyt, whose resignation was accepted to take effect May 31, 1907.

WITHDRAWALS.

Executive nominations withdrawn from the Senate February 6, 1908.

Francis M. Barton to be postmaster at Terrell, in the State of Texas.

Henry W. Miller to be postmaster at Valdez, in the Territory of Alaska.

M. S. Whittier to be postmaster at Skagway, in the Territory of Alaska.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate February 6, 1908.

POSTMASTER.

MISSOURI.

Richard Collier to be postmaster at Shelbyville, Shelby County, Mo.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 6, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CONDEMNED CANNON FOR DETROIT, MICH.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution (No. 102) authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish three condemned cannon to the mayor of the city of Detroit, Mich., to be placed on the base of a statue of the late Maj. Gen. Alexander Macomb, United States Army. This resolution is unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union be discharged from the consideration of the following joint resolution, and that the same be considered in the House at the present time. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to deliver to the mayor of the city of Detroit, Mich., if the same can be done without detriment to the public service, one condemned 9-pounder French bronze gun, located at the United States arsenal at Watervliet, N. Y., and two condemned 12-pounder bronze field guns, date of 1838, located at the United States arsenal at Watertown, Mass., to be placed upon the gun pedestals of a monument erected to the memory of the late Maj. Gen. Alexander Macomb, United States Army: Provided, That the donation shall be without expense to the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, why is it that these guns can not be furnished to the city of Detroit as guns have been furnished heretofore upon aplication to the Secretary of War? And is this for the purpose of saving the expense in freight incident to transporting the guns? That expense is always paid by the applicants when they apply to the Secretary of War.

Mr. DENBY. Mr. Speaker, this will not call for the expenditure of any money from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. TAWNEY. Why is this done in this way?

Mr. DENBY. The guns were selected by the sculptor who designed the monument because of their chronological and artistic fitness for this particular monument. He visited the arsenal and selected three particular guns, and the War Department then reserved those guns pending appropriate action by Congress. The freight charges will be paid by the monument commission, and the Government will be put to no expense whatever.

Mr. TAWNEY. We have a general law authorizing the distribution of these guns, in the discretion of the Secretary of War; and, aside from the question of transportation, I can not see the necessity for special legislation in this particular case.

Mr. DENBY. Special legislation was requested by the War Department, and the guns, as I say, have been reserved by them.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENBY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS SPOKANE RIVER, IDAHO.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 15247) to authorize the Idaho and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Spokane River near the city of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Idaho and Northwestern Railway Company, a corporation of the State of Idaho, is hereby authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the Spokane River at a point near the city of Coeur d'Alene, Kootenai County, Idaho, in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman this question: Is this a unanimous report of the committee?

Mr. FRENCH. As I understand, it is a unanimous report, and has the approval of the War Department.

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TAWNEY. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, and move to nonconcur in the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, to nonconcur in the Senate amendments, and asks for a conference. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman explain the nature of the differences between the two Houses?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the Senate amendments increase the aggregate of the bill by about $300,000. One amendment allows to the District Commission the full amount estimated for furnishing and equipping the new municipal building, namely, $42,000 in excess of the amount carried in the bill as it passed the House.

Then there is another amendment restoring two items that were taken out of the bill in the House on points of order. One is to provide for the payment of expenses incident to the Hyde, Dimond, Benton, and Schneider trials in the District of Columbia out of the general appropriation for the judiciary. Another amendment is the one in relation to $50,000 for an advance to the Indians to enable the Department to supply them with horses and cattle and farming implements, which they otherwise will have to wait for until their lands are sold, the $50,000 to be reimbursed to the Government of the United States from the sale of the Indian lands.

I might mention also another amendment of $1,800 to pay the expenses of one of the members of the Inland Waterways Commission, which was appointed after the adjournment of the last Congress. These are the principal items I have in mind.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask if the bill has been printed with the Senate amendments.

Mr. TAWNEY. It has not; it came over yesterday and is on the Speaker's table.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that it has been printed.

Mr. TAWNEY. Then it came in this morning.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman propose to give the House any opportunity to vote on the question as to whether the House shall change the law about the payment of costs for courts in the District of Columbia in these special cases, or will the House be tied up by the conference report?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the conferees not having been appointed and the conference not having been agreed upon, I do not know whether I can cross that bridge until we come to it. I will say for the information of the gentleman from Illinois, however, that if it is his desire to have this proposition voted on directly by the House, the bill will be returned, and in the first conference the Senate amendment will not be agreed to. I will say to the gentleman it will not be agreed to only because I now say that the House shall have an opportunity to vote on it. I am free to say that personally I favored the proposition and shall continue to do so, whether on the floor of the House or in conference, but if in order to get the matter into conference it is necessary to bring it back here, I think we will save time by bringing it back for that purpose rather than sending it to the Committee on Appropriations and considering it in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. I wish to say in the first instance that it is my understanding that conferees appointed by the House are expected in conference to carry out the will of the House and to represent the House. The gentleman from Minnesota has indicated that he is opposed to the action of the House. My inquiry is, Does not that incapacitate him from serving on the conference committee?

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman from Iowa does not correctly state the position of the gentleman from Minnesota. I have not said that I was opposed to the action of the House. There has been no action on the part of the House on the merits of this proposition. A point of order was made against the proposition, and it went out on the ground that it was new legislation. Now, the Senate, without any conference and without any suggestion from any member of the Committee on Appropriations and without the suggestion of any Member of the House, has restored this provision. I advocated it at the time, but so far as the House is concerned there has been no action on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. HEPBURN. The gentleman is mistaken. The action of the House has expressed its opposition to this provision being in that bill. It was not in the form of a direct vote, but it was in the form of a well-considered action, and it is just as much the action of this House as it would be by a direct vote. The House has said that that provision must not be in that bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I can not assent to the construction put on the action of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman in the chair—holding that this provision was not in order under the rules of the House. That action does not represent the action of the House in any manner whatever on the merits of this proposition. But, however that may be, Mr. Speaker, I have said that if the bill is allowed to go to conference now, the conferees will not in the first instance agree to concur in the Senate amendment, but report the bill back to the House in order that the House may have the opportunity of voting on the merits of the proposition.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KEIFER. My suggestion is that we submit that question now. I understand there has never been any division on it, and I do not know that there would be in the House on this question, except that some Members may have desired that this appropriation for the conduct of these trials should go in under the head of District of Columbia, the District to pay one-half of the expenses.

In the form in which it is now, it was agreed upon by the Committee on Appropriations. What is the objection, I suggest to the chairman, to having that question settled now?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to yield to me.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. I decidedly want to express a dissent from the views of the gentleman that the striking out of this amendment on a point of order was not the action of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. On the merits of the proposition.

Mr. MANN. Ah, on the merits of the proposition. It is the action of the House. It is true there was no vote. It is also true that under the rules of the House, which are constantly denounced by various Members and seldom invoked by the same Members, the action in raising a point of order and having that sustained by the Chair was just as much the action of the House as if every Member of the House had voted on the proposition, and it is just as much the duty of the gentleman as a conferee on the part of the House to sustain, as far as he can, the action of the House in that matter as it would be if there had been a vote upon the proposition.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me, the logic of his position then is that when unanimous consent is asked for the present consideration of any proposition, and one Member of the House objects to consideration, then that objection is the action of the House on the merits of the proposition. To that I certainly can not agree, and I hardly think the gentleman, when he reflects upon his position, will himself claim that he is right.

Mr. MANN. I said it was the action of the House. It was not a vote of the House, but the gentleman can not determine in his own mind whether the House acts on the merits of the proposition when he is representing the House. He goes as a conferee as a representative of the House. The action of the House is determined by what it does, not by what certain Members may say on the floor of the House.

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEIFER].

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Speaker, I dissent entirely from the view expressed by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] and the other distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] on this proposition. The House has never had an opportunity to do more than, through an individual who makes a point of order, to enforce its own rules, to wit, that there should be no new legislation on an appropriation bill. Mr. Speaker, we uphold our rules when we pass an appropriation bill that comes from the Committee on Appropriations as we passed this one, but the Constitution of the United States gives to the Senate not the right to originate appropriation bills, but the right to amend our appropriation bills. Having amended them, as the Senate has the constitutional right to do, then the question comes back to the House to act under its constitutional right and duty to pass upon the merits of any amendment put on our appropriation bills by the Senate. There has never been anywhere, at any time, any expression of the views of the Members of this House, individually or collectively, on the amendment referred to. You can only say that in this case we have only in the first instance enforced our own rules. The point of order took the appropriation for the proposed purpose out of the bill as it originally came here, and now it is put back properly under the Constitution by the Senate for our consideration of the matter on its merits.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Chair announced the conferees on the part of the House: Mr. TAWNEY, Mr. VREELAND, Mr. LIVINGSTON.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill and resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3932. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Minnesota certain lands in the county of Carlton, Minn., and for other purposes; and Senate concurrent resolution 33.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the balances of the appropriations for the construction of vessels for the Light-House Establishment appropriated for in the acts of Congress approved April 28, 1904 (33 Stat., 468), March 3, 1905 (33 Stat., 1171), June 30, 1906 (34 Stat., 659, 660, 710, and 711), and March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1317, 1318, and 1319), are hereby made available for the pay of officers and crews, the payment of consular fees, port dues, and exchange, the purchase of provisions, rations, fuel, engineer stores and supplies, pilotage, water, laundry, and all other necessary incidental expenses in the transfer of the following-named vessels of the Light-House Establishment from Tompkinsville, N. Y., where they are to be delivered when completed to their respective stations: Tenders for the twelfth light-house district; for the thirteenth light-house district; for the Pacific Ocean; for Lake Superior; relief light-vessel for the Pacific coast; Columbia River light-vessel, Oregon; Swiftsure Bank light vessel, Washington.

PRIVATE SALMON HATCHERIES IN ALASKA.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14408) to encourage private salmon hatcheries in Alaska, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That salmon hatcheries are permitted to be constructed, owned, maintained, and operated on private premises, or on any of the unappropriated public lands and waters of Alaska, by citizens of the United States and corporations organized under any act of Congress or under the laws of any State or Territory of the United States.

SEC. 2. That there shall be granted from the public domain to every owner of a private salmon hatchery with an annual capacity of 10,000,000 or more Red and [or] King salmon fry an appropriate hatchery site not exceeding 40 acres of nonmineral land, together with the use of the adjacent tide lands and apurtenances, and all necessary fresh and salt waters, easements for roads and ways of ingress and egress, pipe lines, flumes, and conduits for conducting water, and the right to take and use any timber, stones, or other material from any public lands necessary for the construction, use, and maintenance of said hatchery.

SEC. 3. That destruction of a hatchery by the elements or inevitable accident shall not deprive the owner of the exclusive right to the hatchery premises and appurtenances, provided such hatchery is substantially rebuilt on the same stream, its tributary or lake, within two years from the time of its destruction.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make inquiry. What committee did this bill come from?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries reported this bill unanimously. The bill was passed by the House at the last session. This bill is for the purpose of encouraging the salmon hatcheries of Alaska. It has been approved by the Department. It provides that any person who shall operate a fish hatchery of an annual capacity of 10,000,000 or more salmon fry shall be granted a site for that purpose of not to exceed 40 acres of nonmineral land. I am going to offer an amendment, although

I think it is not necessary, but in order to place it beyond any possibility of misconstruction and to meet the suggestion of the Department, I am going to offer an amendment, as follows:

Provided, however, That in case said hatchery is not operated for a period of three years, then the premises shall revert to the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make this observation: Unless the gentleman will amend the bill so as to confer this authority upon natives of the Territory of Alaska, as well as citizens and corporations of the United States, I shall object to its consideration. Natives of the Territory of Alaska do not have the status of citizenship, and it is an unjust proposition to give American citizens rights in their own Territory and corporations organized in this country that are withheld from the natives of the Territory. There has already been too much discrimination against natives of the Territory of Alaska, and unless that amendment shall be made, I shall object to the present consideration of the bill. I suggest to the gentleman from Washington, after the word "States," line 6, on page 1, that the words "natives of the Territory of Alaska" be inserted, so that it will read, "citizens of the United States, natives of the Territory of Alaska, and corporations."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the amendment. The reason why it was not put in, perhaps, was because I have never known any native of Alaska to run a fish hatchery. It takes large capital for this purpose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That may be the case, but we are making permanent legislation now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I accept the amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. I notice in the bill there is no provision for the revocation of this license on the part of the Government.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have an amendment to that effect.

Mr. PAYNE. But I did not understand that amendment applied to that question at all except in case where it was not used for a period of three years. Now, the House does not know how valuable these privileges may be and whether the location of a hatchery might be at such a point in the river as to give these people an exclusive fishing privilege, which might be of great value.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will say to the gentleman we do not locate fish hatcheries on a place on the river where they catch salmon.

Mr. PAYNE. It gives the privilege of 40 acres of land, and it might reach over a long reach of the river if properly located for that purpose, and it seems to me there ought to be some guard to protect the interests of the United States. I am in full sympathy with the object of the bill to encourage the fish hatcheries for the production of salmon in Alaska.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Washington will permit me, would this bill give to the owners of the hatchery built upon the site which is donated, or proposed to be donated by this Government, any exclusive fishing rights in the waters adjacent to the hatchery or in the vicinity?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No.

Mr. TAWNEY. It would give them no exclusive fishing rights whatever?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Not at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. I asked that question to meet the objection raised by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. These grounds are only for use for the purpose of a hatchery, and no fishing rights are granted whatever under the law.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Does this bill in any way change existing law in regard to fish hatcheries in Alaska?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; it does not change it.

Mr. SULZER. All this bill does, then, as I understand it, is to give the people who have salmon canneries in Alaska the right to establish a fish hatchery, and in connection with that get 40 acres of nonmineral-bearing land.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The object of the bill is simply to give the owners of a fish hatchery the use of the land and to take timber and stone in that vicinity and upon the property that is granted to them to use in the construction and maintenance of a fish hatchery; that is all.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I observe that this bill was referred to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries. The bill should have been referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Well, I do not think so. I do not agree with the gentleman. We have had jurisdiction of this bill before.

Mr. SULZER. Improperly so. All bills relating to salmon fisheries and salmon hatcheries in Alaska have always been referred to the Committee on Territories. The latter committee has jurisdiction.

Mr. DALZELL. It is too late to raise that question now.

Mr. SULZER. I know it is, but I am simply making the comment. I would like to ask the gentleman another question——

Mr. CALE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman whether this bill is satisfactory to the Delegate from Alaska. The representative from Alaska should speak for Alaska, and he should be consulted regarding all legislation for Alaska. I shall be loath to favor any bill relating to matters in Alaska unless it is satisfactory to the duly elected representative from Alaska.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. CALE].

Mr. CALE. Mr. Speaker, I did not know of this bill until a short time ago. I did not know that a bill of this character was to be introduced or had been introduced; consequently, I am not thoroughly familiar with the substance of it or with its merits. The object of the bill is entirely satisfactory, not only to the people of Alaska, but unquestionably will be satisfactory to the people of the United States, because I do not think any person will object to any message or any legislation that has for its object the building up of the fisheries of the Northwest, as they are one of the important industries of that section of the country. The hatcheries are something, as we must admit, that are very essential. Without them the supply of fish would become entirely depleted. But I wanted to ask the gentleman who introduced the bill in what manner these 40 acres are to be selected? Also, who selects them?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. To be granted by the Department of the Interior. They have authority to grant it.

Mr. GOULDEN. Is not this the same bill that was reported from the committee late in the last session and passed unanimously here and failed in the Senate on account of the lateness of the hour that it reached that body?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is the same bill. Now, answering the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. CALE], I will say that this grants the right to those who already have fish hatcheries established and who are complying with the law. It grants them that right, and hereafter it grants any private party the right to construct a fish hatchery upon any appropriate public lands, provided they are nonmineral.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. MANN. How is this land determined? As to what they have located on?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It will be determined by the Department of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything in the bill to that effect?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It simply grants the land where they are already located.

Mr. MANN. But it does not require them to make application to the Department of the Interior, as I take it.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. There is no requirement made here.

Mr. MANN. It is a direct grant to them?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; for that purpose.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think these people ought to be required to make application? Does not this permit them, in other words, if the Government owns a town site, to walk in and take the town site?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It would not. They would have to make their application under existing law.

Mr. MANN. This bill repeals all existing law that conflicts with it to that extent. Here is a bill giving absolutely to a party a right to a piece of ground. He does not have to make application to anybody. The law is a superior thing. He can walk in and take a town site the Government has laid out.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He could if he had a fish hatchery running in the town site.

Mr. MANN. He could establish one there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is not what the bill provides.

Mr. MANN. Does not this bill permit him to establish a fish hatchery where he pleases?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No, sir; it does not. If the gentleman will wait I will tell him. It provides—

That there shall be granted from the public domain to every owner of a private salmon hatchery with an annual capacity of 10,000,000 or more Red and [or] King salmon fry an appropriate hatchery site not exceeding 40 acres of nonmineral land, together with the use of the adjacent tide lands and appurtenances, etc.

That site would already have to be established.

Mr. MANN. Not already established when the bill passes. Anybody could organize this fish hatchery hereafter.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will read the other section of the bill, as follows:

That salmon hatcheries are permitted to be constructed, owned, maintained, and operated on private premises, or any of the unappropriated public lands and waters of Alaska, by citizens of the United States and corporations organized under any act of Congress or under the laws of any State or Territory of the United States.

Mr. MANN. What are unappropriated lands? Lands that have not been controlled or taken possession of?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Or taken up or disposed of.

Mr. MANN. So that these men could organize a company after the Government had laid out a town site and walk in and take possession of that private property. It is exactly what you could do, and in all likelihood it is exactly what somebody would do.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. WALDO. Does the gentleman know whether——

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. For the present, I object.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PERKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill. There is one hour and a half of general debate, the time to be equally divided.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty-five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am not sure but I ought to apologize to the House for assuming to speak upon the bill which has been under consideration for four days with scarcely an illusion to it, save in the opening remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I would not presume to take the time of the House now but for the fact that the proposed policy of the committee is to gradually destroy our whole system of nonreservation Indian schools, a system built up by thirty years of care, and by the expenditure of large appropriations, that have received the approval of administration after administration, both of the Democratic and the Republican parties.

It is not my purpose to criticise the Committee on Indian Affairs; but when I went to the committee to get a copy of the hearings, there was not a line obtainable, nor is there a line of hearings published; and yet this committee proposes to destroy that whole system of nonreservation schools. It begins by nonappropriation for the school at Carson City, Nev., the one at Fort Lewis, Colo., and the one at Mount Pleasant, Mich. I am not familiar with the surrounding conditions of the school in Colorado nor in Nevada, neither is Mount Pleasant in the district which I have the honor to represent; but I give notice, now that my colleague [Mr. DARRAGH], will, at the proper time and at the proper place, move to amend the bill so as to restore that school. Why? Mount Pleasant is a beautiful little city of 5,000 people in north central Michigan—I speak of the lower peninsula. It has on one side a flourishing State normal school; it has on the other an Indian school established some seventeen years ago, with a capacity of 330, with an attendance of more than 300, and between these two schools is a very excellent high school; so that the atmosphere of the town, morally, intellectually, and in every way is wholesome and stimulating to the young people who come there for an education.

I may say, further, that there is in connection with the school a farm of several hundred acres owned by the Government of the United States. There are permanent buildings put up by the Government for the school proper; there are material improvements in the way of barns and sheds, farming implements of various kinds, horses, cattle, and sheep, and all that go to make up a progressive agricultural plant. There is every equipment necessary within the walls of the school building. Now what? Without one single line of explanation or hearings——

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Wait until I get through with this sentence. Without a single line of explantion, so far as the record goes, it is the purpose to close this school on the 1st of July next, leaving the crops in the field growing, turning the keys of the door of the institution, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs says, abandoning it as you would a dismantled Army post—I use his very language. It is the policy as to Nevada and it is the policy as to Colorado; it is the declared purpose of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to wipe out these schools, and with them Carlisle, with its thousand students—with its more than national reputation—and to turn adrift or send back to the reservations the 9,000 Indian boys and girls who are enrolled in the twenty-five Indian schools located from Carlisle, Pa., to Riverside, Cal. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say that there were a large number of barns, sheds, and outhouses at this institution; but he failed to state how many students there were at the school in Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Oh, yes, he did. He said there were 341.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will state for the gentleman's information that the capacity at Mount Pleasant is 330 students, with an enrollment of 350; the average attendance, mark you, gentlemen, is 341—the average attendance is more than the capacity. The three schools marked for destruction have a capacity of 780; an average attendance of 793. But it is not simply these three schools; it is the avowed policy of the Commissioner to do away with the whole of them. Now, on what ground? He says the whole question "pivots" on this—whether you will carry civilization to the Indian, or the Indian to civilization.

He purposes to send these boys and girls and young men and women back to their homes. We have no tribes in our State, but in several of the Congressional districts we have Indians living in severalty. This school gathers up these Indian boys and girls and puts within their reach the advantages that such institutions afford.

Mr. MANN. Does the State of Michigan provide for the education of the Indian children in the State where the Indians are living in severalty?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I will come to that a little later if you will allow me; and if I do not, I wish you would remind me of it.

Mr. KEIFER. Have you the Chippewa tribe up there in Michigan?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. A remnant of it.

Mr. KEIFER. I thought you said you had no tribes in Michigan.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They are not living in tribal relations. Now, the Commissioner proposes, to use his phrase, to send civilization to the Indians. I want to briefly contrast two races in this country. The darkest shadow that rests upon the white man in reference to the settlement of America, in my judgment, was the importation of the Africans through the slave trade. If we may accept the records, the cruel treatment of the negro at those times was almost beyond credence; and yet that dark shadow has a silver lining. The negroes stolen from Africa were being carried to civilization. No one now will defend slavery per se, and yet I am here to say this morning that there is now—and if not now, there will be in the not distant future—many an intelligent colored man who will see in the centuries of slavery of his race a preparation for the liberty which in God's own good time came to his people. [Applause.] The British ambassador at a recent noted meeting of educators and others interested in the elevation of the African people said, among other things:

The progress of the African in America during the last forty years is unsurpassed by any race in the human history.

The ambassador might have prefaced that remark with the declaration that that race had been in the best preparatory school in America for two hundred years. You ask how? Large numbers of the girls had been taken into the very best homes of the country and taught, by the most cultured of women, cleanliness, frugality, order, purity, virtue, and all that pertains to the care of a house and the making of character. Colored boys had been taken, generation after generation, into the fields, into the factory, into the mill, and to the forge to be taught the rudiments of an industrial education. Then when freedom came, bad as their condition was, they were immeasurably better prepared for further education than was the Indian. Why? The Commissioner says we will take civilization to the Indians. Well, we brought the African to civilization, but at the point of the bayonet and the muzzle of the rifle we drove the Indian away from civilization for more than three hundred years, reversing the policy which prevailed with reference to the other race, and reversing the results as well.

Again, he says one of his purposes is to do away with the separation of the races in school, and I come to the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. I do not quote the exact language of the Commissioner, but his thought is to no longer segregate the races, but let the Indian boy and girl sit beside the white boy and girl in the public schools in these States where the Indian lives. Now I want to read just a line to show you the objection there is to this. This is from the Indian Commissioner's report of 1906. He says:

In many neighborhoods the whites object to the Indian pupils on the ground of their dirty habits, their diseases, and their morals.

That is our answer to Michigan's hesitancy to open the doors of her public schools to these Indians, who bring not alone their unkempt personal appearance, but filth and disease, to sit in the same class rooms, to come in personal contact; and the white children feel a repugnance to their touch, not because they are Indians, God forbid, but because they are unclean and sometimes diseased in person.

Mr. MANN. What is the fact in reference to Michigan? Does it in fact exclude the Indians from the common schools?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No; it does not.

Mr. MANN. Or, in fact, are they admitted to the common schools?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. They are admitted to the common schools. In my district, near one of the best small towns in the State, a number of respectable Indians live near its borders, and send their children to the public schools, but they send their older and more advanced children to Mount Pleasant.

Mr. MANN. Then in your State, in fact, the Indians are not excluded from the public schools because of their filth and disease?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In some cases they are; but the point which the gentleman would make does not follow by any means. Why, sir, the negroes, few as they are, are infinitely cleaner. I would much rather have my son or daughter associate with them, sit beside them, breathe the air with them, than these Indian boys and girls, who come from the filthy surroundings in many of their homes.

Mr. MANN. Are the only Indian pupils admitted to Mount Pleasant those filthy and diseased pupils excluded from the common schools?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. No, sir; we do not draw the line on that; but if the gentleman could have visited Mount Pleasant, as I have, and have seen the pupils who are so lifted vastly above the plane on which they started, and see what they are now, as much as he loves equality, he would not want his son to mingle with them in the schoolroom.

Mr. MANN. I went to school myself with an Indian, and I have no apologies to make for it.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That may be, and it may have been no discredit to the Indian. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I may say in spite of that handicap he has made a great success in life.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. The Indian? Good. I am glad of that; there are exceptions to all rules; that is one, and the gentleman from Illinois, I may say, under the stimulating and uplifting influence of his Indian associate, has made a great success in life. [Laughter.]

Where are the racial lines drawn by the Government of the United States? In this city, right in this capital city of the nation the lines are virtually drawn on the race question, not in the schools only supported by public tax, but in the great Howard University, within the shadow of the Dome of this institution. And with the approval of the Government of the United States.

So we answer the Indian Commissioner—and there is nothing else to go by, no hearings; we simply have the report, and in it the Commissioner wants to abolish the racial lines. He better begin in Washington and put the negroes beside our white children in the public schools. He will not have to go so far from home.

He says again, and I am sorry he uses the term, his objection to these Indian schools is that they are "pauperized schools." Why, gentlemen, the glory of the American Republic is her free schools. [Applause.] There are thousands of children in the schools of Washington City who do not buy a text-book, who do not buy a pad on which to do their examples in arithmetic, who do not buy a lead pencil, nor a bottle of ink, nor a steel pen, and I will undertake to say that in many cases their parents do not pay one single dollar of tax for the support of the school.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not that true in all schools with all people?

Mr. BURLESON. Oh, no; in many States no provision is made for the supply of free text-books, free stationery, free ink, or free paper.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That is so in my State.

Mr. MADDEN. But is there not some provision for indigent scholars?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think there is.

Mr. GRONNA. There is no such provision in my State.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We maintain free schools for indigent boys and girls right here in the capital. It costs them not one dollar for their education, and in a multitude of cases it does not cost their parents one dollar in the way of taxation—it is absolutely free. And who finds fault with that? I was recently in New York City, the guest of the superintendent of schools in that great center of population; 600,000 pupils on the roll, with 14,000 teachers. He told me that in one school there were 4,000 pupils, and 90 per cent of them were children of Russian Jews. Their parents came here empty-handed and with empty pockets, but with a look at the flag and with an upward look of hope into the future they put their children—to use the language of the commissioner—in the pauperized schools of New York, that they might be Americans, educated, intelligent men and women. That is what we want to do for the Indian. You can not suddenly change the tide that has rolled onward for indefinite centuries with regard to the Indian and his habits, but we are changing them, gradually though it be.

I have here a statement of no less a person than the late distinguished Senator from Vermont, after spending a month at Hampton, Va., examining with the greatest care, as he stated at the other end of the Capitol, the influences of that school upon the Indians there, and he declares in his own time in the Senate of the United States that, in his judgment, no greater work is being done anywhere than is being done for the Indians in such schools as Hampton and Carlisle.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman answer me this question: Does he believe that it would be better for the future of the Indians to be segregated, or does he believe that they would get better results in the civilization and advancement of the Indians by mixing them with the American children in the American schools?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is not the design of the schools to permanently segregate them. It is the design of the schools to teach the Indian, first, cleanliness—and that is next to godliness in civilization—cleanliness, order, industry; in other words, the alphabet that leads up to self-help, self-reliance, self-assertion, and the building of manhood and womanhood. That is what the Indian boy and girl need. I was journeying in the far Northwest several years ago, riding in a chair car. In that car was an Indian mother dressed as any American woman would be, and an Indian father dressed as respectably as any of us, and a babe in the mother's arms, with as beautifully and delicately made apparel—and it was under the inspection of the ladies and others in the car—as that belonging to any white child. They had been on their vacation in the East and were going back to one of the nonreservation schools. The women had been educated at Carlisle, as had her husband. They were going back to the nonreservation school to resume their work of teaching their fellow-Indians less fortunate than they.

That has been done and is being done over and over again in the nonreservation schools. The gentleman asks me if it is a good thing to take them from home. For a time, yes. I can recall, as can others, the years when, hard as it was for us to break away from our home surroundings and turn our backs on parents and brothers and sisters and go away to school, it was one of the very best things that ever came to us. We carried a higher civilization back to the farm and to the home and the home surroundings after we had come in contact with the best in intellect, in morals, in stimulus, leading to higher and better womanhood and manhood. Tell me that the nearly 3,000 graduates out of Howard University—lawyers, teachers, ministers, physicians—who have gone among the colored race, morally and intellectually equipped to lift up their fellow black men, are not better able to do it than they would have been had they not been segregated under conditions calculated to bring out the best and the most that was in them!

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman want to be understood as saying that they can produce better results segregated than they can get mixed with the other races?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. It is only the purpose of the day schools to teach Indians in the lower grades. They can not have in them the advantage of the industrial schools. We have not the teachers fitted to do for them what they can do in these equipped industrial schools.

Mr. STAFFORD. Are all of these schools fashioned after the same plan?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Not entirely after the same plan, as I understand it, but that leads me to say that the only ground on which the Secretary of the Interior would second the action of the Indian Commissioner was that the results are not satisfactory. Then, I say, to have the schools so conducted that they are satisfactory, and some of them are at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. Unsatisfactory in what particular?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. He does not say, but the Commissioner says plainly that there are some schools that are highly satisfactory and doing most excellent work. If one can do satisfactory work, two can, and if two can, twenty-five can.

Mr. STAFFORD. Perhaps that is due to the fact of inadequacy of teachers specially equipped for this peculiar instruction and that therefore some of the schools must be reduced in order to concentrate the force.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. We had no hearings. We have heard it said here from time to time satirically that we were shooting civilization into the Filipinos. I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of War, lately returned from there, in which he says that when the Americans took possession there were only about 7 per cent in the islands who could be called educated people able to speak the Spanish language, which in the archipelago is the test of education. The rest of the people spoke in sixteen different dialects. He says now that at least 80 per cent of the Filipinos are in dense ignorance.

We sent with our soldiers 1,000 American teachers to the Filipinos, and they are here to-day, but the Government is not content with simply sending teachers into the country and establishing day schools. Secretary Taft says that there are now in the islands, including art and trade schools, agricultural schools, domestic-science schools, at least one industrial school to every province in the Philippines, and it is the purpose to increase this number as rapidly as resources and opportunity will permit. In other words, we are seeking to carry civilization to the Filipinos in precisely the same manner that we have sought for thirty years to carry civilization to the Indians, by giving them first the advantages of our school system, whether in the tribal or nontribal relation, and secondly, by establishing these secondary schools in the United States at convenient places precisely after the policy we are pursuing to-day in the Philippines with regard to the Filipinos.

Mr. GRONNA. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to ask this question, if it is not true that these teachers must be especially fitted or trained as teachers in these Indian schools. Now, as one who has lived part of his days among the Indians or near Indian reservations, I know that if you send an Indian child to a common school you can not get a word out of that pupil from morning until night. You must study their characteristics, their peculiarities; and does not the gentleman believe that it is highly important that these teachers should be specially fitted and trained in the teaching of these children?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In answer to the gentleman's question, I would like to have the Clerk read from the report of 1893, Interior Department, which I send to the desk. I may say, Mr. Chairman, as a preface, that this is the report of a national assembly of teachers in the city of Boston, Indian and others, several years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it will be read from the Clerk's desk in the time of the gentleman from Michigan.

The Clerk read as follows:

A large exhibit of literary and industrial work was contributed by the various Indian schools and displayed at the Institute held in Boston. This exhibit was visited and studied by thousands of educators from all over the United States and was conceded to be the finest display of Indian work ever made anywhere. It served to show the marvelous advancement made in educating Indian children. The display of industrial work, representing the various trades taught in the Indian schools, attracted marked attention, and illustrated most effectively the progress made along the line of industrial education.

At the Boston meeting citizenship, character building, manual and industrial training were the central topics. Excellent papers on these and miscellaneous subjects were read. The majority of those who read papers or took part in the discussions emphasized the importance of giving the Indian special agricultural training in order that he may, as soon as possible after taking possession of his allotment, make it yield him a living. A number of Indians (teachers and students from the various schools) were in attendance, and their interest in the features of the institute and practical suggestions in discussions demonstrated the earnest manner in which they are taking advantage of the educational opportunities offered them and their desire to assist in the uplifting of their race.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. What would the Commissioner do with these schools? If necessary dismantle them as you would an army fort; give them away to the various States on easy terms; give them away if you can not do anything else to the communities in which they are located; turn over several million dollars of property with all the improvements that have been made upon it, simply for the purpose of sending these boys and girls back to the day schools, where they have not the advantages beyond a certain age and grade, and where it is not possible to have what they now have in the nonreservation schools. And I want gentlemen whose schools are not marked for destruction in this bill to know that the ax is lifted above your schools as well as these, and if this policy is to be carried out every one of them is sooner or later to be abandoned. Can we afford to turn backward? Can we afford to let down our hands? Can we afford to grow slack in our efforts to pay back one tithe of the debt we owe to that people whose fathers we drove from the Atlantic to the Pacific literally, and if we could would have driven them into the sea? We owe it to the descendants of this heroic, though savage, race, in these later days to repair in so far as we are able the waste that our fathers wrought, to right the wrongs the white man inflicted, to lift up these aborigines of the soil and make them not Indians but Americans, as we are doing by the children of the former slaves and by those of the foreigners who from every quarter of the earth come to our shores by the millions. [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FOSTER of Vermont having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 4, 1908:

H. R. 9210. An act to authorize the court of county commissioners of Geneva County, Ala., to construct a bridge across the Choctawhatchee River at or near the Jones Old Ferry, in Geneva County, Ala.; and

H. R. 12439. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across White River, Arkansas.

On February 6:

H. R. 14779. An act to transfer the county of Alachua, in the State of Florida, from the southern to the northern judicial district of that State, and to provide for sittings of the United States circuit and district courts for the northern district of Florida at the city of Gainesville, in said district.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DIEKEMA].

Mr. DIEKEMA. Mr. Chairman, if there is any one thought that has impressed me more deeply than another during the short space of time that I have occupied a seat upon this floor, it is the inspiring thought that every noble, exalted, and patriotic sentiment, whether uttered on this or the other side of the middle aisle which divides partisans, but not patriots, finds a ready response and arouses general applause in the whole House. This bodes well for the Republic and for the future of this great theater of human liberty, where the problem of the ages—the struggle between might and right, between the forces that make for righteousness which exalteth a nation and corruption which destroys a nation, between freedom and oppression—must still be fought out.

Every ideal right pointed out in the Declaration of Independence and guaranteed by the Constitution is safeguarded in the ringing appeal which has lately come down to us from the White House, and which is as conservative as it is aggressive, as optimistic as it is severe, and every line of which breathes an abiding faith in Almighty God and in the American people. The stern notes of the prophet's warning voice are mingled with psalms of victory, and finally there emerges from the din of battle a beautiful vision—the revelation of justice, with malice toward none and with charity for all, upheld by the sons of the men who wore the blue and the gray, assuming dominion in the hearts and minds of our countrymen.

Greatly do I rejoice at having come to the seat of government at a time when the spirit of sectional strife has been buried and when there is a new alignment and the marshaling of the forces about the standards of a great moral issue—that of the supremacy of the law and the equality of all men before the law.

I do not believe in the socialist's dream of equality, for I believe that, as in religion, so in the world of business, every man must work out his own salvation. All nature and all history—yes, even the glimpse which revelation gives us into the realm of the world of spirits, of angels and archangels—teach us the lesson of inequality; but before the throne of justice, whether that throne be set up in heaven or upon earth, all men must be equal.

Justice can have no quarrel with capital or labor, with rich or poor, with great or small, as such, but only with the wrongs committed by either. The envious hand that would smite a great business industry solely on account of its magnitude is not the hand of the true American.

The genius, the ambition, the spirit of leadership, the capacity to think great thoughts, do great deeds, and work out a great destiny which in other days caused men to enlist in the army and made them world conquerors now drive them into business and make them captains of industry who feed the hungry mouths of vast armies of laborers and supply their homes with comforts and luxuries of which the world has never dreamed. They have tunneled the mountains, spanned the rivers, opened the mines, plowed the prairies, felled the forests, and transformed the face of this western continent. All honor to the American business men, the builders of this mighty fabric of industry, the projectors of our transcontinental railroads, the heroes of our world of commerce, manufacture, and trade. All honor to these broad-gauged, chivalrous, invincible citizens who constitute a splendid type of the world's best product, the American gentleman. All honor to them while they respect the majesty of the law and acknowledge the equal rights of their fellow-men. When, however, any of them overleap these bounds neither their genius, industry, power, nor wealth should save them from the humiliation and the punishment which outraged justice visits upon the lawbreaker.

We have been told by that matchless orator from New York, who makes even the little fishes talk like great whales, that for this strenuous and inspiring work we need a leader who is possessed with the spirit of the crusader; that the Republican party has none such except our President, whom he has enshrined among the heroes of the ages and has mounted on a pedestal of fame far above the reach of party strife; that the Democratic party offers the only crusader whose lofty idealism fits him for leadership. We accept the challenge and boldly announce to him and to the world that we want no crusader for President. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The crusader left behind him a trail of blood and 3,000 miles of bleached bones, once happy pilgrims to a Savior's tomb, and then left that tomb in the possession of the Saracen. His idealism was his undoing.

We want a constructive statesman, with high ideals, deep-rooted convictions, dauntless courage, lofty conceptions of duty, and dogged determination; one who will not give us painted ships on painted seas, the delusive hope of the mirage in the desert, stones for bread and serpents for fish; but a real reformer upon whose broad shoulders and massive frame even our great President has leaned with safety, who has shared his hopes, thought his thoughts, and executed his plans; one who is so big that Bryan's clothes would not possibly fit him. [Applause on the Republican side.]

"First the crusader and then the judge," says the voice of the gentleman from New York. "First the crusader and then the undertaker," says the voice of history.

You may have your crusader. We will take our statesman. You may destroy with the desire of building better. You may kill with the vain hope of restoring life. We will neither destroy nor kill. This mighty fabric of American genius and industry must stand—only the rotting timbers must be replaced. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The crusader lashes the waves of public fury into a seething, foaming mass until they beat in destructive breakers upon the shores. The statesman says to the winds and the waves, "Be still." The crusader applies the whip and throws away the reins; the statesman holds tight the reins while he uses the whip. The crusader throws wide open the throttle and dashes the train down the embankment; the statesman slacks up the speed around the curves and lands safely at the depot. [Applause on the Republican side.]

When some future historian writes the history of our period he will dwell upon the conservatism of our President and point out how every measure of reform launched by him was anchored to some rock of public safety. He has lifted the whole country to a higher plane of thinking, away from the material to the ethical, and has brought from the mouths of unwilling witnesses the testimony which magnifies his inspiring leadership and exalts the deeds of his political party.

We welcome the struggle of The Statesman v. The Crusader, Construction v. Destruction, Life v. Death.

Already we hear the revival songs of civic virtue ringing in our ears. Already we hear the tumult and the noise of the march of the oncoming hosts of earth's best and bravest enlisting under our banners, upon which we have emblazoned in letters of burning gold the words: "The supremacy of the law" and "Equal justice to all." [Loud applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CAPRON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4048) granting an increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war, and certain widows of such soldiers and sailors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 9217) amending sections 2533 and 2534 of the Revised Statutes, so as to change the name of the Fairfield collection district.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now desire to yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CLAYTON] twenty minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. Mr. Chairman, we heard read here a few days ago a remarkable message from the President—a remarkable man. That message, much of it, we on this side of the House enjoyed, because much of it is the Democratic doctrine familiar for years to the country and which is now, almost on the eve of our quadrennial election, urged by the President on his party.

Under the permission of the House I shall have printed in the RECORD the address of Hon. William Jennings Bryan delivered in New York City on the night of the 4th of the current month. This address is good and wholesome. I shall leave the consideration of its truth, strength, and excellence to the American people. It is a message that appeals to the enlightened public conscience and is from the most popular private American citizen and the man who deserves to be, and doubtless will be, the next Chief Magistrate of the Republic. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Bryan's address is as follows:

"THOU SHALT NOT STEAL."

[Address delivered by William Jennings Bryan, at Carnegie Hall, New York, February 4, 1908, under the auspices of the Civic Forum.]

Mr. Chairman, Ladies, and Gentlemen:

I appreciate the opportunity which the Civic Forum has given me of presenting in this great center of trade and finance a subject which, however hackneyed it may seem, still forces itself upon us, namely, the subject of larceny. The commandment "Thou shalt not steal" presents as clearly as it can be presented a moral truth that may be classed among the self-evident truths. The greatest service that one can render a truth is to state it so plainly that it can be understood. I do not mean that any truth can be stated so plainly that it will not be denied by those who find it to their interest to deny it. I believe that it was Lord Macaulay who said that eloquent and learned men could be found to dispute the law of gravitation if any pecuniary advantage were to be gained by it. What I mean to say is that a truth can be stated so plainly that those who desire to see it can see it, and that when it is seen it needs no defense. If, for instance, you may say to a man that it is wrong to steal, and he replies, "Oh, I don't know about that," don't argue with him; search him, and you will probably find the reason in his pocket.

I have not selected this subject with any intention of presenting an argument against stealing. I am going to assume that those who listen to me agree that the commandment should be obeyed. It is my purpose rather to make some applications of the commandment to present conditions, for I am satisfied that many are guilty without really being conscious of disobedience to the commandment or of committing a wrong.

To steal or to commit larceny may be defined as the wrongful taking of another's property. Law writers have divided larceny into two classes—petit larceny and grand larceny—the former term being used when the property stolen is of little value and the latter when the value is greater. There is a tendency in modern times to divide grand larceny into two classes, so that now we are inclined to think of larceny as petit larceny, grand larceny, and glorious larceny. By glorious larceny I do not refer to the policy which nations have indulged in of taking the property of other nations by force—an act that is sometimes described as not only innocent but even patriotic; I refer rather to that tendency, quite discernible at the present day, to regard stealing upon a large scale as less reprehensible than stealing upon a small scale. If a man picks your pocket, or enters your house in the dark, or accosts you upon the highway and takes from you a few dollars, you regard him as a vulgar thief. No one can have respect for such a person, and the punishments of the law are in such cases swift and sure, if the offender is caught. Even in the case of grand larceny, if the amount taken is not very great, the thief finds it difficult to escape, for he has no influential friends and he can not hire skillful lawyers to present technicalities in his defense. If, however, he steals a large sum, it becomes quite a different matter, and the sum may be so large that we overlook the man's rascality in our amazement at the genius which he has displayed. As a rule, the man who steals a million dollars has a better chance of escape than the man who steals a thousand. So true is this that it has been suggested that we amend the commandment to read, "Thou shalt not steal on a small scale."

Judge Jerry Black, the celebrated Pennsylvania lawyer, in his argument in the Credit Mobilier case—quoted as a man of affairs—said that "To rob an individual was criminal; to rob a corporation was reprehensible; to rob a municipality was a matter of doubtful morality; to rob a State was meritorious, but that to rob the United States was the highest achievement of human virtue."

We should attempt to cultivate a public opinion which will remove the distinction between grand larceny and glorious larceny and insure the enforcement of the criminal law against all offenders alike, regardless of the amount stolen and regardless of the social, business, or political position of the thief.

But my object to-night is rather to draw you attention to the various ways in which larceny may be committed. There is a distinction that can be drawn between direct and indirect larceny; that is, between the one who does the stealing himself and the one who does it through another; and this is a larger subject than at first appears, for those who produce conditions which result in such gross injustice that the victims of the injustice are driven to destitution, to despair, to desperation, and finally to theft—those who produce these conditions are not entirely guiltless. But the discussion of this subject will lead us into sociology, and I want to confine myself to criminology.

For the purposes of this discussion let us divide larceny into two classes—larceny in violation of the law and larceny through the operation of law. While both branches of the subject are important, the second branch is the larger and the less considered. I think I am within the truth when I say that, measured by the value of the property taken, stealing through the operation of law, if not so frequent, reaches a larger aggregate than stealing in violation of the law. But the stealing which is done in violation of law is enormous and the methods employed many. Take, for illustration, the administration of our tax laws. Let us suppose that the law is made by well-meaning legislators and in its requirements approaches justice as closely as fallible man can approach justice. The assessor is sometimes corrupted—not always by money, but more often by influence; that is, the person favored does not always pay the assessor a fixed sum, but helps to elect him or reelect him, and thus becomes responsible for the continuation of his salary.

Inequality in taxation is merely a form of larceny. If two men live side by side and one contributes in taxation $10 when his just share is only $5, and the other pays only five when he ought to pay ten, one loses $5 that he ought to keep, while the other keeps $5 that he ought to give to the Government. The effect in this case is just the same as if one man took the other man's property and applied it to his own use. The fact that the Government, acting as a collector, took the $5 from the man who is overburdened and gave it to the man who is underburdened does not change the character of the transaction.

If inequality in taxation is due to the act of an assessor who, at the solicitation of a property owner, underassesses him, then the assessor and the man favored are guilty of the wrongful taking of the property of others. If we examine the assessment books in any city we will find many instances such as the above mentioned. One piece of property will be assessed at half its value, another piece of property at a third of its value, and still another at a fourth of its value, and where there is this difference in the basis of assessment the discrimination is usually in favor of the large property holder, who is able to exert an influence upon the assessor to bias him in favor of an undervaluation.

Not only is the large business block often favored at the expense of the small home, but the property of big corporations is often favored at the expense of individual holders. Take, for instance, a street car company, a water plant, or a gas plant. On the stock market these franchise-holding corporations never forget to count in the value of the franchise, and this intangible asset is sometimes as valuable as the physical properties owned by the corporation. Taxes are generally estimated on the basis of physical property, while the dividends are paid upon the face value of the stocks and bonds. It seems strange that a corporation which receives a valuable franchise from the public as a gift should refuse to pay taxes in proportion to the market value of its stocks and bonds, and yet there is scarcely a city or State in which the public is not in a constant struggle to compel franchise-holding corporations to pay their share of the taxes, and even then the basis upon which they pay is notoriously lower than the basis upon which the individual property owner, especially the small property owner, pays.

If a certain sum is to be collected in taxes and some pay less than they should, the others must pay more than their share. Is it not worth while to insist that both the underassessed citizen and the unscrupulous official shall obey the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal?"

I need not waste time on the tax dodger or the smuggler, for those who, by concealment, deliberately deceive the assessor or collector are as guilty of larceny as if they boldly took the property of others.

But what if the fault is in the law itself? What shall we say if those who make the law write it with the intention of overburdening some and releasing others from just obligations? Time does not permit an extended discussion of the various systems of taxation. If we were discussing the question of taxation in a fundamental way, we would have to consider the claims of all systems, existing and proposed, but I am not now considering new systems, but rather the injustice connected with the systems in operation. In local taxation we are constantly confronted with the question, Shall personal property be taxed? and there are many who argue that because personal property is difficult to locate, it should be exempt. This argument is based upon the theory that it is better not to attempt to collect a tax upon personal property than to make an unsuccessful attempt. While I recognize that it is easier to collect taxes on visible than on invisible property, I am convinced that the owners of visible property should not pay their own taxes, and, in addition thereto, the taxes that ought to be paid by the owners of invisible property. The farmer, for instance, has his money invested in lands, in improvements, and in stock. All of these can be found and their value estimated. If in the cities there are people of great wealth who instead of owning lands and buildings and cattle and hogs, own money and notes and bonds, is it fair that the owners of money and securities shall be exempt from taxation? The man who loans usually requires security—not only security but a margin to cover possible shrinkage in the value of the property upon which the security rests; that is, the man who owes him must suffer a considerable loss before the creditor suffers any. Is it fair that the man who thus must take his chances upon the seasons and run the risks of business, should also pay the taxes of the one who is able to protect himself from ordinary risks and chances? If the law is made by those who escape taxation, are they not taking the property of others in violation of morals, even when they act in accordance with the laws which they have secured?

The Government is a mighty power for good or for evil, for justice or for injustice, and when the Government itself can be manipulated for the enforcement of a law which rests upon injustice, great harm can be done. Is it stretching the definition of larceny to make it cover the wrongful taking of a man's property through unjust legislation? I might hesitate to use such strong language were it not for the fact that the Supreme Court of the United States has used just such language in what is known as the Topeka (Kans.) case. Justice Miller, in delivering the opinion of the court, said: "To lay with one hand the power of the Government on the property of the citizen and with the other to bestow it upon favored individuals to aid private enterprises and build up private fortunes is none the less a robbery because it is done under the forms of law and is called taxation."

"Robbery" is even a stronger word than larceny, but I am so conservative in my language that I prefer to use the more polite phrase and leave the harsher term to our court of last resort.

In national taxation we have not made as near an approach to justice as we have in State and municipal taxation. In national taxation we collect almost all of our revenues for the support of the Federal Government from internal revenue taxes and from import duties. These taxes rest upon consumption and are collected in proportion to consumption. We tax people according to their needs rather than according to their possessions, and men's needs are more uniform than their possessions. Men do not use tobacco, consume liquor, buy food or wear clothing in proportion to their wealth or in proportion to their income, and taxes upon consumption always overburden the poor and underburden the rich. When the income tax was under discussion it was insisted that it collected a tribute from thrift and industry, but are not all taxes income taxes? They must be paid out of the income, even though they are not proportioned to the income. Taxes upon consumption are therefore income taxes; they are more than that; they are graduated taxes upon income, and the heaviest per cent falls upon the lowest income. Adam Smith has laid it down as a rule that people ought to pay taxes in proportion to the benefits which they receive from their government, and those who look to the Government for the protection of large possessions ought to be willing to pay in proportion to the protection which they receive. Our police officers, our fire departments, our courts, our armies, and our navies are supported more for the protection of property than for the protection of life, and it is only fair that taxation should, as far as possible, take into consideration the benefits given in return.

I am aware that it is not possible to devise any system of taxation which will be perfectly fair and absolutely equitable, but I am afraid that we have not always made justice and fairness the first consideration. The income tax has been opposed by men who would have their taxes increased and by men whose taxes ought to be increased, and I have had a suspicion that our import duties have in some cases been levied for the purpose of giving some industries an advantage over other industries—to give a few of the people a profit at the expense of the rest of the people. The reason why unjust taxation continues is that those who receive in large quantities exert an undue influence upon legislators, while those who pay, each a small amount, are too often indifferent to the exactions.

The contest between the taxpayer on the one side and the tax eater on the other is always an unequal contest, because the tax eater is vigilant and ever present, while the taxpayer is at home trying to make enough to meet the next assessment. For this reason appropriations grow apace and unjust systems of taxation find eloquent defense from orators and newspapers. If I were to attempt to enter into detail, I might run counter to the preconceived notions of many in this audience, but I venture to call your attention to the subject in the hope that as conscientious men and women you will study the question of taxation with the determination to eliminate the element of larceny wherever it appears and put taxation upon a just foundation, so that each citizen will contribute his fair share to the burdens of the Government under whose protection we all live.

And now, if you will bear with me a moment, I will take up another subject which illustrates how larceny can be practiced by law. A change in the monetary standard of a country affords an opportunity for the wrongful taking of property. A few years ago the debtor class in this country was complaining because of a rising dollar; during the last few years the creditor class has been complaining of a falling dollar. That is, from 1873 to 1897 the general level of prices fell, and, roughly speaking, a dollar would buy more and more each year. From 1897 up to a few months ago prices have been rising and a dollar would buy less and less each year. Now, there can be no doubt that falling prices help the man who owns the dollars, while rising prices help the man who owes dollars. I do not know that it is necessary to elaborate upon this, because the quantitative theory of money is now generally accepted, and the quantitative theory of money is stated in the proposition that, other factors remaining the same, the purchasing power of a dollar decreases as the number of dollars increases, or, to state it in a different way, prices rise when the volume of money increases. When the general level of prices rises or falls, all business is adjusted to it, but some things more slowly than others. There are certain fixed charges, such as the expenses of government, which do not respond quickly to a change in the level of prices. Take, for instance, debts, railroad rates, and official salaries. When prices were falling the dollars called for by a note or bond increased in purchasing power, and the one who collected the dollars collected this increase, his principal rising in fact, though not in figures. The interest itself increased, for, while the rate remained the same, the purchasing power of the annual interest grew. And so also, with railroad rates. A fixed rate per ton or a passenger rate of 3 cents per mile became more and more to the railroad and cost more and more to the shipper and traveler. In like manner official salaries, though not increased in amount, became heavier upon those who, through taxation, paid the salaries. Since prices have been rising the reverse has been true, and the fixed charges in the way of debt, interest, rates, and salaries have been more easily paid. If a change in the volume of the money is made deliberately and intentionally, those who make it are morally responsible for the injustice done, and they must be prepared to show that, all things considered, the change secures a larger measure of justice, or a nearer approximation to justice.

I have not mentioned the subject for the purpose of criticising those who have endeavored to enlarge the volume of currency or those who have endeavored to contract it; I have referred to the matter merely to show that through monetary legislation it is possible to take money from one man and give it to another, and it follows that unless this legislation is based upon sound arguments and the laws made in the interest of justice, the taking may not only be wrongful, but the injury very great.

The ideal monetary system would be one in which the purchasing power of the dollar remained the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Then business could be done upon a level plane, and no one would secure that legislative advantage which, whether it be great or small, is necessarily attendant upon a change in the average purchasing power of the dollar. In 1896 bimetalists contended that an enlargement of the volume of the currency was necessary to protect society from the effect of falling prices, an effect recognized by all civilized countries in the various international conferences that were held. It was admitted that in the restoration of bimetalism there would be instances of individual injustice, but it was contended that the restoration of a just level of prices would, on the whole, promote justice. Those who at that time defended falliag prices and complained of bimetallism are to-day using the arguments of bimetalists and pointing out the fact that the dollar which rises in value, like a dollar which falls in value, brings injustice to some.

Surely, in the consideration of so great a subject as that of money, care should be exercised to reduce to the minimum the injustice done and to increase to the maximum the stability of the dollar as a measure of the value of all other property.

The subject of private monopoly furnishes us another illustration of larceny, and here it is not petit larceny nor even grand larceny; it rises to the proportions of a glorious larceny, not only because of the amount taken, but because of the respectability of those who received the stolen goods. The object of a private monopoly is to control the price of the thing sold; it is to corner the market. The theory is that man's necessities require him to buy certain things which sustain his life and add to his comfort. Where there is competition, the sellers bid against each other, and the purchaser is able to secure what he needs at a price which is approximately fair. If, however, all of the venders can be brought together in a combination, so that all purchasers must buy of the same vender, competition is eliminated, and the man who fixes the price, fixes it arbitrarily; and we know enough of human nature to know he is apt to charge all that the traffic will bear. To illustrate this point, let us suppose a city in the midst of a desert whose people derive their water supply from a single spring All must have water, and they must have it no matter at what cost. If the one spring to which they all must go is owned by an individual, and he is permitted to charge what he will for water, he is sure to prosper as long as there is any money in the city. But this is an imaginary case. It can not be real, because the instinct of self-preservation is so strong that people would not permit the water supply of a city to be in the hands of one man with no regulation as to the price to be charged. In the cities which permit private corporations to control the water plants there is always provision for regulation of the price. I need only present the case of a real monopoly to show how intolerable it is. A monopoly is as abhorrent to the public as a vacuum is to nature, and yet, we have allowed monopolies to grow up in this country which do far more injustice, and reap a larger profit from the injustice, than the owner of the spring would in the supposed city in the desert, and these monopolies are tolerated only because the people are less informed about their methods and their influence.

I insist that the commandment "Thou shalt not steal" applies as much to the monopolist as to the highwayman, and we shall not make any material progress in the protection of the people from private monopolies until we are prepared to obliterate the line that society has drawn between the ordinary thief and the larger criminal who holds up society and plunders the public through the instrumentality of private monopoly. The man who stands by the wayside and, holding a revolver to your head, demands your money or your life is no more a criminal, measured by every moral standard, than the man who, obtaining control of a nation's fuel, collects a tribute from every householder, offering him the alternative of payment or suffering from lack of fire. I have mentioned a monopoly in fuel, but a monopoly in light, in food, or in any other necessary of life is just as repugnant to the moral sense. It is entirely possible that very many of those who enjoy the benefits of monopoly—some as managers, some as directors, and some merely as stockholders—are unconscious of the principle involved—unconscious of the moral character of their conduct, but surely this is an opportune time to impress upon the conscience of the nation the real moral character of the conduct of the monopolist.

And it is not sufficient that we shall appeal to the conscience of the monopolist alone. If a highwayman were to engage a lawyer to follow a few rods behind him with a horse that he might have a ready means of escape after having committed an act of robbery, we would call the lawyer a party to the crime and we would visit upon him the same punishment visited upon the principal in the robbery, and so if some one living near the spot where the robbery was committed furnished the robber with a change of clothing or, in return for a part of the booty, conspired with him to conceal the booty until suspicion was past, such a one could not escape legal responsibility for the crime; and yet it is considered quite respectable to-day for the legal representatives of predatory wealth to visit State capitals and national capitals and prevent the enactment of laws intended to protect the public from private monopolies; and it is even more respectable for the salaried attorneys of these monopolies to follow close after the offenders and furnish them horses in the way of legal technicalities upon which to escape from punishment. And some of our metropolitan papers are in the same class with the unscrupulous lawyer. Is it not time to raise the moral standard and to insist that our laws shall be made for the enforcement of human rights and not for the protection of those who violate these rights? Shall we continue to be horrified at housebreaking and the picking of one's pocket and yet view complacently and without concern these million-dollar raids upon the earnings of the entire population? Surely we are justified in applying to the trust question the commandment "Thou shalt not steal."

And will I be entering upon forbidden ground if I question the moral character of those financial transactions which have resulted in the issuing of watered stock and fictitious capitalization? The individual can not circulate his note unless the purchaser believes that he has back of it sufficient property to insure the payment of the note, but there is a presumption in favor of stock issued by a corporation. People assume that industrial stocks represent their face value. If a company is formed with a capital of a hundred millions, the investors assume that that much money has been invested in plants and in the business, and dividends are expected upon that basis, but this supposition has been abused and the people have been imposed upon. All sorts of devices have been employed to give to the stock the appearance of genuineness. Eminent financiers underwrite the bonds issued by the corporation or subscribe for large blocks of stock and thus lend their names to the schemes for the exploitation of the public. A few years ago it was found that one of the high officials in a prominent New York bank was connected with a company which was inflating the value of certain stocks by what is known as "washed sales"—that is, by the selling and reselling of stock among a group of men for the deception of the public—and when the matter was made public, the bank official seemed unconscious of the moral turpitude involved in the transaction. Stock which does not represent money invested can not be raised to its face value by honest or legitimate means, and those who palm off spurious securities upon the market may make more money by such transactions, but they show no more conscience in their transactions than the horse trader who doctors up a worthless animal and by concealing his defects sells him to some unwary purchaser. I hope I shall not be thought guilty of impropriety in suggesting that the commandments which are binding upon the rest of the world ought not to be suspended in the region of Wall street. If we were able to make an exact calculation of the amount of money taken from an unsuspecting public each year by the issue of stocks and bonds known to be worth less than the amount for which they are sold, we would probably find that the total amount of money stolen in this way is larger than the amount stolen in a single year by all of the criminals who have been sent to the penitentiary during the year for petit or grand larceny.

Even in the fixing of rates (not to speak of discriminations and rebates) railroads and franchise-holding corporations may be guilty of an extortion bordering on theft. These quasi public corporations are under obligations to furnish an adequate service at a reasonable rate, and anything in excess of a reasonable rate is simply so much taken without right from those who are the victims of the extortion.

And now, at the risk of being accused of sacrilege, I venture to introduce to the stock exchange the commandment which we have been considering. I am aware that here in New York the stock exchange is regarded with a certain amount of veneration, and that many who vehemently denounce gambling in a back room, where winning and losses are small, remain strangely silent in the presence of the enormous games that are played upon the stock market, often with loaded dice. Gambling is one of the worst of vices, and gambling in stocks and in farm products is the most destructive form in which the vice appears. Measured by the number of suicides caused by the New York Stock Exchange, Monte Carlo is an innocent pleasure resort by comparison. Measured by the amount of money changing hands, the contrast is still greater in favor of Monte Carlo; and measured by the influence upon those who do not gamble, the evils of Monte Carlo are insignificant when compared with the evils of New York's commercial gambling houses. The New York Stock Exchange has graduated more embezzlers than Fagin's school did thieves. When a group of men gamble at a wheel of fortune or at a game of cards, the injury done is confined to them and to those immediately dependent upon them, but those who gamble in the grain pit or on the floor of the stock exchange deal in commodities or securities in which eighty millions of people are directly or indirectly interested. Farm products are juggled up or juggled down, stocks are boosted by the bulls or depressed by the bears, and the whole country feels the effect. The natural laws of supply and demand ought to regulate prices, but these laws are entirely suspended when a few men can by their bets add millions of dollars to the market value of one product or take millions of dollars from the value of another product. After a crusade which convulsed a State and at last impressed the thought of the nation, we got rid of the Louisiana lottery and then we congratulated ourselves upon our virtue. The men in charge of the lottery never did a tithe of the harm that the grain gamblers and the stock gamblers of New York do every day, nor did they ever exercise anything like the corrupting influences over politics. It has been asserted without denial that 99 per cent of the New York purchases and sales of stock and of produce are merely bets upon the market value, with no intention on the part of the vender to deliver, or on the part of the purchaser to receive. This is not business; it is not commerce; it is not speculation; it is common, vulgar gambling, and when to the ordinary chances that the gambler takes are added the extraordinary chances due to the secret manipulation of the market by those who are on the inside, the stock market becomes worse than an honestly conducted gambling resort. If a man takes a chance upon a wheel of fortune, he knows just what his chance is, and he knows that the owner of the wheel has a percentage of chances in his favor, but when a stranger gambles upon the stock or grain market he is at the mercy of those who, by obtaining control of the visible supply, can destroy every natural law or business rule which the outsider knows. While the laws of each State and the laws of the nation should prevent as far as laws can the use of these commercial activities for gambling purposes, there must be back of the law an educated public opinion, and I beg the spiritual advisers of our great cities to consider whether they can not advance religion as well as morality by pointing out that the commandment "Thou shalt not steal" is openly and notoriously violated in the stock market and in the grain pit by those who profess to believe in the Bible and to have respect for its teachings. If time permitted I would call attention to the adulteration of food which sometimes involves a violation of the commandment against killing as well as the commandment against theft.

But law finds its foundations in morals, and back of wrongdoing is a false conception of life. I have not exhausted the field of illustration; I have not applied my text in all the multitude of ways in which it can be applied, but I shall conclude the discussion for this time by calling attention to the fundamental conception of life that more than anything else is responsible for the various forms of larceny to which I have referred. In our haste to make money we have cultivated the impression that life is to be measured by its income and that men are worthy of respect in proportion as they have accumulated. If I were delivering a religious address, I would insist that life should be measured by its overflow rather than by its income. I would insist that it is what we put into the world and not what we take out of it that determines the success of a life. But for the present I shall content myself with presenting an economic standard rather than a religious one, and say that the only economic rule for accumulation is that one shall draw from society in proportion as he contributes to the welfare of society. Forms of government, methods of administration and legislation all should have for their object the securing to each citizen of the rightful and legitimate rewards for his toil. Society can not say to a man that he must as a matter of religious duty give more to society than he takes from society, nor can it without violation of individual rights say to a man that he must give to society more than he gets from society. The citizen owes a certain obligation to the Government and the Government owes a certain obligation to the citizen, and these obligations are equally binding. The Government can have no favorites; it can not put the burdens upon some and offer the rewards to others. The best government is that which furnishes to each citizen the most perfect security against every arm uplifted for his injury and which, in so far as it enters upon a cooperative work, distributes with equity both the burdens and the benefits of that cooperation. Perfection is not to be expected in government, but the desire for perfection ought to control the citizen in his civic work as it controls him in his own life. Jefferson taught this conception of government when he insisted upon the maxim, "Equal rights to all and special privileges to none." Lincoln had this purpose of government in mind when he said at Gettysburg that those who assembled there should resolve that "a government of the people, by the people, and for the people should not perish from the earth," and Jackson gave expression to the same thought when he said in one of his messages:

"Distinction in society will always exist under every just government. Equality of talents, of education, or of wealth can not be produced by human institutions. In the full enjoyment of the gifts of Heaven and the fruits of superior industry, economy, and virtue every man is equally entitled to protection by law."

"But when the laws undertake to add to those natural and just advantages artificial distinctions—to grant titles, gratuities, and exclusive privileges—to make the rich richer and the potent more powerful—the humble members of society—the farmers, mechanics, and the laborers—who have neither the time nor the means of securing like favors for themselves, have a right to complain of the injustice of their government."

The "swollen fortunes" against which the President justly inveighs almost without exception find their source in special privileges and in governmental favortism which legalize injustice. It is not strange that the "humble members of society" complain, but it is strange that conscience does not more often restrain the "rich" and the "potent" from asking for such unfair advantages.

The nearer we can make government conform to the Divine plan, the nearer we shall approach justice, and according to the Divine plan the reward should be proportioned to the industry and the intelligence with which one labors. With the great mass of mankind this must remain the only basis of rewards, and those who in the pulpit, on the platform, through the press, and in legislative halls assist in the creation of public opinion should labor in season and out of season to present an ideal of life that will make each individual as anxious to render faithful service to society as he is to draw an adequate compensation from society.

The commandment "Thou shalt not steal" will not have the weight that it ought to have among men until it is so construed as to bring the feeling of guilt and shame to those who draw from the common store more than they add in service. If we can but create a sentiment which will make men ashamed, not only of wrongdoing, but of idleness as well, and fill them with an earnest desire to make generous return to society for all the blessings that society confers, it will be easier to prevent those varieties of larceny which are so difficult to define and which the officers of the law find it hard to detect and punish.

Mr. CLAYTON. The time is ripe for a consideration of ethical questions. There is a moral awakening throughout the land, and people are learning that there is something more important than the making of money. Business men, instead of chasing the almighty dollar until they fall exhausted into the grave, are going to set a limit to their accumulations, and, having secured enough to supply their needs, give to society the benefit of their business ability and experience. This moral wave will not expend itself until dishonesty has been driven from business, corruption from politics, and injustice from government.

At the close of Mr. Bryan's speech questions were allowed, and these, with the answers, will be found below:

Q. Is it wise for a public man like President Roosevelt or yourself to use such a term as "predatory wealth," thereby stigmatizing a class?—A. I answer in the affirmative. When you say that predatory wealth is bad, you mean "predatory" wealth, and I have no objection whatever to the President or any other man stigmatizing wealth that is predatory. [Applause.]

Q. Is it right to tax the people and lend the money thus obtained to individuals or to private corporations in any form of subsidy?—A. This asks a question that can not be answered in a word. What we call "subsidy" I believe wrong; and yet I would not say that under no circumstances should a government lend money raised by taxation. I believe it all depends upon whether the money is lent for a public purpose and for the public interest or for a private purpose and for individual profit. [Applause.]

Q. If the tariff should be revised and the United States should allow free trade, would not the country be flooded with foreign goods, and our country's industries suffer?—A. No one is advocating free trade and no revision that is advocated could by any possibility flood this country with foreign goods to the detriment of this country; and the people who are now selling abroad in competition with the world could put a restraint upon the flood by selling at home as cheaply as they sell abroad. [Laughter and applause.]

Q. Secretary Taft, when asked at Cooper Union about the problem of the unemployed men in relation to the Government, replied, "God knows, I don't." Mr. Bryan, do you know?—A. I approach this question with some hesitation, for I do not want to say anything that would put me in the class to which it has been committed by the Secretary of War. [Laughter.] But my answer is this: All questions of this kind must be considered from two standpoints: First, the temporary remedy; and, second, the permanent remedy. If a child falls and breaks its arm, as the result of carelessness, it is not sufficient to tell the child how to keep from falling again. It is necessary that the arm shall be set and the child cared for, even though its sufferings are the result of its own carelessness. And so, temporarily, we must provide for every human being in need. I will not admit that any man in this country should be allowed to starve to death, no matter how careless he may have been in not providing for the future. But while we must make temporary provision for the necessities of those who actually suffer, we must make permanent provision against the recurrence of such conditions, and the best way to prevent a recurrence of these conditions is to change the laws by which a few men have been able to secure an unfair proportion of the results of the toil of all the people. [Great and prolonged applause.] There is no difficulty in this country about production. We produce and consume something like three times the amount per capita produced or consumed by any other people. The trouble is with the distribution, and I believe that the way to reach the difficulty is to withdraw privileges and favoritism, and to enact laws that will secure an open door to every man's labor and a reward for his toil.

Q. Mr. Bryan, do you stand for immediate and radical tariff revision, and do you represent the Democratic party in so standing?—A. I will answer the last part first. I am not prepared to say for a few months yet whether I stand for the Democratic party or not. [Laughter and applause.] I am proud to say that I do not stand for some people who call themselves Democrats. [Applause.] Whether the revision that I stand for is considered radical or not is a question of opinion. I stand for immediate revision. I will have it to-morrow if I can't get it to-day. [Laughter.] I would rather have had it yesterday than to-day. [Great laughter.] Now as to that word "radical," it is a matter of opinion. I used to be radical. Now I am very conservative. [Laughter.] What people thought was radical a few years ago is now regarded as not only conservative but necessary. [Applause.] And many who thought that I was dangerously rapid a few years ago now think that I am inexcusably slow. [Laughter.] I believe in the immediate revision of the tariff—downward, not upward—and I would commence by putting upon the free list the articles that come into direct competition with the articles controlled by the trusts. [Great applause.] I would give these men a certain length of time—not too long [laughter], say a few months—and I would say to them "If you don't stop conspiring behind this tariff wall we will take the wall away and make you compete with the world." [Great applause.] I would then proceed to make material reductions in the necessaries of life, and I would go through the tariff and I would pick out the fraudulent paragraphs that were put in by stealth for the purpose of securing advantages that even the framers of the law did not understand, and one of them would be the duty of about 150 per cent that was put in for the protection of oil after it had been put upon the free list. If you read the statute you will find it says that if oil comes from a country that puts a tariff on oil, then we shall put a similar tariff on oil from that country; and it happens that our only competitor in oil is Russia. She puts a tariff on oil, and, therefore, while on its face we have a free trade in oil, yet really we have not got it at all. [Applause.] I would then proceed to make such other reductions as were possible—and when I say possible I mean that the laws are made by the representatives of the entire country, and in the making of the law you have to consult the opinions of these people who represent all sections of the country—and I would proceed as rapidly as possible to make such reductions as would be necessary to put our tariff upon a revenue basis, so that our tax laws would be made for the purpose of securing revenue for the Government and not for the purpose of enabling a few people to get rich at the expense of the rest of the people. [Applause.]

Q. You said that the proposed asset currency would give us a no-cent dollar. Is this a fair statement in view of the facts that assets worth dollar for dollar and guaranteed by national banks will be held as security for it?—A. I am permitted to use the language of my opponents, and they talked about the silver dollar as a 50-cent dollar. They said that if you melted it it was worth only 50 cents. Let them apply the melting test to their dollar and find out how much it is worth. [Applause.] The silver dollar was never a 50-cent dollar. It was a 100-cent dollar, because the law declared that you could use it to discharge your debts at 100 cents on the dollar. These people who are so careful about the use of language were quite indiscriminate a few years ago. [Applause.]

Q. Has not President Roosevelt taken the wind out of the sails of everybody except Socialists? Then, where is the room for Bryanism-Democracy?—A. I am not sure that I can answer this question to the satisfaction of the man who asked the question, for he evidently believes that the President has done everything that can be done by anybody or by any party except the Socialist party. I do not agree with him at all. The President has tried to do some things. He has not tried to do everything that is necessary. For instance, he has not tried to secure the election of Senators by direct vote of the people, and that is a very important reform, and he has done some things that I do not think he ought to have done. But, my friends, the leaders of his party have not assisted him to do even what he tried to do. [Applause.] And, so far, most of his recommendations have not been acted upon. If this were a political meeting I would tell a story that illustrates this point. [Cries of "Tell it; let us have it."] Well, we will just overlook the fact that this is not a political meeting, and I will tell the story. [Laughter.] An old colored man married a wife who was, as he thought, extravagant, and he complained that she wanted money all the time. He said: "She wants a dollar to-day and 50 cents to-morrow and a quarter the next day, and then she wants another dollar and another 50 cents and then another quarter, and it is just a dollar, a half dollar, a quarter all the time." One of his friends said to him: "But what can she do with so much money?" He replied: "I don't know. I hain't gin her none yet." [Great laughter.]

Q. When you speak of "watered stock" as not representing property, do you or do you not recognize good will as being as valuable a property as is mere tangible property? Would you confine stock issues to actual tangible property?—A. I think the question a fair one. There is such a thing as good will. If a man has built up a business and established a trade and won the confidence of people, his business has a value larger than the mere tangible property would indicate. But you will find that good will is not a large factor in the monopolies that have been established. That good will is preserved under competition. What we complain of is not the capitalizing of a little good will, but it is the capitalizing of the power to rob the public. The good will of the public is a thing that trusts have not yet capitalized.

Q. You have condemned the stock exchange in toto. Don't you recognize the fact that millions of securities that are gilt edged and solid are bought and sold there every week on a high basis of honor?—A. I have already answered this. I stated that there is a legitimate function for the board of trade, the chamber of commerce, and the stock exchange. We need institutions of this kind, but it is not necessary to have a large part of the transaction gambling in order to retain the benefits of the stock exchange, and what we ask for is legislation which will make gambling impossible, and such legislation is not popular on the stock exchange. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. FORDNEY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 485) to create a new division of the northern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Amarillo, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, while the eyes of the country are centered upon the President's message with both hope and misgiving, there are two parts of that message to which I wish to invite attention. The first is that part where the President says he is in favor of giving to the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to place a physical valuation upon the railroads of this country. After saying that he says:

When once an inflated capitalization has gone upon the market and has become fixed in value, its existence must be recognized.

By that he means to say, and does say, that when the unscrupulous have caught the unwary investor by selling him stock in an "overcapitalized" corporation a physical valuation—that is, a real valuation—should not be made for fear that the investor may have the size of his dividend reduced.

In other words, the President prefers that the thousands and thousands of people who use the railroads should suffer extortion rather than that the investor in these railroad securities should have his dividends reduced, to this extent becoming the guarantor of those who invest their money unwisely.

That doctrine is but a continuation of Republican doctrine, which is always in the interest of the moneyed classes; and this declaration upon the part of our Chief Executive is, in my humble opinion, but a pretext for declining to recommend a physical valuation to be made of our railroads. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

His recommendation when carried to a logical sequence means that corporations which are "overcapitalized" should not be physically valued; while those not "overcapitalized," and consequently not needing it, should have the physical valuation.

The American public is clamoring that the utilities corporations shall be valued at their actual worth and rates made which will earn a fair and reasonable interest upon their bonds, and a like dividend upon the capital stock thus fixed.

Instead they are now paying extortionate rates upon a capitalization which usually is 25 per cent cash and 75 per cent water.

Now comes the President and says that he does not want the water taken out of capital stocks which contain it, but that he does want the water taken out of those which contain none.

I am impressed with the firm conviction that the message was not inspired by a desire to have a single abuse corrected, but was a pretext, pure and simple, to anticipate a heralded deliverance from another—yes, another—candidate for the Republican nomination for the Presidency. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The time selected for its transmission to Congress was determined by political exigencies, and was nothing more nor less than the exercise of official privilege to defend his alleged financial panic and become official apologist for the wrongdoings of his party about to be criticised by another prominent member of his party.

When his party, to a man, but a few days before upon the floor of this House had voted to defeat an amendment to the bill codifying the penal laws of the United States, by which amendment the Democrats sought, in the interest of the laboring masses, to put back upon our statute books a provision requiring that an injunction should not issue until the party against whom it was directed had been served with notice, he remained silent; no message came.

And when his party, upon the same occasion, refused to put upon the statute books a law to punish the life insurance companies for contributing "anything of value" to the campaign fund of a candidate for office, again his solemn silence stood out in prominence like Pikes Peak against the western horizon, he bearing in mind, perhaps, that such contribution might be necessary to make another Republican President.

Mr. Chairman, I am compelled to believe that that hurrying, flying courier brought not a message to the Congress sincerely urging needed legislation; but, instead, an insincere political speech to the galleries, to avert a stampede by a long-suffering people away from ambition's un-American intent. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

As another proof of insincerity I find further along in the message these words:

We attack only the corrupt men of wealth, who find in the purchased politicians the most efficient corruption * * *.

If dishonest politicians—politicians purchased by the protective tariff created trusts—are the instruments through whom "successful dishonesty" feeds, prospers, thrives, and grows fat I ask him to tell the people to which side of this Chamber—Democratic or Republican—will he point and say: "You are the guilty ones." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

He has said that he turned on the light. I implore him, if he is sincere, to send another message, intended either for Congress or the people, and say which party it was—Democratic or Republican—that turned off the light. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I ask him to go still further and tell the hungry thousands of our people which party it is that has so artfully managed the seemingly inexhaustable fountains of polluting darkness.

Let him tell the American people which party it is that stands below in the almost impenetrable darkness and holds steady the ladder while the porch climber rises, rung by rung, to "successful dishonesty." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Will he, as a God-fearing Chief Executive of the greatest and grandest nation of all the earth, say that the "ladder holders" are upon this side or that. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I conjure him to say whether or not, in the approaching election, he will use the influences of his great office to reelect the men who, in this Hall, stand between the people and their needs, as set out in his belated message?

I further ask if, at this good hour, he is not offering powerful and valuable patronage to the Republican Congressmen from my own fair State that they may use it to be returned to these Halls, to again vote against a restoration to the people of those rights which the "successfully dishonest" have, under Republican-made laws, deprived them? [Prolonged applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate having expired, the Clerk will now read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

PRESIDENT.

To enable the President to cause, under the provisions of the act of February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians," such Indian reservations as in his judgment are advantageous for agricultural and grazing purposes to be surveyed or resurveyed, for the purposes of said act, and to complete the allotment of the same, including the necessary clerical work incident thereto in the field and in the Office of Indian Affairs, and delivery of trust patents, so far as allotments shall have been selected under said act, $75,000, of which $15,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon this paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill in reference to that portion of the paragraph which provides for clerical force in the office of Indian Affairs, and also that portion which provides for a deficiency appropriation, which I think this committee had no jurisdiction over.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman is correct in saying we have no jurisdiction over deficiencies, and I shall not contend that the point of order is not well taken; but I understand perfectly well the gentleman reserved the point of order for the purpose of getting information—and he is always fair and reasonable and ready to withdraw such a point on a presentation of facts which convince him of the merit of the proposition. The facts are that this work of allotting has progressed very satisfactorily. We have already allotted to 72,000 Indians in the United States, or over one-fourth of all the Indians in the country, and we have made allotments during the last fiscal year ending July 1 last to 4,312 individual Indians. These allotments, the gentleman understands, are made to them on Indian reservations and on the public domain, and the theory of ultimately ridding ourselves of the care and charge of the Indians is to give them allotments, put them in condition upon the allotments so they can be self-sustaining, thereby relieving ourselves of the burden and relieving them also of the handicap of any direct aid, and also relieving ourselves to a certain extent of the burden of caring for them. The work has progressed more rapidly this past year to the present than heretofore, and it was found that more could be done. More has been done so far during the fiscal year than the appropriations for this year will pay for if continued, so this request was made—that a portion of this fund be made immediately available. Besides that, the Indian Office has asked the Appropriations Committee to provide an item in the deficiency bill to carry on the work, and if both items are not provided for it simply means that the work which is now progressing so satisfactorily must of a necessity for the time cease or be curtailed.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it is a good practice in the House for the same Department to come before one committee asking for a deficiency appropriation and then go to the Appropriations Committee and also ask for a deficiency appropriation, the two committees——

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not.

Mr. MANN. The two committees not finding it possible to keep track of each other all the time?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is a good practice, and I have made it my practice, I will say to the gentleman, always to go to the Appropriations Committee having charge of the deficiency bill, and they have always been good enough to show me the items it is proposed to insert in the bill relating to Indian affairs, and I have gone over them, and after this estimate was in and I discovered the request was made of the Appropriations Committee for a deficiency, I asked the Commissioner why that was, and he said originally the thought was to obtain a sum sufficient from the Appropriations Committee, but as time passed and on further investigation he found that he would need during this fiscal year more than $15,000, and so he wanted both items.

Mr. MANN. He could have asked both from the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, he could have done so.

Mr. MANN. The deficiency bill has not been passed yet or even reported here; only the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am speaking about the urgent deficiency bill.

Mr. MANN. How much money now remains on hand for the present fiscal year? I know the appropriation last year was $40,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Five thousand two hundred and sixty-six dollars was left on the 1st of January.

Mr. MANN. No allotments are made during the winter, I take it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; allotments are made all the year. Down in the Southwest now the work progresses just as rapidly in the winter as in the summer. In fact, I happen to know, as I have a constituent who was allotting agent in Arizona, and he is working there now.

Mr. MANN. Of course they are permanently employed; they are employed by the year.

Mr. SHERMAN. But he is actually working. His force is working there at surveying work and actually allotting the lands.

Mr. MANN. We have this condition: On the urgent deficiency bill, which passed the House the other day, and which this morning was sent to conference, is an item that belongs to the gentleman's committee, and with which the Appropriation Committee ought to have nothing to do. They propose to put it through the House. I suppose it is probably a proper item in itself, but anybody knows that the opinion of the Appropriation Committee on the subject is not worth as much as the opinion of the Indian Committee on the subject, and it seems a queer proceeding for the Department to go to a committee that has not jurisdiction and get an item in that bill and not go to another committee that has jurisdiction of the subject and get an appropriation in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course, it is not at all unusual. All Departments appear before committees and constantly are asking for this procedure—that a portion of the appropriation be made immediately available. You do not find an appropriation bill coming from any committee into this House at any session of Congress that does not contain some items of that character.

Mr. MANN. Well, I understand. I follow those bills as well as I can.

Mr. SHERMAN. Better than anybody else, I realize, and more effectively, too.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me the proper method for the Department to pursue is the method provided under which the House can act according to its rules, and have a deficiency appropriation go to the committee that has jurisdiction of deficiency appropriations and not do as is done in this case, come to your committee for something over which you have not jurisdiction, and go to the Committee on Appropriations for something that it has no jurisdiction over, and leave out matters which it has jurisdiction over. The Department ought to learn, and I am willing to help educate it, if necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman insists upon his point of order——

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on lines 13 and 14. on the words "of which $15,000 shall be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I concede that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SECRETARY.

That no purchase of supplies for which appropriations are herein or hereinafter made for the Indian service, exceeding in the aggregate $500 in value at any one time, shall be made without first giving at least three weeks' public notice by advertisement, except in case of exigency, when, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, who shall make official record of the facts constituting the exigency, and shall report the same to Congress at its next session, he may direct that purchases may be made in open market in amount not exceeding $3,000 at any one purchase: Provided, That supplies may be purchased, contracts let, and labor employed for the construction of artesian wells, ditches, and other works for irrigation, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, without advertising as hereinbefore provided: Provided further, That as far as practicable Indian labor shall be employed and purchase in the open market made from Indians, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. I would like to inquire from the gentleman in charge of the bill concerning the report that has been made during the past year and how many cases there have been where purchases have been made in the open market under this provision?

Mr. SHERMAN. The report has not been made to this session. The report made in the last Congress is found in House Document 242, and I should say that there were possibly 100 cases where it was found necessary to go into the open market, and the reasons assigned were, "cheaper than contract," "want to use pupil labor," "shed needed at once to house new machinery recently purchased," "supply exhausted," "long and cold winter," "made use of in repairing heating plant and ice machines." The reason is given in each case why it was necessary to go into the open market rather than wait for advertising.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that those cases are different from the ordinary character of cases that come under any Department? The law now provides for advertising for bids. Here is a proposition to exempt everything up to $3,000, and so far as the seven hundred and odd thousand dollars appropriated in this bill is concerned for irrigation purposes, exempt that from advertising as to anything that is purchased to any amount. Does the gentleman consider that it is good policy on the part of the Government to give to any Department the right to purchase goods as it pleases without advertising at all?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been found advantageous to apply that rule in the administration of the Indian Bureau. So far as it relates to irrigation work this provision was asked so as to make it possible to use Indian labor and Indian supplies as much as possible, so that an Indian who had a team could have his team employed, and an Indian who could not perhaps make a bid for the whole contract, could not furnish a bond, did not have the ability to undertake a work even of moderate size, might be employed, and help sustain himself by furnishing his own service, furnishing what supplies he had himself on his own allotment, and also furnish occupation for his team, farm implements, and so forth.

Mr. MANN. As I remember the report of the Commissioner, he reports in every case a contract was let on these irrigation projects, and while in some cases the contracts were not carried out the Department carried them out. Still a contract was let in each case.

Under the provision the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, if he chooses, can let a contract to any friend that he may have, at any price he pleases. Now, while I do not think the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs would do that, is that a proper policy to pursue by the Government in making contracts, probably for several hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. SHERMAN. A contract for several hundred thousand dollars? This can only be done to the amount of $3,000. So far as irrigation is concerned, that is without limit in the amount of the contract, and it has been found to work advantageously.

Mr. MANN. Well, we are only entering upon the practice of irrigation for Indians at the public expense.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman tell us how much is carried in this bill for irrigation purposes?

Mr. SHERMAN. May I say here, I think the gentleman from Illinois made that inquiry of me the other day, and having in mind then the single general item, I stated $155,000, which was the amount appropriated last year, and it is $200,000 for this year. The total of all the items carried in this bill is $740,000 for irrigation, of which amount $365,000 is reimbursable, and provides for the work to be done out of the Indian fund or from the proceeds of land to be sold. While I am on that subject, I will say to the gentleman that the total amount expended by the Indian Service for irrigation, from 1883 down to the present time, is three millions and fifty-six thousand and some odd dollars, of which $1,380,000 is reimbursable partly out of the funds of the Indians and the balance of the $1,380,000 to be reimbursed when certain lands have been disposed of and the money received therefrom.

Mr. MANN. As I understand, and of course the gentleman is informed far better than I am, the amount appropriated is not the largest carried in any year.

Mr. SHERMAN. In any one year? I think not, because in one year we made very large appropriation for certain work in Arizona, larger than any carried in this bill.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think it a proper policy to say that any one man should be able to let out contracts to whom he pleases, absolutely in his discretion, without any control on the part of anybody else?

Mr. SHERMAN. As a general proposition, probably not; but under all the experience I have had, having had very long acquaintance with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and from a close observation of his methods and purposes, with the highest regard for his integrity and his ability and desire to do that only which is for the best interests of the Government and the Indians, I will say I think it is better that this authority be granted to the Indian Bureau.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows, I suppose, there are several propositions from several Departments of the Government to permit them to purchase supplies without advertisement?

Mr. SHERMAN. And recent developments have indicated that it has not always been wise to grant that authority. I understand that.

Mr. MANN. And recent developments cover the service of a gentleman who was supposed to be absolutely beyond reproach and of very great capacity. Now, it may be true——

Mr. SHERMAN. There are a lot of people who never thought it was true.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me altogether unwise to grant any such authority to anyone. I hope the gentleman will not take any exception if I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. The whole paragraph is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. What does the gentleman insist on?

Mr. MANN. Upon the two provisos.

Mr. SHERMAN. Beginning in line 1 of page 3?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Down to and including line 9?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The proviso contained from lines 6 to 9 should remain in.

I do not think the gentleman means to strike out these lines: "as far as practicable Indian labor shall be employed and purchase in the open market made from Indians."

Mr. MANN. I can not tell what it means. Some gentlemen can tell what that paragraph means; I can not.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Some of these Indians produce a great deal of hay and some of the Indians produce corn and other grain, and if the Government can purchase from them the things which are produced on the reservation, it would be an inducement to them to continue to raise those things.

Mr. MANN. Is that to permit the Government to purchase hay and other farm products from the Indians?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And to employ Indian labor, and Indian teams, and all that sort of thing.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been ascertained, I will state, that Indians make excellent laborers in building irrigation ditches and in performing various kinds of work.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the provision of the bill against which I made no point of order permits the Secretary to purchase supplies in open market without advertising, in amounts less than $3,000. Now, is it intended to let him make purchases from the Indians in greater amounts than that?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; I think not.

Mr. MANN. Then I do not see any object in this.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. At present I do not think he would be permitted to purchase from the Indians, because they are wards of the Government. The purchases would be turned right over to them again. He would purchase from them and turn it over to them. These are individual Indians, that have these little farms, and are cultivating their little land; and if the agent could purchase hay and grain from them and turn it into the general fund, it would be very advantageous to them and induce them to become laborers.

Mr. MANN. I do not see why he does not have that authority, when he has authority to purchase from whom he pleases, to the amount of $3,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. He does not consider that he has, and that is the reason it is drafted in this way.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Leaving it in there will do no harm anyway.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will withdraw it as to the second, I will not contest it as to the first proviso.

Mr. MANN. I will make the point of order on the first proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state what the point of order is that he makes?

Mr. MANN. The point of order is on the first proviso on page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. Beginning with the word "provided" in line 1?

Mr. MANN. Lines 2 to 5, inclusive; and, of course, strike out the word "provided."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order will be sustained.

Mr. MANN. I suppose it will be arranged so that the first "provided" will be stricken out and the word "further," after the second "provided," will be stricken out?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the Clerk will attend to that.

The Clerk read as follows:

That section 6 of an act approved February 8, 1887, entitled "An act to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to Indians on the various reservations, etc.," amended by the act of May 8, 1906 (34 Stats., p. 182), be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows: Strike out at the end of section 6 the words "And provided further, That the provisions of this act shall not be extended to any Indians in the Indian Territory."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order, or make it, upon that paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should prefer that the gentleman reserve it.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. At present the law provides that the Secretary of the Interior, in the case of any individual Indian, may release the restrictions upon alienation where proof satisfactory to him is presented that the individual Indian is competent to care for his own affairs. That provision does not extend to the Indian Territory, and I will say to the gentleman that it seemed to me, at the time the act was originally passed, that perhaps it would have been better to have it extended to the Indian Territory, but at that time the ending of tribal governments had not been provided for and it was thought best not to extend it to the Five Civilized Tribes, or to what was then the Indian Territory and what is now Oklahoma. This is simply extending to the Indians within the limits of the present State of Oklahoma the right to alienate under conditions that are now given to all other Indians in the United States. I really think that this provision ought to be in. I really think it is of value, and while I concede that the point of order lies against it, I hope the gentleman will not insist upon the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman claim that this provision is indorsed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, certainly. The Department, the Secretary, has sent up a bill which has already been introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCGUIRE], as a separate proposition, which covers this whole question.

Mr. MANN. As I understand it, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs does not indorse the proposition, and so far as he wants legislation at all, wants it with certain limitations not in this provision at all. That is certainly the case, unless he has changed his mind within the last few days.

Mr. SHERMAN. The bill which the Department has prepared, and which is sent to the committee with the indorsement of the Commissioner and the Secretary both, is broader than this provision, because it does leave it discretionary with the Secretary or the Commissioner. It provides that, as to all intermarried whites and all persons having less than one-half Indian blood, the restrictions shall be removed.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman permit me to read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, which is just issued within a week, I think, referring to this matter?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, certainly; I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. MANN. In which the Secretary of the Interior says:

If Congress acts favorably on the recommendations regarding the removal of restrictions, this kind of difficulty will cease; but the law providing for the removal of restrictions should specifically provide against the validating of any of the powers of attorney, deeds, or other forms of attempted transfer heretofore obtained from the Indians, and should furthermore provide for the cancellation of record of any such instructions—

"Instruments," I suppose it means—to the end that the titles may be clear.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. MANN. There is no such provision in here.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a provision here that the right to alienate is subject to the approval of the Secretary. You can not have anything broader than that. It gives each individual Indian the right to come to the Secretary and produce to him such proof as he can of the situation and of the condition, and then the Secretary may say he may alienate or he may not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman does not apprehend that the Secretary himself is going to examine all of these cases?

Mr. SHERMAN. No, but somebody will in whom he has confidence.

Mr. MANN. What is the objection to putting in the law a provision which guards the people instead of leaving it to the discretion of some man down there who may be influenced, honestly or dishonestly?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will say frankly that it is of less consequence whether it goes in this bill or not because a bill which has been prepared by the Department, and which specifically cares for all situations about which the gentleman has read in the Commissioner's report, will become a law, I think, prior to the time this appropriation bill becomes a law.

Mr. MANN. I do not think there is any trouble in getting it before the House on a proper bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Neither do I; but this provision was agreed upon by the committee before the civilized tribe bill was sent to the Department. We had agreed on this in committee, and this other bill was prepared only three or four days ago.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be just as well that the committee should examine this bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Better; but we have considered the whole subject which is covered by the separate bill, and I do not think it is a matter of much consequence. If the gentleman prefers to have it go out of the bill I will assent, because the separate bill will take care of the matter.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman from New York desires, as I do, to safeguard the rights of the Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; and it is the desire of the Commissioner and the Secretary to meet the very conditions which the Commissioner states in his report. The gentleman read from the Commissioner's report?

Mr. MANN. I read from the report of the Secretary of the Interior, who uses much stronger language.

Mr. SHERMAN. These conditions are all safeguarded in the bill which the Department has drawn, and which my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE] has introduced.

Mr. MANN. I will insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, from line 10 to line 19 on page 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

COMMISSIONER.

For construction of ditches and reservoirs, purchase and use of water rights, including lands necessary for canals, pipe lines, reservoirs, and so forth, for Indian reservations, in the discretion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and subject to his control, $200,000, of which $25,000 shall be immediately available: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, may employ superintendents of irrigation, who shall be skilled irrigation engineers, not to exceed five, as in his judgment may be necessary to secure the construction of ditches and other irrigation works in a substantial and workmanlike manner.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order for the present. May I ask what is the necessity of putting into the bill for the first time the right to purchase land necessary for canals, pipe lines, reservoirs, "and so forth?"

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know that a condition is presented now that requires that exact wording. The wording is distinct from what it was last year. The Bureau felt that they frequently needed the right to purchase in order to use the most feasible and the best route in acquiring their irrigation ditches and canals, and that it is sometimes necessary to purchase additional land in constructing their reservoirs. I think the words "and so forth" are too broad. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois that those ought to go out.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to inform us whether, under the reclamation act, the Department has the power to purchase what it pleases in the way of lands, and so forth?

Mr. SHERMAN. The reclamation act has nothing to do with the Indians and the Indians have nothing to do with the reclamation act.

Mr. MANN. But it might have a great deal to do with the attitude of the minds of Members of the House as to whether you are following the Reclamation Service in this matter or whether we are stepping outside of the beaten track and have to do the same thing for them. The gentleman understands that here is a proposition involving large sums of money, giving absolute discretion to certain officers to do as they please, without any safeguard, and if it is done for the Indian Service it will be done for like service elsewhere. We are building up two great irrigation services. I am not familiar with it enough to know whether the head director of the Reclamation Service can do as he pleases with the money that is to be appropriated, but I should think there ought to be some safeguard somewhere.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the reclamation act, that is under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, as to the disposal of the funds which are added to the reclamation fund.

Mr. MANN. I mean how far does the Secretary of the Interior, under this service, have the right to buy what he pleases with the money—about purchasing lands?

Mr. SHERMAN. I could not say about that; I do not know.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that it might be very necessary at times to purchase lands, but it is a pretty broad power to say that anyone can use money appropriated to buy lands without limitation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Those in charge of the Reclamation Service, I think, have not been very well disposed toward using any of that fund toward the benefit of the Indians. Of course the Reclamation Service was not intended for that, anyway.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman able to tell us how the superintendents of irrigation are now employed? This provides for, I suppose, taking them out from under the classified service.

Mr. SHERMAN. The appointments are not controlled by the classified service.

Mr. MANN. Can it be possible that a branch of the Administration will favor the appointment of anybody outside of the classified service?

Mr. SHERMAN. Astonishing as it may seem, I think that is so.

Mr. MANN. We were informed a few days ago in a very logical and brilliant message that there ought to be no appointments in the future census outside of the classified service, and here we receive recommendation from one Department closely connected with the same service exempting from the classified service and from civil-service examinations a whole lot of employees. It has always seemed to me that what was sauce for the goose was sauce for the gander.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In line 5 and 6 it says "who shall be skilled engineers."

Mr. SHERMAN. But that it not what the gentleman is getting at.

Mr. MANN. That means nothing, because that leaves the matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, whereas if you put that provision in and leave it to the Civil Service Commission they would in fact have to be skilled engineers. Anybody can be a skilled engineer, as we found when the Isthmian Canal Commission was appointed at one time, when you wanted to call him an engineer.

Mr. SHERMAN. Has not the gentleman discovered before now that consistency is a jewel which does not ornament the person of everyone connected with the present ideal Administration? [Laughter.] I, of course, do not refer to the President.

Mr. MANN. Oh, I think the President is consistent. I do not think that the President will stand——

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, I certainly agree with the gentleman. I say the President is consistent.

Mr. MANN. My proposition is this, that the President is a consistent civil-service reformer.

Mr. SHERMAN. He certainly is. We do not disagree about that at all.

Mr. MANN. In that respect I am with him. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. That is where the gentleman from Illinois and I part. I am not in touch with all of the President's ideas about civil service, especially that relating to the Census Bureau, but I do believe in his sincerity.

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not say that I agree with the President about the civil service. On the Census Bureau I think I may say that in so far as I am advised at present I entirely disagree with him, and yet I do not want to express any opinion on that subject, because the President's message on that subject was referred to one of the committees of which I have the honor of being a member. I believe I am one of the strongest and most radical civil-service reformers on that committee.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, in line 23 of page 3, the words "and so forth."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order——

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, I assumed that the gentleman had withdrawn his point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to so much of the paragraph, line 23, page 3, the words "and so forth," and on page 4, after the word "dollars," in line 2, to the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The word "dollars" occurs twice in line 2.

Mr. MANN. After the word "dollars" in the first instance, until the close of the paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. Excuse me, but do you mean to prevent the Commissioner from employing these superintendents of irrigation?

Mr. MANN. Oh, he will have the power to employ them under the appropriation. I mean to prevent the requirement that he shall select them without regard to the law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, as I understand your point of order, it takes it in clear down to line 9, which strikes out that provision.

Mr. MANN. Without that provision the Secretary of the Interior has power to employ such aid as may be necessary, I take it. I do not desire to keep them from employing such aid.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact there are two classes——

Mr. MANN. If you appropriate so much money for such a purpose it requires aid to do the work. Does the gentleman mean to say there is nobody employed on this irrigation work except the people who are named here—five engineers?

Mr. SHERMAN. I mean to say that the reason for this provision, I assume, is that the Auditor of the Treasury has said that employment of this character could not be paid for under a provision of this kind.

Mr. MANN. That is possible, although I think the reason the provision is in here is because the Commissioner of Indian Affairs wants to name these himself.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior; they are practically to be named by the Secretary of the Interior. That is practically what it means.

Mr. MANN. Without taking an examination?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly. Without a civil-service examination.

Mr. MANN. Without a competitive examination?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the intent.

Mr. MANN. I am opposed to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me suggest to the gentleman, in regard to these five superintendents of irrigation, that it is not intended that they are the engineers who lay out the work originally, but there may be lateral ditches laid out to carry out the object and purposes of the law and the superintendents of irrigation should be engineers, so that they would not have to send off to some distant point to secure such aid.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the point of order lies against it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. OLMSTED. Will the gentleman from New York permit me? It seems to me the gentleman from Illinois is mistaken in supposing the lump-sum appropriation would authorize these superintendents at all. The lump-sum appropriation is for construction, whereas the five superintendents are to look after the construction after it is completed.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Auditor would not pass it without this provision, and on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, this is simply a limitation upon an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. To what portion of the paragraph does the gentleman from New York call the Chair's attention?

Mr. SHERMAN. I call the Chair's attention to the provision beginning in line 3, page 4, "That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, may employ superintendents of irrigation, etc.," to be paid for out of this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, my distinguished friend from New York in one moment insists without this provision the Secretary of the Interior can not employ the people under the law and in the next instant insists that it is simply a limitation and that he has that power.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; the gentleman misunderstood me. I did not say he now had the power.

Mr. MANN. If he could not employ them without this provision, then this is a change of existing law.

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all; it is a limitation upon this provision that this money herein appropriated shall be expended in part so and so.

Mr. MANN. Well, it is not a limitation; it is a specific conferring of authority.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I can change the wording if the gentleman desires, that the Commissioner shall not use this or so much of this except in such and such a way, or unless he provides so and so. It is very easy to change the wording so there can be no possible question about its being a limitation.

Mr. MANN. Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania suggested because this was for construction he could not employ this amount for this purpose. According to the gentleman, if we authorized the President to construct an isthmian canal, he would assume that the President had no power to appoint an engineer over it and appoint superintendents or foremen there. When you give to a Department the power to construct you give to them the power to appoint such necessary officers as go with the construction, but they are to be appointed in conformity with the provisions of law, and the only purpose of this is to take the appointment out of the provisions of existing law.

These superintendents will not be the only men who will be appointed. They will not spend this $200,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no. There are engineers that are provided for, most certainly. These are assistants and superintendents, just exactly as the section states.

Mr. OLMSTED. The section states "superintendents of irrigation."

Mr. SHERMAN. Superintendents of irrigation. They are not the engineers who plan for the construction of the work.

Mr. MANN. What do they do? They are connected with the construction of irrigation?

Mr. SHERMAN. And the maintenance of irrigation after construction. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is not well taken anyway, but I wish the gentleman to withdraw the point of order. I think it is a reasonable provision. Superintendents of irrigation we need in the various parts of the country, and we will get quite as competent and efficient officers by leaving the choice of them to the Secretary and the Commissioner as we would by turning the whole business over to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman, is this provision in the paragraph 1 that came to the committee in regular order from the Department?

Mr. SHERMAN. It did. It came through the regular estimates, not supplemental estimates. It came with the estimates through the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. I have more confidence in the opinion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] on practical Indian questions than anyone else, and because of his request I shall withdraw the point of order on that, although I want to say to him and to the House that I am tired of having messages from the Chief Magistrate insisting upon the application of the civil-service law and the merit system, and, at the same time, communications from his appointees asking us to waive the provisions of the civil-service law. I believe in enforcing it myself. There is no earthly excuse in this case, in my judgment. The Department asks that they have the power to waive it, and I do not believe that meets with the approval of the President at all.

Mr. SHERMAN. I want to differentiate a little bit. It is not expected under this provision to have no examination at all to demonstrate the individual's fitness for the position, but it is expected that there shall be no civil-service competitive examination. There will be some sort of an examination to determine the fitness, both as to education and as to character, and as to financial standing, experience, and all that.

Mr. MANN. I do not know now how he fills these offices, but I dare say that none of them have been examined beyond an acquaintance with the head of the Department.

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on page 3, line 23, on the words "and so forth," and on page 4, commencing with line 2, "of which $25,000 shall be immediately available."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. No; I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For survey and subdivision of Indian reservations and of lands to be allotted to Indians, and to make allotments in severalty, to be expended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $75,000, of which $15,000 shall be immediately available.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on line 14, the words "of which $15,000 shall be immediately available."

Mr. SHERMAN. I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools and placing of them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training, $75,000: Provided, That not exceeding $5,000 of this amount may be used, under direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in the transportation and placing of Indian pupils in positions where remunerative employment can be found for them in industrial pursuits. The provisions of this section shall apply to native pupils brought from Alaska.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to ask the chairman of the committee whether the words, "For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools, and also for the transportation of Indian pupils from all the Indian schools and placing them, with the consent of their parents, under the care and control of such suitable white families as may in all respects be qualified to give such pupils moral, industrial, and educational training," etc., means paying the transportation of an Apache Indian or any other Indian, from any reservation in Arizona to Carlisle in Pennsylvania or other eastern schools.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does. Carlisle in Pennsylvania, to Haskell Institute in Kansas, to Chilocco in Oklahoma, in fact to any one of the schools in my friend's Territory. Certainly that is what it means.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Then, Mr. Chairman, I move the following amendment:

That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the transportation of any Indian for a distance over 100 miles from the reservation on which he lives.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert: "That no part of this appropriation shall be expended in the transportation of any Indian for a distance of over 100 miles from the reservation on which he lives."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word. For some twelve years or thereabouts I have served on the Indian Committee of this House. From the time I went on it until now I have probably belabored the patience of this House in an effort to break up what I consider an absolute disadvantage to the Indian aside from the unnecessary waste of the money. I am charged with prejudice, because I do not agree with the misguided philanthropist who knows the Indian and his needs and what is best for him from the standpoint of a speculative theorist or from the more clouded viewpoint of the mere doctrinaire. My disagreement is based not on my prejudice, but on their ignorance. If they knew the real Indian as I know him, we could get much closer together on the way to the betterment of the tribe. My endeavor is to meet, as best our sense and judgment can, the real condition confronting us, while yours is dealing with the imaginary conditions surrounding the extinct tribe of Fenimore Cooper Indians that never did exist. I have told a dozen times in this presence, when speaking on this floor to the subject of Indian education, the folly of taking a boy or girl from the tribe, raised in a tepee, a blanket for Sunday clothes, vermin for a constant companion, and whose chief industry was found in propagation of these pests and whose pastime was found in killing them, and taking the child by force from these conditions and sending it through a school, teaching it to sing "How Jesus loves me" and other beautiful and appropriate Sunday school songs, and then taking this still untamed spirit to the great city of Philadelphia, where peace and beauty and prosperity reign—and I hope may never cease—and expect him to make a civilized human being, when we all know it took a thousand years to develop an honest white man. You might as well attempt to plant oranges upon the fields of Maine as to produce civilization in this way. One is just as impossible as the other; and the sooner the House will break this up the better.

Several times this House, on amendment offered by me, has voted this provision out of the appropriation bill, but the Senate has put it back. There should be an end to this folly. There is no sense in attempting to take a boy out of absolute barbaric conditions and expect to force him through a schoolhouse up to the civilization of the twentieth century. When it is done it will have been done by the slow process of elimination of those things that tend to degradation. You have got to do it in the presence of the tribe, and if not in the exact presence, somewhere close to where they live, and to raise and educate them in an environment in which that education may be of some benefit to them. What are you going to do with an Indian when you educate him in astronomy and trigonometry in Carlisle or Hampton? Is he to go back to his tribe? What greets him when he goes back? Nothing except knowledge of having been raised out of the condition in which he was born and having no place opened for him in which to live. What are you going to do with him in Pennsylvania? Is he to remain there contesting in the open with those about him, with no influence or sympathy to help him? What good can you expect to do for him by all this expenditure? Why not confine schools to the precinct in which these people live? Why not let the tribe see that they and their children are growing into a condition better than they have known before?

Take, for example, the Indian school at Phoenix, which is within a few miles of the reservation. When I first saw the Indians there, they were almost naked in the streets. But there now we have a school of industry that has done much and is doing daily more toward the civilization of the whole tribe. Industry should be the primary lesson, and ability to work with intelligence should be the purpose of their education for generations yet to come. There has been a marked change in the conditions of these Indians. Contrast this with the influence of the Carlisle school on the tribe from which you stole or forced the pupil. When he returns with the white man's manners and the white man's language and the white man's clothes, he is only laughed at and derided by his tribe. He soon goes back to a deeper degradation than that from which he sprang, and must do it in order to keep on terms of peace with his people. Every time you make an appropriation of public money to take the Indian away from his reservation it is a failure, if not a crime. It is an outrage on him and should never be made. It does him hurt and can not help him and certainly can not help the masses, whom we are trying to elevate by these appropriations.

Now, gentlemen, I wish this House to sustain this amendment. It is for the Indian I am now pleading. If he lives in an orange country, teach him how to raise an orange tree and pick an orange and dress it for market. If he lives in a farming community, let him be taught how to shoe a horse and handle a plow and irrigate a crop. Teach him those arts of industry and the necessity of self-dependence; and if he afterwards wants an education, he will himself provide the means of its acquisition. When the tribe shall become self-dependent and are taught that the only reward is the reward of industry, a desire to have their children educated will naturally arise, and the great problem will be far on the way to a sensible solution. I am afraid that you of the East waste a deal of unnecessary sympathy over the Indians of the West and neglect the poor white boy who goes shivering through the dark alleys of your towns. We make no appropriation for him. We have the public schools, but he has no clothes to wear, no bread to eat. He is as far from a chance to be something as any Apache on the plains, and has within so much of superior stuff capable of great results. Take care of him, you philanthropists. He is worth your care. While you are crying over the Indian, my heart is bleeding for the white boy, who, seeing dimly an upper light, has no way of climbing out of the darkness. He wants to struggle out from these arms that bind him into the light of the "ardent upper day," but he can not. The Indian does not want to, but you are trying to make him do it. To which of these does the voice of humanity call your aid?

I am not opposing Indian education, but am opposing your way of trying to educate him. While the white boy in your midst is neglected, you have taken the unwilling Indian in the soft arms of a bountiful appropriation and carried him a thousand miles away to some high institution of learning. You can not help the mass of Indians in this way. When he finds that he is the object of your solicitude, it produces within him nothing but disgust, and he thinks you a fool. I will not say here how near right I think he is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan and Mr. OLMSTED rose.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am not surprised that my friend from Michigan arises as my friend from Arizona takes his seat, because my friend from Arizona, in his usual clear, emphatic, and attractive style has punctured the argument presented early in the day by my distinguished friend from Michigan.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's proposition is to bury a man and then kill him; and in ordinary practice we find it rather better to wait until he is dead before we bury him. We propose in this bill to appropriate for twenty-seven nonreservation schools all over the country to the amount of more than a million dollars, and now the gentleman proposes by this amendment to make it impossible to have any children brought from the reservations to attend these nonreservation schools. The gentleman's argument is one which sustains the contention of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as to nonreservation schools, and to a degree I am in sympathy with what the gentleman has said, but while it is true that the Indian prefers to be at a school near home, and the parents prefer to have him there, the fault with the Indian falling back when he comes home from school is not of the school, but the fault of the environment in which he finds himself after leaving school.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But if the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. My argument was this—I may not have been clear—that I am trying to get the whole tribe to see what education means. I do not expect to raise separate Indians out of the tribe to any condition, but if this education has any influence it is the influence that the parents and older Indians see, and those who have grown beyond your schools can see—the influences of civilization on these younger ones that they observe daily—my hope being that the Indian tribe may be raised by being in close contact with the schools.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that perfectly, Mr. Chairman, and yet the gentleman will understand that there must be individual Indians who will rise above the ordinary men of their tribe, just as there are in the white race men who attain such perfection in morality and in intellect that they represent districts upon the floor of this House. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's proposition is to make it impracticable for us to bring any children to any of the nonreservation schools, except those who are so located that they can obtain their pupils from the immediate vicinity, and that is a very small number of the schools. This amendment of the gentleman would even make it impossible to send to the Phoenix school, in his own territory, a very large proportion of the scholars from that Territory itself. That is what it would do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I believe that in order to solve the Indian problem we must eventually work it out as an entire race problem, and not as a problem of the individual, I do think that the nonreservation school has worked wonders, so far as certain Indians are concerned. I have in mind one student who as a boy I brought from the Carlisle school to a printing office of a country newspaper in my own county. That was only eight years ago, and to-day that boy is superintendent of a room in one of the great printing establishments in Minneapolis, at $60 a week; and a brother of that same Indian boy, after graduating from Carlisle, studied law, and is a successful practitioner in the Northwest to-day. It is possible to make much of the individual Indian, but that of course does not solve our problem. What solves the Indian problem is to lift the whole race until they are capable of sustaining themselves in the ordinary walks of life. Now, we do not instruct, at Carlisle, or at Haskell, or at Phoenix, in astronomy or trigonometry. The gentleman is in error in that. We do instruct, in all of these institutions, how to plow, how to shoe a horse, how to sew a harness, how to mend a shoe. We do instruct in all the arts of common life, in all the mechanical arts, in a very large number of the Indian schools. Down here at Hampton, Va., we instruct in cabinetmaking and in machine making. We instruct in all the mechanical arts there, and instruct most successfully. And, Mr. Chairman, to strike out this item while we still appropriate for the continuance of the nonreservation schools is, it seems to me, little short of an absurdity. I trust that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona will not prevail.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman has convinced me, and I will ask to withdraw that amendment and offer another.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Now, I should like to interline between lines 2 and 3, after the word "schools," the words—

Lying within the State or Territory in which such pupils live.

So that it will read:

For collection and transportation of pupils to and from Indian schools lying within the State or Territory in which the pupil lives.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "schools," in line 3, page 5, insert "lying within the State or Territory in which the pupil lives."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I would like to say one word in reference to that. If that amendment is adopted, an Indian who lives in South Dakota, within 30 miles of a school in North Dakota, could not be transported to that school, but must of necessity be transported 150 miles to the nearest school within his own State. It would make it impossible for us to transport a pupil from near the line of Arizona to the school in Albuquerque, and we would be compelled to transport him 250 miles to the Phoenix school, in the Territory of Arizona. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I do not believe that the pupil ought to be sent from North Dakota to South Dakota. I do not believe he ought to be sent from Arizona to New Mexico, and that is the purpose of my amendment. I would protest against their taking him from Arizona to New York, if they had a school there, for the reasons I have suggested. If you have got these State schools for Indians in your State, I have no objection to the appropriation going to that extent, and if it is not all expended, as it seems to me it should not be, it will stop the enormous and foolish expense of educating the Indians beyond any hope of help to their tribe or help to themselves. I have heard them tell of the individual lawyer and the individual doctor and the individual manufacturer, ad nauseum, ever since I have been in Congress, and all about what wonderful things different schools have done for different Indians. You can talk that way about the education of any animal. The Indian in a bad condition is about the same as any other man would be in an equally bad condition, considering his life, his chances, and his heredity. The conditions are what keep him down, and you are only helping to keep him down by spending money foolishly on him instead of helping him in the right way. If we could keep the eastern schools out of the Indian question; if we will spend the money on the Indian at home, where he must live and die—and he longs for his habitat just as much as you or I, aye, more, for he yearns with the instinct of the animal for it—this difficulty would be brought far toward a just and sensible settlement. No matter how far you carry the Indian away, he wanders back and finds nothing but disappointment. There is no association for him, and his expensive education lends no aid to his people. You still persist out of an abundance of misguided philanthropy and misguided generosity to throw money away in a manner that is absolutely foolish. I hope my amendment will prevail.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Certainly.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the status of the student who has been graduated at Carlisle when he goes back to his tribe?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I have just said he has none. The only way he ever obtains a status with his tribe is by forgetting or throwing aside all he ever learned and become the worst blanket Indian on the reservation, while the fate awaiting the returning girl is too awful, too pitiable to mention here. And you, who never saw an Indian in your life, are unwittingly conspiring to their ruin while indulging in sweet dreams of philanthropy for the race. When I see these injuries perpetrated in the name of humanity and justice; when I remember to have seen, with outraged soul and broken heart, the mangled form of many of my nearest friends, torn beyond recognition by the savage hands of the tribes that surround us, even with all that horrible past rising before me I yet sympathize with their condition and ask this House to quit this foolishness by cutting off the appropriation that makes the folly possible. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who is antagonistic to the reservation schools, in answer to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], who has just taken his seat. I read only a sentence. He says:

At one of these nonreservation schools is maintained an excellent business course, where ambitious young Indians can learn stenography——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Oh, that would be a good thing on a reservation—to know stenography. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I repeat. He says:

For instance, at one of these is maintained an excellent business course, where ambitious young Indians can learn stenography, typewriting, bookkeeping, and other arts fitting them for clerical positions in which they not seldom excel.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is refreshing. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan.

At another the boys of a mechanical bent—

Will the gentleman please listen?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; I am paying attention.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. He says:

At another the boys of a mechanical bent—and of these there are a good many—learn enough about boilers and engines and the like to enable them to get work in the railroad roundhouses and the machine shops, which the rapid development of the West is bringing in its train.

What has the gentleman to say to that?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will say that they can learn that at home with less expense.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Out where they were lying in the sun, as the gentleman speaks of; they have machines there, I suppose?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; but they——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I think they maybe make guns there, or maybe they are machine guns!

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The gentleman ought not to bring in that kind of talk. I do not want to indulge in that, for I might say some things that I do not want to say.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I want to read some more from the report of the Commissioner:

At another great stress is laid upon the training of the girls for domestic employment in homes where the quality of the service counts for more than its quantity.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the gentleman think there is any white girl in the world who would like to have the same place that had any one of these advantages that you have given the Indian girl?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I am reading from the official report of the Government's official representative, and, so far as these schools are concerned, I will put his authority over against the authority of the gentleman who has just spoken.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That may be very true——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If we can not accept that, I question whether we can accept what the gentleman from Arizona says.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Now, will the gentleman, with the permission of the Chair——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I thank the gentleman. The gentleman was reading to me from the Commissioner's report?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And he was telling me to listen to him. I did listen to the Commissioner's report, and I am glad to find that the gentleman, knowing the Commissioner probably better than he knows me, and if he knew us both better he might be still more impressed with the superior knowledge of the Indian Commissioner; but about that I care nothing; but all the Commissioners that were ever born can not drive it into the head of any sensible man that has enough sense to get back home that it is a good thing to take a man out of that country and put him in a place where there is no field for him, even though you do find one or two that make good stenographers, who may possibly drive somebody out of employment. Why do you not more sensibly do what the Commissioner further recommends, and that is educate this Indian, not above himself, but to a condition where he can help his own? He does not need to learn to run a typewriter on an Indian reservation in Arizona or to be a stenographer. There are the fewest of those there that you ever saw in your life. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Is the gentleman asking me a question?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Just about like I want to. [Laughter.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like to have the gentleman speak in his own time. Does the gentleman undertake to maintain the position that you must not educate the Indian because he will take the place of some white man?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; provided you educate individual Indians for that purpose and make no equal provision for the white man against whom he competes. The white man is fully as good as an Indian. This appropriation should be to educate or civilize the tribe, not particular individuals of the different tribes to bring them in competition with white people who have no such opportunities afforded them.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Does the gentleman undertake to maintain the position, I repeat, that you must not educate the Indian because he will take the place of some white man or some colored man or the son of some foreigner or any other man who is trying to go forward in the race of life? Would you take from the Indian what you give to the black man?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Do you want me to answer that?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Or to the foreigner? I want to have the gentleman let us know where he stands on this question.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. May I answer the question?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Surely.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the gentleman want me to answer that? He will answer my question when I get through, please.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. If I can.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Does the gentleman want to take a white person, a negro, a white child that has no more than the Indian has got and at Government expense bring him to Philadelphia and teach him stenography or anything else, paying for it out of Government money, and then bring him into competition with your own child, whose parents, in the sweat of their face, have raised the money to sustain the public schools? Would the gentleman do that?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I answer?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. That has been done over and over again in this country—in fact, thousands of cases in the last forty years—toward the colored boy and girl, and by virtue of the education given——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Has the Government——

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Oh, be patient, please.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. But the gentleman is misstating the question.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Let me answer. And in some places he is driving out his white competitor because of his superiority.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, we see how far we drift when we lose our oars and how less safe it is to start our canoe on a vast ocean without taking oars with us. Outside of the Indian tribes the Government has never appropriated one dollar to the education of the people of the United States. The National Treasury has never contributed one cent to the education of the white man, the negro, or any person whatever, aside from the education of the servants of the Government in the Military and Naval academies of the United States. I am not complaining now, nor have I complained yet, about the Indian being made the object of governmental solicitude, nor that he has been selected as the only person on whom we spend the public treasure, but the very gravamen of my charge, the very heart of my objection, is that the money spent in eastern schools is foolishly spent. That you have as much right to take a poor white boy from Arizona and educate him in a school like Carlisle as you have to take an Indian boy and educate him at Carlisle is a self-evident proposition to any white man who is not already completely crazy on the Indian question. There is one excuse, and only one excuse, for the Government spending one cent of money (extorted from the white people through grievous indirect taxation) on Indian education, and that is found in our first great mistake of treating them as wards of the Government.

If they are wards, and the nation stands as guardian for them, then no discrimination should be made, and all should be educated alike or given equal chances for a like education. Every dollar spent on eastern schools is violative of this very plain and manifestly just principle. They must be elevated en masse, or they will never be elevated through any effort of the Government. I have grave doubts as to the validity of any law that takes from the public Treasury money collected by taxation from all the people and applying it to the education of any particular class of people, and when you select only certain members of that class and bestow on them the advantages of higher education, we know that it is monstrous, whether it be legal or not. These considerations impel me, as they should force you all, to a human, common sense, and determined objection to a further dedication of public money to an illegal, unjust, and vicious cause. How much effect the mere expenditure of public money in these eastern schools may have in kindling to a burning zeal the advocates of this appropriation I will not dare conjecture; but I do know that the money expended in their districts on Indian education could be much more charitably, sensibly, and humanely spent in the districts where the Indians live.

I can not look with entire sympathy or patience on the proposition advanced by the gentleman from Michigan and others on this floor, to take an Indian from his environment of depravity, degradation, and dirt and send him while young to Pennsylvania and rear him among the most alluring surroundings, furnish him every day with all he can eat and all he can wear, pound into him the education that will make him capable of taking, at a cheaper price, some position held by a poor white boy who had learned what little he knows in the cruel school of poverty and adversity. In the name of the eastern white boy I protest against it. In the name of the tax his poverty pays I protest against it.

The Indian tribes, as tribes, should be civilized, if, indeed, civilization is possible with them. It is a far cry from the present position of such Indians as I speak of. I am speaking of the reservation blanket Indian, and speaking from that view point no one of the distinguished gentlemen on this floor having Indian blood in his veins can feel the least offense. If they have given any thought to this question, or even have the slightest knowledge of the facts, I know I will receive their encomiums rather than their criticism.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very good world and a very cruel one in which we all live and struggle, its goodness or its cruelty depending on the viewpoint from which we see it. Surrounded by all the blandishments of wealth, the youth looks on the coming years with buoyant expectation, while hope and joy overrun his cup. Old age, waiting to hear the keel of his boat touch the sands of the other and vaster shore, wonders why he lived, and finds more of regret and pain as he views the course over which he came than he sees of pleasure or of profit in it. That youth will be the old man by and by. As it is with them so it is with the people, tribes, and tongues that have come and gone since first the world began. The law of time seems even more heartless with nations than with the individual, and that law says of man, of birds, of beasts, of flowers, and of trees, the weak must die, the fittest must survive. Cruel as it seems, it is nevertheless true that the nation or tribe or people which can not keep pace with surrounding civilization must become extinct. The whirling speed of the modern world will permit no laggard to handicap it. The Indian is a striking example. The buffalo's place has been taken by the white-face steer on the plains, and to the great advantage of the world. The Indian must rise, must rise high enough to become a part of modern progress, or he will be crushed under its flying wheels. It is the law of fate against which it is needless to complain. Your bill hastens rather than retards the end of him as a people. [Applause.]

God, or nature, or whatever power you are pleased to call that which fixes the planets in their orbits and overrules the destiny of created things, has dedicated the earth to the occupancy and the domination of the white man. It has been written of old of him that "on whatsoever land he puts his foot it shall be his and no nation shall prevail against him." The vast cycle of approaching years are ringing the knell of doom to all others now inhabiting the earth. The survival of the fittest in the bitter fight for existence means the white man's supremacy. History records his triumphs, and coming ages will emphasize his successful aggression on every inch of the habitable globe. And to my mind it is well that it should be so. The death of a people or a nation, unable to survive, is no more than the death of a weakling, unable to live. The weak only give way to the stronger, and the stronger will, when necessary, force the weak away. As civilization progresses, with all its charity for human misery and with all its zeal for the betterment of mankind, it will meet a point at which it must pause, only to proceed at once to an active realization of the truth of Holy Writ, that "He that provideth not first for his own household denyeth the faith, and is worse than an infidel." [Applause.]

That point has, in my judgment, already been reached. Instead of spending money for the conversion of the heathen, for God's sake—and I say it reverently—for Christ's sake apply every cent that the State can give, every cent that blessed charity will contribute, every dollar that the church can raise, to the education, conversion, upbuilding of the poor, the ignorant, and the vicious that surround us in our own most favored land, for it is written, and I repeat it, that "He who provideth not first for his own household denyeth the faith, and is worse than an infidel." I would not wreck the life of one American boy by neglect to raise one dozen Indians, Chinese, Japanese, or South Sea islanders above their present condition. I would, for my country's sake, that the vast sum of eight hundred millions already spent by our Government on the Philippine Islands had been given to the development of our own country and the advancement of our own people. Contemplate, if you can, the vast benefits that such a sum would have vouchsafed to that great country lying between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific Ocean. It staggers the imagination. The folly that led to this awful waste of treasure is based on the same folly that sends an Apache Indian to Carlisle at the expense of over $1,000.

How long, O Lord, how long wilt Thou withhold Thy blessings from us?

Do you gentlemen never think of the poor, the downtrodden, the needy of your own town? Did you ever think that heretofore the land vent—the vast public lands—had kept American labor above the wage of any other labor on earth? If you oppressed it, it made a home in the West and became independent of your exactions. The money spent on the Philippines would have made homes for thousands in our own country. For every Indian you educate at Carlisle or Hampton or any eastern school you could make a home for an American family on the limitless plains of the West.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I am the friend of the white man, a lover of my race and blood, a lover of my country and her people, and my supreme desire is to see these people educated, prosperous, and happy. When the child of labor shall receive the education you give the Indian—justified by the wages paid labor; when capital, without oppressing or stealing, shall receive a just return on its investments and contribute its full share to general education, then I am ready with you gentlemen to invade the realm of speculative philanthrophy and give the Indian the highest possible education of which he is capable, provided always that the American boy and girl shall first have been given every opportunity, which, by your ignorance and folly, you are in this bill bestowing on those so much less worthy of your charity, your sympathy, or your benevolence. [Applause.]

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. MANN. Would the gentleman like more time?

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like a little more time if I can have it.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be granted five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Michigan is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Just to illustrate what education will do for an inferior race, only recently I read that in South Carolina, one of the most densely populated colored States in this country, where forty years ago scarcely one in the whole population could read, the conference of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, composed entirely of black men, save one white in Claflin University, gave $7,000 plus to a conventional fund for the education of their race, $2,000 more than the wealthiest of the great wealthy conferences of the North and East. It pays, gentlemen, to lift up the less fortunate than are we, even though they be Indians, or colored, or foreigners, or whatnot. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania and then the gentleman from Arizona will be recognized afterwards.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, as this discussion relates largely to the Indian school in my own district and I have occupied very little of the time of this House, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to proceed for thirty minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, the hundred years immediately following the Declaration of Independence have been termed "A century of dishonor" in the relation of our people to the American Indians, who once possessed this entire country and roamed in freedom throughout its length and breadth. Their tomahawks and other implements of warfare unequal to their defense against the advancing rifles of civilization, they were driven back, back and ever back, and as the white man needed more territory, still farther back, until finally those proud but untutored people—the first families of America, the "Who's who" of pre-revolutionary days—were practically corralled upon a few so-called Indian reservations. With less of freedom and less of out-of-door life they became the victims of diseases previously unknown, while their morals, as well as their bodies, suffered from acquaintance with the firewater of the paleface. About the time that the citizens of the United States celebrated the centennial of their own independence there was an awakening of the public conscience concerning these people, who had practically lost their independence and their free citizenship through our occupancy of the lands that had been theirs. About that time it also began to dawn upon the American people that, not merely as a matter of morals or of sentiment, but even more as a matter of national benefit, as a matter of saving in dollars and cents, as well as in human lives, it was desirable that the Government should do something in the way of the education and mental as well as moral improvement of those conquered aboriginal peoples.

The Roman Catholic Church had already established a few mission schools among them, and in 1877 Congress made a beginning by appropriating $20,000 out of the National Treasury for Indian education. This amount was increased from year to year, so that for the past ten years we have been appropriating an average of more than $3,000,000 per annum out of the National Treasury for this cause.

We have now 91 Government boarding schools located immediately among the Indians upon Indian reservations, with a total enrollment of 11,019 pupils.

We have 25 so-called "nonreservation boarding schools;" that is to say, Government schools located elsewhere than upon the Indian reservations. These 25 nonreservation schools have an enrollment of 9,485 pupils.

We have also 163 day schools, all, I believe, located upon or in the immediate vicinity of the reservations. These 163 day schools have an enrollment of 5,130 pupils.

Then we have what are termed "contract schools." They are the ordinary public or district schools, forming part of the educational systems of the States in which they are located. The Indian Department makes contracts with these schools for the attendance of Indian pupils. There are 12 of these contract schools. The contracts cover 122 pupils, but the average attendance in 1907 was only 58.

There are 53 Indian boarding schools maintained by churches or religious bodies, of which 34 are under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church, 5 Presbyterian, 6 Protestant Episcopal, 2 Congregational, 2 Lutheran, 1 Evangelical Lutheran, 1 Christian Reform, 1 Methodist, 1 Baptist, 1 Reform Presbyterian, 1 Seventh Day Adventists, and 3 undenominational. These mission boarding schools have a total enrollment of 3,990.

There are also a number of mission day schools and a number of sectarian contract schools.

At Hampton, Va., there are about 100 Indians educated, as I understand it, by contract.

It has been urged upon this floor that these young Indians can be more effectively and beneficially educated upon the reservations than elsewhere.

As the result of some study and investigation, I am convinced that while they are doing some good, the day schools and the district schools are the least effective, the reservation boarding schools more effective, and the nonreservation schools the most effective of all.

The largest, most important, and most useful of all the Indian schools is located at Carlisle, Pa., in my own district.

The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] has told you that when the Carlisle Indian goes back to the tribe he becomes the worst Indian and the lowest Indian there. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman speaks, it seems to me, not so much in the interest of the Indians as with reference to keeping enough of them within the Territory of Arizona for the maintenance of the nine reservation and three nonreservation schools in that Territory and the money which is annually expended in such education as they receive there. He is not looking at the real benefit to the Indian, or else he is not looking at all at the results attained by the Carlisle Indian School. He is grossly mistaken in his statements. The Carlisle School does not have to send out agents to drum up pupils.

The parents wish to send them to Carlisle. They do not like to send them to the day schools. I shall presently show you statistics from the record to contradict his statements as to Carlisle Indians. But first a few words as to the district schools. A large part of the Indians are not citizens and are not entitled to send their children to the State schools. So far as the Indian lands are, from time to time, allotted to individual Indians under the Burke law, the Government retains a sort of trusteeship for twenty-five years, during which period the lands are untaxed. The whites object to maintaining schools at their own expense for the benefit of the Indians who pay no taxes. They object, moreover, that the Indian pupils are in many instances filthy and in some cases diseased.

In the latest report of the Board of Indian Commissioners to the Secretary of the Interior, commencing at page 126, I find the following, which illustrates the feeling toward these untaxed Indians and their children, and the improbability of their receiving great benefit from education amid such surroundings. He says:

> It was hardly to be expected that white taxpayers in any county or town could be brought to regard as desirable neighbors—to consider as fellow-citizens entitled to like privileges with themselves—Indians whose lands remained untaxed, while their white neighbors were compelled by increased taxation to pay for the schools, roads, bridges, and courts for the advantage and protection alike of the untaxed Indians and the taxed whites. The failure to enforce the statutes of the State of Washington against the sale of liquor to Indians illustrates the same point. In July, 1906, the prosecuting attorney of the county in which is situated the Yakima Reservation informed the superintendent in charge of that reservation that since the Indians did not pay taxes he (the prosecuting attorney) did not propose to put the county to any expense in prosecuting for crime among them, or to give them protection by law when crimes were committed on the reservation; and the district attorney adds that this policy "is in accordance with the instructions of the county commissioners." The need of making special provision for funds for the support of schools and of local government in parts of States where Indian lands remain untaxed for twenty-five years is also very evident to all who know the utter lack of country schools in these parts of the new State of Oklahoma which have been heretofore Indian reservations in the Indian Territory.

But a still more serious objection is that the Indian children themselves do not care to attend these schools, and their parents do not care to have them attend.

On page 42 of the same report the Commissioner says:

> Unfortunately Indian parents, though often appreciating in a measure the advantages of coeducation with the whites, are prone to listen and yield to the trifling objections of their children against prompt and continuous attendance. * * * The following statistics, covering a series of years, will show how desultory the attendance of Indian pupils has been at these district schools.

The statistics which he there gives, covering a period of seventeen years, show a constantly decreasing ratio of attendance, the year 1907 being the lowest of all, when the average attendance of enrolled pupils was only 45 per cent.

The same difficulty of securing attendance, although in a less degree, appears to extend to the Government day schools. For instance, as appears from Commissioner Leupp's report for 1907, at Camp McDowell, in Arizona, the capacity of the school is 40, but the average attendance only 13. At San Carlos, Ariz., the capacity is 100, but the attendance only 37. At Big Pine, Cal., the capacity of the school is 30, but the average attendance is 19. At Bishop the capacity is 50, the average attendance 15. At Great Nemaha, Kans., the capacity is 40, the average attendance 18. At the Sac and Fox school the capacity is 42, the average attendance only 17.

Taking the 163 day schools, with a capacity of 5,770, the pupils enrolled in 1907 were 5,130, but the average attendance was only 3,670.

On page 23 of his report Commissioner Leupp says:

> The rudiments of an education, such as can be given his children in the little day school, should remain within their reach, just as they are within the reach of the white children who must be neighbors and competitors of the Indian children in their joint struggle for a livelihood. Indeed, this being a reciprocal obligation—the right of the child, red or white, to enough instruction to enable him to hold his own as a citizen and the right of the Government to demand that every person who handles a ballot shall have his intelligence trained to the point that reading, writing, and simple ciphering will train it—I believe in compelling the Indian parent, whether he wishes to or not, to give his offspring this advantage. My interpretation of the duty laid upon me by the statute in this regard has carried me even to the use of physical force and arms in the few instances where reasoning and persuasion failed and the Indians have defied the Government.

I fully agree with the Commissioner in his estimate of the importance of educating these red children. His illustration shows, however, that the reservation day school is not popular with the Indians, and may not be their most useful educational agency. The Carlisle school alone takes care of nearly one-third as many as the entire 163 day schools, but it has never been necessary to use force to keep it filled. The Indian parents are anxious to send their children there, and during the past year scores of applications have had to be refused.

Another objection to the day school as the only means of Indian education lies in the fact that many of the tribes occasionally move from place to place, in which event the school would have to follow the tribe or lose its pupils.

Another point operating against some of the day schools is that where, in that sparsely settled country, some of the Indians are trying to work farms, the distances are so great that the children are either unable to attend school at all, or, if they do attend, a great portion of their time is taken up going and coming, and the short period when they are actually in the school gives them no opportunity to do more than possibly learn to read and write, without any opportunity for industrial training or experience whatever.

The reservation boarding schools are much better attended than the day schools, but the average percentage of attendance is less than at the nonreservation schools, and there is more difficulty in keeping them filled. I have no doubt that they are doing a great deal of good, and am in favor of maintaining them. I believe, however, that the nonreservation schools, some of them at least, are performing an even greater service and that their continuance is still more important, not only to the Indians themselves, but to our whole people. I have great respect for some who hold a different view, but that is my honest judgment.

Now, let me tell you something about the school with which I am most acquainted. It is located in the State of Pennsylvania, at Carlisle, where there was a frontier military post in the early history of the colonies, and where one hundred and fifty-five years ago Benjamin Franklin negotiated a treaty with the Indian tribes of Pennsylvania. Many years ago training schools for Indian campaigning were there maintained, and it is appropriate now that the same place should be devoted to such training of the Indians as will prevent the necessity for further Indian campaigning. The property belonging to the United States, upon which the Indian school is now located, was long used as a cavalry post. As the result of a little pleasantry on the part of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee in July, 1863, some of the buildings were burned. A couple of years later they were rebuilt. Its use as an industrial training school for Indians began in the latter part of 1879 under Capt. (now General) R. H. Pratt, detailed for that purpose, and who there performed a very valuable service until July, 1904, when he was succeeded by Maj. W. A. Mercer, of the Eleventh United States

Cavalry, who came equipped with an experience of some sixteen years among the Indians of the West and Northwest.

Seventy-seven different tribes are now represented among the children at Carlisle.

They are not only taught to read and write, but are also given practical instruction and experience in almost every useful industrial pursuit.

The boys are instructed in every branch of carpentry, building, millwork, furniture making, and woodwork in general. In fact, in all the elements of cabinetmaking and carpentry.

They are instructed in blacksmithing in every branch, especial attention being given to scientific horseshoeing. They are instructed in carriage and wagon making, in coach making and trimming, in plumbing and steam fitting, in tailoring, harness making, shoemaking, plastering, masonry, bricklaying, cementing, in all the work that is usually done in a tin shop, in printing, in photographing, in cooking, and in every branch of agriculture and fruit cultivation.

The girls are taught to cook, to bake, to make their own garments. They are instructed in butter making and in every branch of housekeeping. Their education is of the most practical kind, fitting them to go out in the world and make their own living.

They are given some instruction in music and literature. Great attention is paid to outdoor exercise and outdoor sports. This not only tends to the preservation of health, but vastly increases their interest in the school and in their studies. They have a battalion of cadets, the perfection of whose evolutions loses nothing by comparison with any performance of the cadets at West Point or Annapolis. They have a band of some forty or fifty boys. That band is a marvel. I had heard it charged that they kept old pupils there after they ought to be discharged for the purpose of maintaining a good band. Last summer I inquired of their instructor as to the truth of that statement. He assured me upon his honor that there was not a boy in the band that had been in the school more than two years, and declared that their aptitude for band music exceeded anything he had ever known.

Commissioner Leupp told me only this morning that a number of boys from the Carlisle band have gone into the military bands of the Army.

The Carlisle football team is the pride and admiration of every Indian in the country and of a great many whites as well. With only a small number to draw from, the school maintains a team which has defeated some of the largest universities and would be a credit to any of them.

Athletics cost nothing either to the Government or the school. The crowds which go to see the Indian boys play ball and hear the Indian band yield sufficient gate receipts to pay all expenses and a good deal more.

Many of these Carlisle pupils do not go back to the tribe at all. Therefore my friend from Arizona is mistaken. I have in my hand a list giving the name and present address and occupation of every pupil who ever graduated at the Carlisle school. I will call your attention to what a few of them are now doing, and we will see whether they have gone back and become the worst Indians and whether they are tearing people to pieces out there, as he intimates. I make the assertion now, Mr. Chairman, that the Carlisle school and all these nonreservation schools are guaranties of peace. There have been more than 6,000 pupils at the Carlisle school since it was instituted, and I made the statement a year ago that in not a single instance has any Carlisle pupil, or the parent of any Carlisle pupil, ever raised his hand against the Government of the United States. This money is well expended from an economic standpoint. It is cheaper to educate young Indians than it is to fight old ones.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. OLMSTED. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have heard it stated on what was supposed to be good authority that "Billy the Kid," who was the worst Indian ever in Arizona in recent years and who committed many murders, was a graduate of Carlisle.

Mr. OLMSTED. He certainly was not a graduate, for I have a list of every graduate. There was a man named Plenty Horses, who, it was claimed, did shoot a Government officer. He had been at Carlisle, but did not stay long. He was tried for murder by the United States court, but released. I do not know all the facts, but assuming that this one Indian, who while at Carlisle was found to be below the average of intelligence, did, after leaving that school, misbehave toward an Army officer, it is, at most, only the exception which proves the rule to be as I have stated.

The parents of these pupils consider that their children are held as hostages for peace.

The Carlisle school, where 77 tribes are represented, is our greatest and highest single guaranty of freedom from Indian wars and their enormous expense in money and in human life.

But we hear it urged that, having acquired all this proficiency, these Indians go back to the reservations and become loafers. That may be true of a very few. We have all known graduates of other great institutions of learning to become drunkards and loafers and worse, but it by no means follows that that can be said of the graduates of those institutions as a class. Neither is it true of Carlisle graduates. I have in my hand a list showing the present address and occupation of nearly every Indian who has ever graduated at Carlisle. The first name upon the list is that of William F. Campbell, a Chippewa Indian, who is now a practicing lawyer at Mahnomen, Minn. The next is Joseph Harris, employed upon a farm at Langhorne, Pa. The next is Cecilia Londrosh Herman, who attended a State normal school in Pennsylvania, was a teacher in the Indian Service a year, and is now married and keeping house for her husband at Homer, Nebr. One is now a teacher at Albuquerque, N. Mex.; one is a laundress at Wind River, Wyo., and one is a bandmaster. Picking out from the list a few names at random, I find that of the class of 1890 one is a clerk in a Carlisle store; one is a real estate dealer and bandmaster at Oneida, Wis.; a number of them farmers. From the class of 1891, I note that Henry Standing Bear is engaged at the Hippodrome, at 226 West Thirty-fourth street, New York. Charles Dagnette is a graduate of the Eastman Business College. Among the graduates of the class of 1892, I note the principal in charge of an Indian school in Minnesota; a farmer, a housewife, an assistant blacksmith, and a lawyer. Glancing along through the list, I find that Thomas Black Bear is a farmer and stock raiser; James Flannery, a bandmaster at Dubuque, Iowa. Howard Gansworth, now living at Buffalo, N. Y., graduated at Princeton after leaving Carlisle, and is now in charge of the publicity department of a manufacturing firm. Siceni Nori, now living at Carlisle, graduated from the Scranton Business College. David Turkey is a farm hand at Newtown, Pa.

Mr. STERLING. Are these full-blooded Indians, or is the school open to Indians of any degree?

Mr. OLMSTED. Open to Indians of any degree, but most of these are full-blood Indians. The full-blood Indians seem for some reason or other to prefer Carlisle. John Lily is an engineer. Frank Cayou is the athletic director of the Wabash College in Indiana. Another of the class of 1896 is a linotype operator and newspaper correspondent at Davenport, Iowa. Another is the engineer of the steamer Shelton. Elmer Simon, a Chippewa Indian, is in the hardware business at Johnstown, Pa. James Wheelock, an Oneida Indian, is a bandmaster and printer in Philadelphia. Albert Nash is general manager of a steam tire-repair works in Philadelphia. Edward Rogers, of the class of 1897, is a lawyer in Minneapolis. Nancy Seneca graduated at the Philadelphia Hospital, practiced as a trained nurse for six years in Philadelphia, and is now nursing at Albuquerque, N. Mex. Caleb Sickles, an Oneida Indian, is a dentist at Tiffin, Ohio. Seichu Atyse Strang, a Pueblo Indian, graduated at the Philadelphia Hospital, practiced as a trained nurse for eight years, and is now married and living in Philadelphia. Nettie Horne is a stenographer at Oakland, Cal. Sara Williams Wauskakamick is a dressmaker at Keshena, Wis. David Abraham, of the class of 1900, is shipping clerk in a manufacturing house at Hatboro, Pa. Kittie Silverheels is now living at Irving, N. Y., and Jennie Turkey White is married and keeping house at Seneca, N. Y. Among the graduates of 1901 I notice a machinist in Philadelphia, a teacher in Carlisle, a dentist in Chicago, a housewife at Peoria, Ill., and farmers in various parts of the country; a clerk at West Depere, Wis., a plumber in San Francisco, a trained nurse at Marshfield, Oreg., etc. Of the class of 1902 Charles Bender is an engraver and also a professional ball player connected with the famous Athletics, of Philadelphia. Of this class also one is a student at Whitworth College, another a bandmaster at Shadron, Nebr.; a printer at Mahnomen, Minn.; Cornelius Petoskey is a civil engineer and engaged in the automobile business at Howell, Mich. Thomas Walker Mani is a lawyer at Sisseton, Wis. One Indian maiden of that class is a clerk in a broker's office in Philadelphia. Another is dressmaking at Irving, N. Y., and another assistant bookkeeper in Kansas City. Another is in service at Cleveland, Ohio. The class of 1903 is scattered all over the country. One is a machinist at Hampton, Va.; one is in service at Cleveland, Ohio; one is a coal passer on the U. S. S. Tennessee, League Island, Philadelphia; one is a dentistry student at the University of Pennsylvania; one is a student at the normal school at Bloomsburg, Pa.; another a farm hand at Red House, N. Y.; another is in the lumber business at Seattle, Wash. Among the graduates of this class I find also a dressmaker, a railroad trainman, a jeweler, several teachers. Joseph Ruiz is a carpenter and musician, and between the two makes $4 a day. One is a steel worker at Tacony, Pa., and another a machinist at Baldwin's Locomotive Works. Looking over the graduates of 1904 I notice a cook in a hotel at Buffalo, N. Y.; a printer at Wittenberg, Wis.; a machinist at the Baldwin Locomotive Works—he is also a musician; a Crow Indian taking a business course at Lawrence, Kans.; a harness maker and band man at Lisbon, N. Dak.; a student at Dickinson College, Pennsylvania; a workman in a lumber mill at Neah Bay, Wash.; a teamster at Iroquois, N. Y.; a dressmaker at Highspire, Pa.; a college student at Benton Harbor, Mich.; a student at the high school, Riverside, Cal.; a stenographer and Spanish correspondent in Philadelphia. Of the 1905 graduates there is a student in the normal school at Bloomsburg, Pa.; a teacher at Hogansburg, N. Y.; a wagon maker at Carlisle, Pa.; a normal student at West Chester, Pa.; a clerk in the Young Woman's Christian Association at Philadelphia. Bert Jacques, a Pueblo Indian, owns and works his own farm of 200 acres in New Mexico. Tossie Nick, a Cherokee Indian, is playing with the Seventh Cavalry Band in Manila. Another graduate is a stenographer in Philadelphia. One is a clerk for the New York Life Insurance Company. There are several teachers and students at other schools in various parts of the country. Levi Webster, an Oneida Indian, is making suit cases in Philadelphia.

It is noticeable that a much smaller proportion of the graduates in later years go back into the Indian country at all. A much larger proportion are found engaged in the various pursuits and avocations of life from one end of the country to the other. The class of 1906, in particular, is scattered all over the continent. Every one of them seems to have found occupation without difficulty. The graduates of 1907 have already found abundant occupation.

I will not stop to go through the whole list, but there is a larger proportion of Carlisle pupils and Carlisle graduates that never go back among the Indians, and do make their living in various trades and occupations all through the United States, than come from any or all of the reservation boarding schools.

Mr. McGUIRE. How many are graduated each year?

Mr. OLMSTED. There are about a thousand pupils there all the time. I suppose about thirty or forty a year. A larger number who do not graduate—do not remain long enough to graduate—receive industrial certificates.

I wish that anyone in doubt as to the efficiency of this school and the importance of maintaining it might have witnessed, as I did, the graduation exercises in 1907. The neat, clean, and happy appearance of the thousand pupils, the perfect discipline and order maintained, the beautiful music by the Indian band, and the addresses by members of the graduating class were most inspiring. One gave a practical talk upon the subject of painting—not portrait painting, but the kind of painting most practically useful. He described and illustrated the character of paints, the mixing of them, and their application for a variety of purposes.

There were songs by Hopi Indians and by Northern Cheyenne Indians in their respective languages, the entire performance concluding with "America," played by the Indian band and sung by a thousand Indian voices in a way to make the patriotic heart rejoice.

An Indian maiden gave a talk upon housekeeping which for thoroughness of knowledge of the subject and clear, concise statement of what she knew excited the commendation and applause of several hundred white ladies in the audience. A Digger Indian gave a practical talk upon steam fitting, which he illustrated with pipes and other utensils. Other graduates spoke upon other subjects. I shall never forget the Indian girl who recited Tell's address to his beloved hills and mountains—"Ye crags and peaks, I'm with ye once again." She had proceeded but a short time before she forgot the words. There was no prompter, and there she stood. We have all, in boyhood days, recited that famous oration beginning "My lords, let no man dare, when I am dead, to charge me with dishonor." And we have all heard of the boy who, overcome by stage fright, begun, "My lords," and stopped. After a long pause, he again exclaimed, "My lords," and again could go no further. The third time he exclaimed, "My lords—I have forgotten the rest," and sank into his chair. Not so this Indian maiden. The boy who stood on the burning deck was not more steadfast of purpose than she. There she stood, firm as a rock; not a muscle of her face moved, nor of her whole body. Two thousand people faced her. She gave no sign of embarrassment, no sign of shrinking, not the slightest evidence of an intention to retreat or sit down. That long pause—the motionless girl upon the stage, the breathless people in the audience—was the longest and most embarrassing I ever experienced. I asked the superintendent to kindly suggest that she give it up. But, knowing her and her people, he replied, "Oh, no; she will never move from her tracks until she has finished that recitation." And she never did. After what seemed an eternity, the words came to her and she finished Tell's oration amid the most thunderous applause. She well illustrated the class motto, "Perseverance," and the grit peculiar to her race. Look at the manner in which they play football. With only a few hundred pupils to draw from, they have all the time a football team at Carlisle that competes favorably with the largest college teams in the country.

Mr. BUTLER. They beat all but one last year.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman whether or not it is true that a great many of the pupils coming to the Indian school at Carlisle come from the West, where the climate is dry and arid and more healthful than the climate of Pennsylvania, and that they become afflicted with consumption and asthma, and that there is a great rate of mortality among them?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am glad that the gentleman has asked me that question. If you will look over the map or atlas prepared by the Census Bureau showing the relative mortality from various diseases in the different parts of the United States, you will find that the school at Carlisle is located in a place that is as free from tuberculosis as any in the country. A report showing the conditions there at the present time, not yet published, but of which I have the proof, says, "At present there are no cases of tuberculosis under treatment at the school."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say that about three or four years ago the oldest son of Chief Quanah Parker, of the Comanches, was claimed to have acquired consumption at that school, and came home in a very bad condition, and his father carried him to the Mescalero Reservation in New Mexico, where he finally died. He told me that his son acquired that disease at Carlisle school.

Mr. OLMSTED. I am very glad the gentleman has made that statement. I have investigated that one case, which has been heralded all over this country as a great charge against Carlisle. The physician of the school said that young Parker had tuberculosis when he came there, was not quite as bad when he went away as when he came [laughter], and two years after he left there he died. If he had stayed there he probably would have been alive to-day. [Renewed laughter.]

Well, now, I do not wish to take the time of the committee unnecessarily.

Mr. McGUIRE. Can the gentleman tell us what percentage of the Indians now in Carlisle school are of mixed blood?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am unable to tell; I know a very large percentage are full blood. The superintendent tells me that the full-blood Indian parents are constantly trying to send their children to Carlisle—to such an extent that he can not accommodate them.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do those Indians go back to the reservation?

Mr. OLMSTED. I presume a few of them do; very many do not.

Mr. HINSHAW. What does the gentleman know as to the course they pursue after they go back to the reservation? Do they tend to elevate the Indians among whom they go to live?

Mr. OLMSTED. I am glad the gentleman asked that question. A great portion of them are very readily taken into the Indian Service and become teachers of Indian schools, both reservation and day schools. They do help elevate the Indians among whom they formerly lived.

I should like to read letters I have recently received, which show something of the Carlisle spirit among the pupils who have gone there. Here is one which came to me on the 24th of January from Waynesboro, Pa., asking me for a copy of some remarks I made last year, telling me how much interested he is in the school. It is signed James Sheehan. He concludes:

I am a former student of the school; I am following my trade as a printer, which dear Carlisle has taught me, and I am employed in the Waynesboro Record—

And so on.

It is a well-constructed letter, written in a fair hand. It shows that this Indian is making his own living in a printing office in Pennsylvania. Some of them are in printing offices in my own city of Harrisburg. Within 150 miles of Harrisburg there are to-day 300 of these Indians employed in one way or another.

I was going to show you in what trades they receive industrial certificates. Let me say that in order to obtain an industrial certificate at Carlisle it is necessary to be as proficient as it is to graduate at any trade school in New York or Pennsylvania—in a plain industrial school.

Upon the occasion of which I spoke a few minutes ago there were not only diplomas conferred upon members of the graduating class, but there were 155 industrial certificates conferred.

These certificates showed proficiency in baking, 2; blacksmithing, 4; shoemaking, 4; harness making, 3; plumbing, 4; printing, 4; shoemaking, 4; tailoring, 3; tinsmithing, 1; dairying, 6; poultry raising, 2; farming, 43; plain sewing, 37; housekeeping (including care of house, cooking, and laundering), 11; and dressmaking and plain sewing, 33.

Now, here is a letter which I wish to read for the benefit of the gentleman from Arizona in particular, as showing that all who go back to the Indian country do not sink to that low level of which he has spoken.

I know this will attract the attention of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], because it says here on the letter head, which is that of a stock farm:

Our herd bull, Sharon Crown III, was until recently owned by Hon. William J. Bryan.

[Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is the best recommendation I have heard yet, because he goes in for good stock.

Mr. OLMSTED. One of the proprietors of that stock farm, and the writer of this letter, is a full-blood Indian. He says so in his letter. It is not addressed to me, but to a friend who sent it to me. He says:

I noticed a piece in the St. Louis Republic of last Sunday's issue with reference to the question whether the Indian would be most benefited by staying right in the midst of the old life and surroundings and attending the reservation schools exclusively and abolishing schools located in the East, and more particularly the Carlisle school.

I called on President Roosevelt about ten days ago on my recent visit to Washington, and in our short talk he asked what I thought of Carlisle as a school for full-blood Indians. I did not have the opportunity of answering this question in a befitting manner, as I did not feel at liberty to take up his time, but now that I am at home I have thought that I would address a letter to the President stating my views and giving reasons gained from actual experience and from what I have observed during my nine years' residence at this place why the Carlisle school should not be abolished. I lived here before the Indians were allotted and since and have had exceptional opportunities of noting the progress and welfare of the Indians as a whole, and especially have I noticed the ambitions and aspirations and the accomplishments of boys who are the product of the reservation schools and are what may be termed the "reservation graduates." Of the students, I have paid particular attention to the graduates—and I fail to note even one who could be pointed out with pride as an exemplary citizen of the State of Oklahoma.

Of a reservation school I do not care to mention—

I have always thought the aim of the Government was to break up the old tribal customs and habits and mode of living, and fail to see where Indian children can be benefited to any extent by keeping them in reservation schools, herded together and constantly reminded of the fact that they are Indians.

I think it would be a wise plan to abolish the reservation schools.

And then he continues:

What have the reservation schools to offer the students in the way of employment during the vacation period? The Carlisle school is located in the very midst of our best and oldest American civilization and offers advantages and opportunities that can never be had at a thousand reservation schools, and for people to argue that an institution so located is a failure and not accomplishing the purpose for which it was established are talking from a pecuniary standpoint, and their only desire is to perpetuate the old system.

I may say here that I find in the reports of the Department that they have had to provide artificial labor for them out there on some of these reservations to keep them busy. The Government has paid to have artificial labor provided for Indian pupils. There is no such farming and industrial community there as that among which the nonreservation schools are located, particularly at Carlisle, where they can be taught, and where they can learn from actual experience and practice and observation these various industries.

Mr. FERRIS. Was that letter written from Fort Cobb?

Mr. OLMSTED. The letter was written from Fort Cobb, Okla.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman attempt to state that that is not an agricultural community?

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no; I do not say that. This letter which I have read is written from a farm.

Mr. FERRIS. I understood the gentleman to say that it was not an agricultural country, and that they had to furnish artificial employment.

Mr. OLMSTED. Oh, no; I was speaking of the country in which the nine reservation schools in Arizona are located, more particularly.

Mr. FERRIS. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You do not say that they are not in an agricultural country, do you?

Mr. OLMSTED. I say that the agricultural fever has not extended to that Territory to any very great extent, as compared with some other sections, and anybody would have to go a long way to find a job on a farm.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Just one question.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to finish this letter. This will interest my friend from Arizona.

After expressing his intention to attend the Democratic national convention at Denver, he concludes in these words, which are important and significant:

I dabble some in real estate, but confine myself chiefly to the raising of registered shorthorn cattle and Duroc-Jersey hogs and the growing of alfalfa. I have plenty of good reading matter and live about like the average Oklahoman and am a fair example of the Carlisle idea.

Now, there is testimony from the best possible available source. There can hardly be higher authority than that.

He also says in that letter:

I think the outing system is the greatest tonic that can be prescribed for people who have been brought up in idleness and who never have known what it is to be away from the mother's apron strings.

This outing system, which forms an important part of the Carlisle plan, and is, I believe, in accord with Commissioner Leupp's idea, is of constantly increasing value. In the first summer of this school 19 pupils were placed in families upon farms near by. That number constantly increased until last year there were as many as 893 with outing privileges. There is a great demand for these Indian pupils in the best farming country in the world. They receive the same wages as are paid other pupils for like services. It is not necessary to provide artificial work for them, as in some parts of the Indian country. There is plenty of actual work, giving them actual and valuable experiences in almost every form of labor for both boys and girls.

Carlisle pupils are now earning from $20,000 to $30,000 yearly in their outings. Upon this subject I can do no better than read from the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs for 1903 (House Document No. 5), page 14, where this language appears:

Outing system. As an adjunct to the industrial work of the schools the "outing system" is most valuable. This system consists in placing Indian boys and girls enrolled in certain schools out into the families of surrounding farmers, the boys for general farm work and the girls for various household duties. The "outing system" is brought to its greatest perfection at Carlisle, Pa., which large school is in a section peopled by thrifty farmers. In their homes the practical work of the farmer is learned by experience through several months of the year. The girls, under the tutelage of their good wives, learn domesticity and the care of the home. They usually attend public schools and are paid a stipulated sum for their labor, thus learning the value of labor in dollars and cents and the resultant benefits of thrift. The great portion of the money earned is placed to their credit at the school, and in many instances quite a "nest egg" is turned over when they leave school in addition to their practical training.

As stated, the system is most effective in Pennsylvania, where local prejudices are not brought into play, and the ratio of the Indian population to the white is relatively infinitesimal. The results of the system in the West are somewhat problematical and experimental at present. The Indian schools at Salem, Oreg., Riverside, Cal., Phoenix, Ariz., Santa Fe, N. Mex., Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., and several other points have with varying success carried out the "outing system" for several years past. Whether it will be as successful as at Carlisle is for the future to determine.

The system has its element of danger as well as of good. The boys and girls are placed in families more or less remote from the school. For the time they are removed from the watchful eyes of the employees, and the superintendent can not absolutely know that the family where the child is placed is honorable, upright, and kind, even when that is its general reputation. But with this element of danger always present there have been only a few mistakes made.

The largest number of pupils placed under the "outing system" during any one month of the past fiscal year was as follows: Carlisle, Pa., 617; Salem, Oreg., 251; Riverside, Cal., 159; Santa Fe, N. Mex., 92; Albuquerque, N. Mex., 61; Phoenix, Ariz., 50; Haskell Institute, Lawrence, Kans., 49, and Riggs Institute, Flandreau, S. Dak., 8—a total of 1,287 pupils.

Speaking of these Indian schools, the United States Board of Indian Commissioners, composed of ten eminent gentlemen who have given this subject the most thorough study from a practical as well as from a philanthropic standpoint, say in their report to the Secretary of the Interior dated March 12, 1907:

So far as we are aware no nation has ever come so near to exercising a kindly and conservative guardianship over conquered aborigines.

The white man's greed of land, it is true, led to the relentless crowding of Indian tribes westward and the marking out of new Indian reservations, and the reservation policy of the Government, although designed to be helpful, proved upon trial to be in many ways injurious to the Indians. But as fast as public conscience has been enlightened regarding the effects of reservation life upon the Indians, in Congressional action and in departmental administration the Government has manifested a most intelligent and persistent determination to do away with the evils of that policy by breaking up reservations and bringing individual Indians, through the schools and by the allotment of lands in severalty, into the body of American citizens.

And again, upon page 125, they say:

The present policy in the administration of Indian affairs may be characterized as a policy which emphasizes self-help, opens the way for it, and leads the Indians out from reservation life and tribal life into the economic, social, and civic life of American citizens.

Our honored Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Leupp, in his published report for 1906, at page 6, says:

The feature of Indian civilization upon which the Office has laid its greatest stress during the year just past has been its policy of inducing the young and able-bodied Indians who have no profitable work at home to leave their reservations and go out into the world to make a living as white men do.

Again, on page 7, he says:

Another point on which they need education is the importance of regular and often prolonged hours of labor. At home they are accustomed to work when they feel like it, and rest whenever they feel like it, usually devoting only the most favorable part of the day to their tasks.

And again, on page 12, he says:

To push even a part of these Indians into actually earning money in a big competitive world, where there are no rations, will do more than any other one thing could do to awaken the spirit of self-respect in which alone lies the doom of the ration system.

On page 13, speaking of the Zuni dam in New Mexico, he says:

Here we have Indians employed on an Indian enterprise in an Indian reservation—conditions less desirable than those of outside employment, but much better than those obtaining, for example, inside of the Sioux reservations, where it has been necessary to contrive artificially new lines of work for the sake of keeping the Indians busy.

And again, on page 16, he says:

So much for the employment of Indians in the public and semi-public labor market. But I am aware that a multitude of our fellow-citizens who take a humane interest in our aboriginal Americans still cling to the idea that the place to train an Indian to habits of industry is at his own home and on his own land. I can truthfully say that there has been no diminution of effort on the part of the Indian Office in that field either, though equal frankness demands the statement that it is, on the whole, a far less fruitful and promising expenditure of energy.

Now all these statements of our honored Commissioner, with which I fully agree, seem to me strong arguments in favor of Carlisle. It is not necessary to provide artificial work for Carlisle pupils. There is plenty of real, practical, profitable work for them to do, and they enjoy doing it. For several months during the summer they engage in it profitably, and when once they have graduated or obtained industrial certificates they are qualified to make their own way in the wide world, and most of them do. Many of them have been found extremely useful as Indian teachers and in other branches of the Indian service. A few of them served in the Spanish war. They may be found today in almost every branch of industrial life, some in the Indian country, but a large proportion of them scattered throughout the States of the Union.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the contract schools, the day schools, and the mission schools are all doing much good. I believe the boarding reservation schools are doing more good. I believe the nonreservation schools are doing the most good, and the Carlisle school the most of all. I should like to see them all maintained, not only for the sake of the Indians themselves, but for the benefit of the whole country. [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] have different ideas of the purpose that Congress has in making these provisions. To my mind the scheme that underlies the whole theory of these school appropriations is to benefit the Indian en masse. The idea of the gentleman from Michigan seems to be to afford members, individual members of these tribes, an opportunity to secure great benefits for themselves. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] tells us that these advantages are for the Indian alone, disassociated from his tribe, because he tells us that the graduates of Carlisle do not go back to the reservation. Now, it is a question of just how we can produce the most benefit for the Indians en masse that ought to be looked to in making these appropriations. That education that can be given to the Indian children in the nearest place to their tribe (their home) is that which is to be most advantageous to the tribe; and that the pursuits for which we ought to provide are those that will be useful to the tribe when the students return to the reservations or mingles with his people. I think that thought ought to be kept in mind all the time—the probabilities and the possibilities of the educated individual to lift and elevate the balance of the mass. That is the purpose for which the appropriations are made. That is the way in which the greatest benefit can be secured from them, and I doubt very much whether there is any appreciable good to the great mass of Indians by segregating an individual, carrying him thousands of miles away from his tribe, separating him for all time from the tribe, and then educating him. It will be a benefit to him and the balance of society and the rest of our general society, but it will serve no purpose in lifting up the great mass of Indians whom we are trying to benefit by the thousands and millions we have expended on the schools.

In my judgment, no children ought to be taken a great distance from the tribe. The child ought to be kept near, where the Indians can see the gradual progress he makes while completing his studies, and he ought to be in such a condition that he may help those to whom it is his duty to return and endeavor to lift them all up. These avocations that are not of any use, that can not be exercised on the reservation, ought not to be taught in the schools; but those that can be, these mechanical arts—carpentering and blacksmithing and all that class—ought to be taught so when an Indian goes among his fellows he can be of help to them.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. In all the nonreservation schools those very things are taught?

Mr. HEPBURN. I think to some slight degree they are.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. HEPBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BRUMM. Does the gentleman from Iowa view the situation from the standpoint that the Indian reservation shall be an eternal institution, kept up forever, or does he view it from the standpoint that we may gradually do away with the Indian reservations and incorporate the Indians with civilization?

Mr. HEPBURN. Of course I look forward to the time, perhaps somewhat remote, when the reservation will cease to exist; but that part of the surface of the earth as a home for a community of Indians I expect to continue for a long time—at least, I hope it may be so.

Mr. BRUMM. But that does not answer my question. My question is whether the gentleman is looking to the eternal existence of the reservation.

Mr. HEPBURN. I said I did not.

Mr. BRUMM. The gentleman said it would last for a long time. If the gentleman is looking to the eternal existence of the reservation, I see the application of his thought; but if we hope ever to abolish the reservation and have the Indians become segregated and intermixed into civilization, is there a better way than to start with the children of the Indian and not breed more Indians on the reservation, but breed them away from the reservation? [Applause.]

Mr. HEPBURN. I thought I said that I looked forward to the time, although it might be a long time, when the reservation as a reservation would cease to exist. That is what I said. If the gentleman means by the intermingling of the Indians in civilization amalgamation, I do not. I do not desire that they should be scattered throughout the length and breadth of the United States; I do not desire amalgamation with their blood. I hope that they will stay distinct, and I desire that the communities of Indians after the reservation has ceased will not cease; that they will remain where the Government has lodged them.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman never hope to have them absorbed in any way?

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not hope to have them absorbed in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes.

Mr. HEPBURN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I desire to say, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I believe both of these gentlemen are right from the viewpoint they take, but I think that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] are in error as to the general scheme of these appropriations. There is where they make their mistake. I have no objection to the education of the individual Indian, but I want the education of all of those Indians that the Government educates to be so placed and appropriations so made and schools so located that those that are the beneficiaries of these schools in their turn shall aid in elevating the balance of the mass of Indians. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE], a member of the committee, may proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the attention of this House to a paragraph in this bill which, to my mind, is more important than any other provision in this whole bill. I refer to the paragraph near the top of page 7, beginning at line 6, which reads as follows:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to negotiate with the various States in which they are situated for the disposal of any of the nonreservation Indian schools which in his judgment are no longer of value to the Indian Service, and to report the result of his negotiations to the next session of Congress.

This is important for two reasons:

First, because it deals with an item of this bill which carries an appropriation almost equal to all other appropriations including the appropriation for treaty stipulations.

Second, it is important because it marks the departure from the old system, which will have a greater effect upon the development of the Indians than any other piece of legislation which has been enacted in many years.

You know that there are three systems of educating Indian pupils. The one is the system known as the reservation school system, the other is a system known as the nonreservation-school system, and the third is what is known as the contract or sectarian system of education.

The reservation schools are both day and boarding schools, while the nonreservation schools and the sectarian schools are practically all boarding schools. It will probably interest you to know that there were enrolled in all the schools during the year 1907 30,493 pupils, 25,634 of whom were enrolled in Government schools and the remainder was divided as follows: In mission schools 4,307 and contract schools 552. The most able Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Leupp, in his report for the year 1907, states that the average cost to the Government of educating pupils in nonreservation schools is $200 each per year, and that in some schools the cost runs as high as $250 per pupil per year, while the average for the whole day-school system would be $50 per pupil per year, or one-fourth to one-fifth of what we are spending on each pupil in the boarding schools. The total enrollment in the nonreservation schools for the year 1907 was 9,485 pupils. The total cost to the Government of educating these 9,485 pupils is in round numbers $2,000,000. The total cost of educating these same 9,485 pupils in reservation schools would be considerable less than one-fourth of this amount, or about $450,000.

Mr. DARRAGH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. DARRAGH. The gentleman stated, I think, that the Commisioner had reported that the average cost per capita for pupils in the nonreservation schools was from $200 to $250.

Mr. MORSE. That is correct.

Mr. DARRAGH. Does the gentleman know what the cost of the school per capita is at Tomah, Wis.?

Mr. MORSE. I do not. I am giving the average cost.

Mr. DARRAGH. If the gentleman will figure the cost from the appropriation in the present appropriation bill before the House and divide the appropriation by the number of pupils in the school at Tomah, Wis., he will find that it amounts to $182, exclusive of the salary of the superintendent.

Mr. MORSE. Pardon me, but I did not yield to an argument. I supposed the gentleman was going to ask me a question.

Mr. DARRAGH. Is the gentleman a member of the committee?

Mr. MORSE. Yes.

Mr. DARRAGH. Will the gentleman kindly tell me why the school at Mount Pleasant, Mich., where the per capita expense is $146.90 per year, was omitted from the bill, and was it omitted by your vote, while the school at Tomah, Wis., was retained, where the per capita expense is $182 a year?

Mr. MORSE. Yes; I will. Because the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in whom we have great confidence, told us that the school at Mount Pleasant, Mich., was substantially a failure, and it was on his recommendation that these three schools, including Mount Pleasant, were discontinued. It was on his recommendation and not as a matter of expense.

Mr. DARRAGH. Will the gentleman tell me whether that was a matter of record, or whether it was at a hearing?

Mr. MORSE. It was not a regular hearing. The Commissioner was present and we consulted with him when we had this bill under consideration in the committee.

Mr. DARRAGH. I sent for a copy of the hearings, but I found there were no hearings, so called.

Mr. MORSE. Pardon me, but I would be very much obliged if the gentleman would permit me to proceed.

Mr. DARRAGH. I am very much obliged to the gentleman.

Mr. MORSE. I do not wish to criticise the management of these nonreservation schools. I believe that they are maintained as cheaply as it is possible for such schools to be maintained. I do not care particularly to criticise the quality of the work done in these schools, although I do not consider that it is above criticism, but I do wish to call the attention of this House to the fact that this Government is spending a million and a half of dollars to take Indian pupils from their homes and from the care of their parents, in many cases hundreds of miles and in some cases thousands of miles away, to give them an education which could be given them as well at home. It is a fact that these nonreservation schools give employment to 842 persons, a large number of whom, if these schools were discontinued, would be required to earn an honest living at some other employment.

You will notice also that there are in mission schools 4,307 pupils. These pupils cost the Government for the education that they are receiving in these mission schools an average of $110 each, or nearly a half a million dollars. I do not offer any criticism on the work done in these schools, but I am of the firm belief that this money could be spent to much better advantage in manual training schools on the reservation, or in agricultural or trade schools located on the reservation. A knowledge of the catechism may be necessary to admission to heaven, but it is hardly a requisite to the industrial success of the Indians.

The most able Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommended most strongly to the committee the discontinuance of a large number of these nonreservation schools, not only on the ground of economy, but on the further ground that the education secured at home was a better education than that which the pupils secured away from home. The only reason why the committee did not cut out a larger number of these schools was because there is no legal method at this time by which they could be turned over to the States, and it is for the purpose of giving the Commissioner a chance to negotiate with the States in which these schools are located for the sale of the schools to the States that this provision appears in this bill.

Of course, I realize that this $1,500,000, which to my mind we are throwing away each year, is used to pay the transportation of Indian pupils and to pay extra employees, and also for the purpose of paying the board of the pupils; while if they were educated in day schools on the reservation, the board would be furnished by the parents.

The expenditure of this vast sum of money each year can not be justified on the ground that the Indians are poor and can not afford to pay for their own education. The fact is that a large number of them are rich, and if they were poor the same thing would apply to thousands of white and colored pupils throughout the United States to whose education the General Government contributes nothing. If we board the Indians at General Government expense, why should we not board the negroes at General Government expense? The negroes are as poor as the Indians. If it is good for an Indian child to be taken away from home at the age of 6, or 7, or 8 years, why should we not go into the slums of our great cities and take from the ignorant and degraded parents there their children and send them off to some far distant school and give them an education? If this method is justifiable in one case it is justifiable in another.

Mr. BRUMM. Will the gentleman permit me right there just a short question?

Mr. MORSE. Yes sir.

Mr. BRUMM. Are negroes the wards of the nation or have they ever been?

Mr. MORSE. I do not believe the negroes or the Indians are the wards of the nation.

Mr. BRUMM. The Indians are not, you say?

Mr. MORSE. I do not so regard them.

Mr. BRUMM. Then why have you Indian reservations and why all this expenditure of money and the scandal that has been reigning for years on the reservations? The reason probably why there is opposition to the segregation of the Indians and the final dissemination of them into civilization.

Mr. MORSE. I will answer you. We have the reservations because we have made treaties with the Indians to give them reservations. These scandals, to my notion, have come largely on account of these nonreservation schools. I will tell you why these schools are here. It is because of the fact that they furnish jobs. We are employing in these nonreservation schools 842 men and women, some of whom, if these schools were abolished, would be out of jobs. If this is the only reason for their existence, and I believe that it is, I suggest that we bring these 842 employees down to Washington and have them police the new office building.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORSE. The gentleman may.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose we remove all these schools to the reservations. Will we have any jobs there?

Mr. MORSE. There will be some jobs.

Mr. BUTLER. But the gentleman thinks not as many as at the nonreservation schools.

Mr. MORSE. We will not need as many agents traveling all over the country, bringing children from Arizona, California, New Mexico and Maine to Pennsylvania.

Mr. OLMSTED. There are no agents to bring them to Pennsylvania.

Mr. BRUMM. Will you answer one question? Are they not all under civil-service—this job business of which you speak?

Mr. MORSE. I do not yield. I would like very much to answer one question propounded to me, which is this: Are there agents out looking for pupils to bring them to Carlisle? I answer that there are, and will read just a line or two here showing that they are, and showing what it is costing the Government to bring these pupils not only to Carlisle, but to the rest of the schools. I read now from the report of the Superintendent of the Haskell Institute:

At the very beginning of the last year, representatives of the schools were sent out to all parts of the United States for the purpose of soliciting pupils, and everywhere these representatives went they found representatives from other schools working just as hard for their institutions. At one agency where the representative from Haskell arrived he learned that six other schools were represented—Carlisle, Flandreau, Chilocco, Genoa, Morris, and Pipestone. Seven representatives from as many schools, each drawing a salary ranging from $50 to $125 per month, paying $3 a day for a team and driver, $2 a day for an interpreter, $2 a day for board and lodging, and a considerable sum for incidental expenses. The average daily expense would probably be about $10 for each representative, or $70 a day for the seven schools represented. Seven schools, all Government schools, doing similar work—a different grade of work possibly—and yet quite the same. This is no "rose-colored theory or picture," it is an actual experience of the past year, and only one of many. The same conditions were met in all sections of the United States on the various reservations—the Government competing with itself.

In many instances the representatives were either compelled to accept undesirable pupils or go away without any. The superintendents of reservation schools in self-protection many times hold the brightest and best because they are needed in their home schools. In other instances when reservation authorities are anxious to send children away to training schools and the young people are anxious to go, the parents will not consent. For instance, a representative of this school spent six weeks among the Apaches of Arizona, and got only one little boy. There were dozens that wanted to go to school, but the parents said no, and under the present conditions that settled the matter.

Mr. MADDEN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it necessary to do this missionary work at the expense of $70 a day to get the required attendance at the schools in order that the schools may be continued at all?

Mr. MORSE. It is necessary to do this missionary work in order to get them to attend the nonreservation schools. The Indian parent thinks as much of his child as the white parent does of his. I am informed that he is even more affectionate than the white parent. The reason why we have to try so hard to get them to go thousands of miles away is because the Indian parent loves his child and wants him at home.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. May I interrupt the gentleman just a moment?

Mr. MORSE. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I want to know how the gentleman meets this situation. The Commissioner says that he has not only to use physical force but even armed men to get the Indian children to attend the reservation schools right there among their own people. Not physical force, but firearms, and threaten them with their guns.

Mr. MORSE. I will answer the gentleman by saying that it requires force to compel the white children to attend schools, and in Wisconsin we have regular truant officers and laws compelling attendance of white children at schools, and I believe that such laws are on the statute books of other States. Therefore it requires force to compel white children to attend school.

Mr. BUTLER. Firearms?

Mr. MORSE. I think not firearms, but policemen sometimes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have ten minutes, if the Pennsylvania delegation will consent.

Mr. BUTLER. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I will say that the Pennsylvania delegation takes as little time as anybody in the House in talking. I presume we have some rights. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] have ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORSE. Now, gentlemen, I do not believe that the Members of this House realize the amount of money they are expending and appropriating each year for these nonreservation schools. The amount appropriated in 1877 was $20,000; in 1880 was $75,000; in 1890 was $1,364,000; in 1900 was $2,936,000, and in 1908 was $4,039,000, and the amount carried in this bill is almost as large.

Mr. MADDEN. How large is it now?

Mr. MORSE. I stated that the amount asked in this bill is a little less than $4,000,000.

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to know how many children attend the schools paid for by this appropriation. What cost per capita?

Mr. MORSE. In round numbers, 30,000 attend all the schools, of which a little less than 10,000 attend the nonreservation schools.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman will permit, $167 per head per year is the amount paid for the nonreservation schools.

Mr. MADDEN. A very large sum.

Mr. MORSE. I want to call the attention of this House to another thing——

Mr. MADDEN. I would like to ask this question.

Mr. MORSE. What is the question?

Mr. MADDEN. I was going to ask whether the reservation or the nonreservation schools cost less per capita to educate the children.

Mr. MORSE. I have already told you that it costs about $150 per year per pupil to educate them in the reservation schools and from $200 to $250 a year to educate them off the reservation.

Mr. OLMSTED. You can not pay over $167. The law prohibits it.

Mr. MORSE. Of course, the $200 a year includes transportation—transportation of those agents who are traveling all over the country at the Government's expense on their summer vacations hunting for poor little Indians. Now, I want to call your attention to the kind of education you are giving them in the nonreservation schools. Let us take Carlisle, for example. That is the school there has been so much talk about and I believe it to be the very best nonreservation school that we have, and doing grand work. But stop and think what you are doing. The superintendent from this school reports:

Our pupils are drawn from every part of the United States, from Maine to California, from the Lakes to the Gulf, sixty-seven different tribes being represented.

Think of it, gentlemen. The Government paying the expense of bringing these Indian pupils from every corner of the United States and Alaska to Carlisle and paying the expense of attendance, and agents to hunt for them through the forests of northern Wisconsin and over the plains of Arizona and New Mexico.

We have been guardians of these people too long. We have handled their money; we have refused to give them their property; we have made them pensioners and dependents, and their children paupers simply because we did not compel them to stand on their own feet, to be responsible for their own conduct, and confer upon them as rapidly as possible the rights of citizenship. We are furnishing on the reservations to a limited number a certain amount of education. This education is not always what the Indian desires or what he ought to have. We teach him to read and write and send him back to his home in the forest without a dollar, without a trade, with no knowledge of business, with no responsibilities, and expect him to become a self-sustaining American citizen.

I believe that no greater wrong has been perpetrated upon one race by another than the wrong which has been perpetrated upon the Indians by the white race of America. Better far that they should have been reduced to slavery and made to work for a living than to be supported in indolence and converted into beggars and dependents.

These boarding schools tend to make beggars of their pupils. They furnish tuition gratuitously; they give the pupil food, clothing, and shelter. Our Commissioner has called them "educational almshouses," and in these places we are supposed to be creating the spirit of independence and self-reliance. After a few years of this kind of training, is it any wonder that the Indian is willing to accept unearned privileges? Is it any wonder that he grows in a perfectly natural way to become a mendicant?

I have stated that this million and a half of dollars each year is wasted. I want to tell you that it is worse than wasted. It is used in the degeneration of the Indian race.

Last year there were twenty-five of these nonreservation schools, and one has been added recently, making twenty-six. The committee has cut out three, leaving twenty-three provided for by this bill. It is not the intention to deprive these pupils of educational advantages, but to carry education to them rather than to carry them to the education.

One of the weaknesses of the present system can be shown by a concrete example. In order to keep pupils in these schools it is necessary to recruit them from every part of the country. It is not possible to fill the Dakota schools with pupils from territory contiguous to the schools. So the recruiting agent is sent to Oklahoma for pupils. They are then transported halfway across the continent at Government expense, and in the course of their schooling get a smattering of the rudiments of agriculture which is adapted to the State of North Dakota.

They are then sent back to Oklahoma, where all the conditions of soil, climate, and rainfall are different, and people wonder why they are not successful farmers.

Mr. GARDNER of Michigan. I would like to ask the gentleman if he heard the letter read from a graduate of Carlisle who resided in childhood in the State of Oklahoma and who has gone back there and put in practical operation the education he got at Carlisle and made a success of life? I would like to know if the gentleman heard that letter read?

Mr. MORSE. I certainly heard that letter read. He might have been quite as successful if he had been educated at Haskell, and I am sure he would have been more successful if he had received his education at the place where he was required to put it to the practical test. Some men are successful who have received no education at all. [Applause.]

It is costing the Government then over a million and a half of dollars more each year to educate these pupils in nonreservation schools than it would cost in reservation schools, and in addition to this vast waste of money we are doing something infinitely worse. We are breaking down his feeling of self-respect by forcing upon him unasked gratuity. We are displacing a self-reliant, independent spirit by a spirit of dependence and helplessness.

Many times have I seen well-dressed, well-educated (as the term is generally used) young Indian girls go from these far distant schools home to the reservation, and in two months many of them have gone back to the blanket, the shawl, and the moccasin, back to the squalor and filth and shiftlessness of their old homes, and, worst of all, to their old tribal relations.

We hear a great deal of gush and sentiment about not allowing the white man to "plunder them of their patrimony," but if you will give them an industrial and agricultural and a trade education on the reservation there will not be much danger of their losing their patrimony. But suppose such were the case. It were infinitely better for the race to be poor and self-reliant than to be a race of rich, lazy mendicants. Better a thousand times to be born into the world a pauper than to be born a ward, to be educated at public expense and to live from the hand of charity. If you will take away every dollar and every acre that the Indian has to-day, the next generation will be a credit to his noble race and will be better qualified for self-government than the negro will be a century hence.

Mr. BRUMM. Civilization is a failure?

Mr. MORSE. Civilization is a failure when administered in that way. But if we must spend this million and a half of dollars, let us spend it in a way that it will do the Indians some good. Let us erect industrial, agricultural, and trades schools on the reservations. Let us teach the Wisconsin Indian how to farm in Wisconsin under Wisconsin climatic and soil conditions. Let us teach the Oklahoma Indian how to farm in Oklahoma, and let us teach the Oregon Indian something that will be useful to him under the conditions that exist on his reservation.

You must not only impress upon the Indian the necessity of supporting himself, but you must, by teaching him a trade, provide him with the ability to support himself.

I believe that there should be a good industrial and trades school on every reservation, and the teachers in these schools should receive liberal salaries.

I visited a reservation in northern Wisconsin last summer and inquired of an Indian farmer what his salary was, and he said it was $50 a month. He had been recently moved from southern Ohio. He was there for the purpose of teaching the young Indians how to farm, and the result of his labor showed that he knew absolutely nothing about the work which he was hired to do. This Indian farm of 480 acres was the most poorly conducted farm in northern Wisconsin, and the crop from every standpoint was a dismal failure, simply because the Department tried to secure a $1,800 man for $600.

I believe, then, if we are to spend this million and a half of dollars, we should spend it in first-class industrial, agricultural, and trades schools on the reservations amidst conditions that will confront the young man when he finishes school, and thus give him a chance in the struggle for existence. I thank the House. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma. [Applause.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, if only my home State, Oklahoma, were to be considered in this matter, I should certainly favor the reservation as against the nonreservation school and vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona to strike out the provision for the transportation of pupils to and from nonreservation schools. But I believe the proposition before the House ought to be considered on the higher and broader plane of permanent benefit to the uncivilized Indian, who is, in fact, the only real ward of the Government. [Applause.]

The theory upon which the Indian Office was founded was to make of the Indian, eventually, an independent, intelligent, and self-reliant citizen. Now, that ought to be in the mind of every man when he considers this proposition.

He should not allow the interest of his State or his part of the country to operate against the advancement and civilization of any of our citizens. [Applause.]

The Indian is not susceptive of the same manner of education as the white child. The grown-up Indian in his primitive state is simply a child, and his children are therefore simply infants. The Indian is of a retiring disposition, a timid nature—in fact, he does not take to education as easily as the white child, and there must be some inducements thrown out for him to become educated.

To my mind one of the strongest arguments against the reservation school is that the Indian is not removed from influence of uncivilized surroundings. He remains at the reservation school, on the reservation, or near-by, and is constantly in close touch with his parents. If his parents are uncivilized and he grows up with these environments, he will remain uncivilized, to a certain extent, no matter how much you educate him. But when he goes to the Carlisle school or leaves the reservation for some nonreservation school he becomes subject to all the influences of Anglo-Saxon civilization, untrammeled by the nomadic ways and superstitious customs of his tribe.

On the other hand, it may be argued that the reservation school takes civilization to the Indian, instead of leading him to civilization, and that such civilization as is taken to him will not only be beneficial to him, but will, to a certain extent, prove civilizing to his parents.

There may be some force in this argument, but knowing the Indian character and disposition as I do, I believe this idea is rather far fetched.

I do not wish to be understood as condemning either the reservation or non-reservation Indian school. They are both necessary and have done good work. Undoubtedly it will be necessary in the future to dispense with all Indian schools and allow the Indian to mix with the white children and be educated in their schools. In this event, it will, of course, be necessary to dispense with the nonreservation school first, and I understand that is being done as fast as possible. But the time has not arrived for the abolishment of all such schools, Mr. Chairman, and until this time does arrive, I shall continue to support the appropriation of money for transportation of Indians to and from nonreservation schools.

A gentleman has contended that nonreservation schools should be abolished, for the reason that a few isolated cases can be given in which Indians graduated from these schools have since become bad men. I submit that it is not logical to contend that nonreservation schools are responsible for the vile nature of such Indians, and point out the fact that you will find to-day in the penitentiary in almost every State in this Union white men who were graduated from schools near their home. [Prolonged applause.] So that, Mr. Chairman, is a very illogical argument.

Our Indians on the east side of Oklahoma, where I live, are not the beneficiaries of any of these schools—none of them go to Carlisle or any nonreservation school.

For almost four generations the Indians in my part of the country—the Five Civilized Tribes—have had regular constitutional government. We have had our legislative bodies, our executive and judicial departments, and have punished our people for infractions of law and order.

Our school system has been operated by the tribal government, and thus our people have advanced to the point where they are, in fact, civilized.

Speaking for the uncivilized Indian, for whom every man on both sides of this House ought to feel a profound responsibility, I will say that this is no time to curtail education of the Indian people. You have educated many of them to a high degree, and the Indian problem is slowly, but surely, working itself out. If the Government will learn to distinguish between the uncivilized and the intelligent, enlightened Indian, I believe that the purpose of Indian supervision will much sooner be accomplished.

I want to say that I shall vote for the rejection of this amendment. I shall vote for its rejection because I think it tends to destroy such schools as Carlisle and other great institutions, which have done so much to bring the Indian to his present state of civilization, and I do not think the time has come for such a radical change in the management of Indian educational affairs. [Loud and prolonged applause.]

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, I come from a State that contains perhaps not the largest, but one of the largest, percentages of Indian population of any State in the Union; and I believe that I can state from actual observation and experience that the North American Indian is susceptible of a high degree of education and cultivation, and that he is a fit person to amalgamate with the average of American citizenship, if he is properly educated. [Applause.] I can say this, further, Mr. Chairman, in corroboration of the testimony furnished by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], that there have been a large number of young Indians who have gone to Carlisle and Hampton and come back to their original State of residence, South Dakota, who have shown that they have greatly improved by the educational facilities of the East. They have become ministers, lawyers, merchants, farmers, and the young men and young women alike have become teachers capable of instructing the young of their race better than white people could, because they understand their peculiarities better. In other words, the tendency of the educational facilities which the Government has afforded the Indians has been to create a gradual upward movement of that race. The Indians are the wards of this Government, and we owe to that race every means of education which it is possible for us to provide; and I do not believe that we should reckon the advantages, not only to the Indian race, but to the people as a whole with whom they commingle, in mere dollars and cents. I do not believe we should be parsimonious when it comes to the question of education; whether they be red, black, or white, they are people who are sentient beings; they have reasoning powers; they have demonstrated their ability, and I believe we should afford them every reasonable opportunity for an education, so that they can compete with the white man. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Have you an Indian school in South Dakota?

Mr. HALL. We have four nonreservation schools.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Are they not doing the work for which you plead?

Mr. HALL. They are. I can say that from actual knowledge as to one of them in particular.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Just another question: If it be true that what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MORSE] has told us, that there are four or five men, at a salary aggregating $70 or $80 a day, petitioning one tribe for scholars for these various schools, does it not seem to the gentleman that that amounts substantially to a scandal, that it certainly is a method of procedure that this House ought not to tolerate?

Mr. HALL. I do not know as to the facts. I will leave that to the chairman of the committee; but I will say this, as a matter of general principle, that even if it does require expense and effort to get the Indian, the negro, or the white child to school, the effort and the expense are well justified. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I simply want to correct the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin. I did not hear the statement, but he was totally in error in saying that there were five or six men at a daily expense of $80. There are no five men in the Indian Service, from the Commission down, whose salary comes anywhere near aggregating $80 a day.

Mr. MORSE. If the gentleman will pardon a reply, I read from the report of one of the superintendents of the Haskell School, in which he said that the expense was $10 a day each; that the salary and interpreter and traveling expenses paid amounted to $10 a day, and there were seven who were after pupils on one reservation.

Mr. OLMSTED. He was talking through his hat.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; he was conversing through his chapeau. [Laughter.]

Mr. HALL. Mr. Chairman, allusion has been made on the floor here to the two different aspects of the education of the Indian—one the improvement of the individual, and the other the elevation of the tribe as a whole. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the question is not susceptible of this division, because we all realize that we must begin with the individual in order to increase the general average of Indians in the tribe. Furthermore, we have about 20,000 Indians in our State. A large portion of those Indians now own land in severalty; they are qualified voters, and they ought to be furnished with the facilities for education so that they can be intelligent voters. Having been given this power, they ought to be given the qualifications, as far as it lies in our power to give them. Now, Mr. Chairman, there is another proposition that is worthy of consideration, and which was suggested by the gentleman across the aisle a few moments ago. The Indian child does not start out in life with the same advantages that the white child has; he does not have the same home; he is not reared among those opportunities for civilization and refinement that the white child is. Consequently in dealing with him we must conform to his condition, and, that condition being so widely different from that of the ordinary white child, it must be taken into account. The white child can go to school and college and live at home, and that home influence is beneficial to him and assists him in his school life, a condition which we can not assert always as applied to the Indian.

The older Indians have by heredity acquired certain customs and manners; they speak their own language, their habits are not what we would desire to have their children follow, and therefore the more they are isolated and taken away from the influence, frequently the better. I do not say that there should not be reservation schools, but I believe the nonreservation schools, where the Indian child is surrounded by the environment of white people and civilized customs, where he becomes to a certain extent alienated from the former tribal life, is the best method of procedure. [Applause.]

Mr. McGUIRE. Mr. Chairman, I have had some opportunity to observe the good that comes from a nonreservation Indian school. There is one in my own State, and that one is in my Congressional district. For the last twenty-six years I have had an opportunity to observe and have observed the good which comes from the reservation schools. During that time I have lived either adjacent to or on an Indian reservation. I am more or less familiar with the conditions of a large number of the reservation schools in my State. I know something of the practice of obtaining these children for the reservation schools and from the reservation for nonreservation schools.

I have nothing to say against the Carlisle institution; nothing to say against any institution as an institution, except the results of the practice and policy of the Government in the past in providing for the maintenance of those institutions.

When these nonreservation schools were built the Indian was different from the Indian of to-day. I lived at this time upon what was once the Pawnee Indian Reservation. There is scarcely a Pawnee Indian child to-day that is not attending school upon their own reservation or upon some non-Indian reservation school. I want to say that there probably is not at this time a single pupil taken from the Pawnee tribe to a nonreservation school that there was not applied in his taking a greater or less degree of force or persuasion. I know what the practices are with reference to the Pawnee tribe of Indians.

Just north of me is the Osage tribe. On that reservation is a school, and the overwhelming majority of the Osage Indian children are attending that school, and day after day I have seen the agents of the nonreservation schools come to this reservation and use every possible device that was consistent and proper to induce those Indian children to leave their parents and go to the nonreservation school.

I have seen the graduate return from the nonreservation school, and I have seen him come from the reservation school. Among these tribes to-day in Oklahoma, among the Indians of the State of Oklahoma the overwhelming majority of the successful young men and young women from the tribe are those who were educated on the reservation and not off the reservation. [Applause.]

I see no reason why, if the same conveniences, the same opportunities are afforded on the reservation, the Indian child may not stay with its parents. You take them to-day to Oklahoma where they are accessible to the reservation school, and the children will go to the boarding school for a week and on Saturday the parents will come and get them and they will work on the farm and be a comfort to their parents, and not only a comfort to them, but positively useful, and they are thereby more practical.

There may have been a time when the nonreservation schools were necessary. There may have been a time when you wanted to take the child away from the wild and uncivilized tribe, away from the wild influences, but to-day wherever you find an Indian you find a dozen white men; wherever you find one Indian wielding an influence you find a dozen white men wielding a better influence, and I say the conditions being different from what they were when these institutions were established, it seems to me that the policy of the Government of the United States ought to at some time change. I shall vote for this bill as it is. I shall vote this time for these nonreservation schools, but I want to say here and now that I am most heartily in sympathy with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs when he says that the day of nonreservation schools is past. We can have the same educational facilities at home for the Indian; we can offer him every opportunity there that is offered him elsewhere, and at far less cost to the Government of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word on the latter phase brought out by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE]. In the far Southwest there are a great many communities of Indians where it would not be practicable for the Government to maintain schools on the reservations. That situation is being met by the schools off the reservation, the Sherman Institute, at Riverside, having a large attendance. I think the crux of this question was brought out by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] when he interrogated the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] as to what was to be the ultimate purpose of this scheme of education; whether we are going to try to keep the Indian an Indian and on a reservation, living in tribal relations, or whether we are going to develop his intellectuality and his individuality until he can take his place among the people of the nation and be a part of the society and the industry of the country. I have had no great opportunity to study the Indian question at close hand, but I have had some opportunity to see the result of the work being done at the Sherman Institute, which I suppose is characteristic of the work of the nonreservation schools. It appears to me that from the standpoint of the Indian that goes to the school and the influence that must be exerted upon the others at home, it is altogether good. I fancy we are not going to change very much the nature or the characteristics of the elderly Indian on the reservation. They will be Indians until they die; but the younger generation is going to be induced to change its characteristics and its habits of life and its ambitions, not only by the education on the reservation, but it occurs to me more so by taking them away from the influence of the older Indians and putting them in touch with actual civilization. Of the industrial feature of the nonreservation school, there can be no question. They are turning out mechanics, house servants, laborers of various degrees of skill, that are not only of great benefit to the communities where they mingle, but a very great help to the Indians themselves. I do not see how, having entered upon the task of educating the Indians in these scattered localities, where it would not be possible to maintain reservation schools, the Government can now turn its back upon them and say that those schools shall be closed. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. GARDNER] quoted from the report of the Commissioner on Indian Affairs and said, in substance, If we can not take the opinion of the Commissioner on Indian Affairs, whose opinion can we take? Of course he did not apply that to the general subject, but only to a particular proposition. Now, what is the proposition involved before the House? It is not whether Indians shall be educated, but in what schools and how they shall be educated—whether it shall be in schools apart from the reservations, called nonreservation schools, or schools on the reservations, called either boarding schools or day schools.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. On or near the reservations.

Mr. MANN. On or near the reservations. What does the Commissioner on Indian Affairs say in regard to it? The present Commissioner on Indian Affairs, we are told by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], is the equal, if not the superior, of any person who has ever filled that office and is as competent to advise Congress upon any question relating to Indians as anyone in the United States. In his recent report, page 24, he says:

> For the continuance of twenty-five nonreservation schools there is no longer any excuse. We spend on these now nearly $2,000,000 a year, which is taken bodily out of the United States Treasury, and is, in my judgment, for the most part a mere robbery of the tax-laden Peter to pay the nontax-laden Paul and train him in false, undemocratic, and demoralizing ideas. The same money spent for the same number of years on expanding and strengthening the Indian home schools would have accomplished a hundredfold more good, unaccompanied by any of the harmful effects upon the character of the race.

[Applause.]

On page 26 of the report the Commissioner says:

> An objection to all boarding schools for Indian children, whether on or off the reservations, is that the pupil grows up amid surroundings which he will never see duplicated in his own home. Steam heating, electric lighting, mechanical devices for doing everything—these cultivate in him a contempt for the homely things which must make up his environment as a poor settler in a frontier country. His ideas of the relations of things are distorted; for his mind is not developed enough to enable him to sift and assort his observations and distinguish between essentials and nonessentials, between the comforts which are within his reach and the luxuries which are beyond his legitimate aspirations.

On page 27, referring to the expense of one of these schools, the Commissioner says:

> The next school on whose statistics my eye falls has a $2,500 superintendent and sixty employees, including among them, in addition to the classes represented in the list already given, a treasurer of the outing system, a stenographer separate from the clerk and assistant clerks, a disciplinarian, a kindergartner, a music teacher, a stewardess, a superintendent of industries, a hospital cook, a gardener, a wagonmaker, a mason, a painter, a printer, and an assistant printer and librarian. The cost of this school to the Government, pooling all the appropriations, would reach about $250 per pupil. Yet these figures are what remain after we have, in this Office, trimmed down, with what looks like a merciless hand, the estimates turned in by the superintendents in their zeal. And I could cite other cases with larger figures still. The Congress itself does not realize what it is spending uselessly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. Now the question is not whether we shall abandon the education of the Indian. The Commissioner says:

> Contrast such an exhibit with that presented by the day school, where we have a simple building and a simple equipment and employ only a teacher and a housekeeper; or if the school outgrows the dimensions within which these two persons can do all the necessary work, we employ more teachers. The cost per pupil ranges from about $36 a year to $67, according to the number enrolled in a single school. A safe average for the whole day school system would be $50 per pupil, or from one-fourth to one-fifth what we are spending on each pupil in the boarding schools. In other words, we can give school privileges to four or five young Indians for what one costs us at a boarding school; or, to make a more sweeping calculation, we are spending to-day at least twice as much as could be profitably spent to give our whole Indian school population the facilities they actually need—

Gentlemen talk about doing away with the education of the Indians, when the proposition is to give all the Indians a proper education instead of giving to a few a pampered education. But the Commissioner has well foreseen the difficulties of putting his proposition into effect. He says as a reason why his plan may not be followed:

> Again, there will come to the front the persons, either public men or prominent private citizens, who have procured the establishment of the nonreservation schools in or near their home towns, expecting that these institutions would stand forever as monuments to the authors of their being and as show places to attract visitors. The townspeople in many cases will doubtless object to any movement on the part of the Government calculated to alter the character, reduce the prestige, or imperil the local profitableness of their particular Indian school. "Abandon all the rest, if you must," they will plead, "but spare ours."

Gentlemen, I appeal to the patriotism of the gentleman from the Carlisle school district, of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, of the gentleman from Virginia, of the combination which has schools in their own States, to abandon the idea that their fame must rest upon securing an appropriation, not for the education of the Indians, but to prevent the education of all the Indian children, in order that a few may have the pleasure of visiting Carlisle or other local civilized centers. [Applause.]

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I would not take the time of the committee to make any remarks on this proposition, but for the effect the action of this House on this amendment might have on the Commissioner of Indian Affairs if we express ourselves on it, as I think we must. Unless there be explanation made, I am opposed to adopting this amendment. I am opposed to it because I believe the Committee on Indian Affairs met this proposition and went as far as we can safely go at this time. I do not believe we ought to stand here and discuss the relative merits of the college and the common school. No, my friends; I feel with the Indian Commissioner, that the reservation school ought to be encouraged. I believe the Indian Commissioner is right when he says that the reservation school can do a greater measure of good among the Indians; but at the same time, do not strike down all these other schools at once. We must come about this gradually, and this committee, on page 7 of this bill, has authorized the Indian Commissioner to enter into negotiations in order to release from Government control and from Government authority such of these schools stationed over the country as he believes can be safely turned over to the States. I would not, in voting on this amendment, though, let it be understood that this House stood against the policy of encouraging in every reasonable way the upbuilding of the reservation schools. My friends, look at this country. What has been the mainstay and strength of our civilization? It has been the common schools; not your colleges, not your universities. They all have their field to work in, and I would not raise my hand against them. But encourage the common schools. Look at those portions of our country that in the early day reached out their hands to the little poor boy and girl and took them into the common schools, and you find a citizenship built upon a solid foundation. At the same time I would not strike down the Carlisle school. When the question came up in the committee, I said that Carlisle had done a great work; that Haskell had done a great work, to my knowledge, and that we should retain them both. Let us make this appropriation this year, but say to the Commissioner, "Go to work gradually and accomplish this great work that you have undertaken. You will find many obstacles in it, but the Congress will be behind you. We will commission you to enter into negotiations and submit for our action in the future the release to the States of such of these schools as you feel can be released." We have made no appropriations for some of the schools. We expect complaint on that. We thought that we could safely say now that we could dispense with some of them without injury to this great work.

I am opposed to the adoption of the amendment because I believe it is untimely, and yet I am in sympathy with the proposition enunciated by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. I believe we ought to go step by step in this work and bring education home to the masses. I believe that education in the reservation schools has an effect, not alone on the pupil, but on the parent, just as it does in a common school. Whenever you have the school child coming back at night and bringing his books to his home and carrying on his work and study under parental authority, you have the highest type of influence, combining the influence of parent over child with the influence that a child exercises over the parent. I believe there is a great work for the reservation and some of the nonreservation schools. But let us allow the appropriation to go as the committee has it, without limitation, except as in the printed bill, and adopt along with that the paragraph on page 7, which gives the Indian Commissioner authority to dispense with the useless schools.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to close debate on this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose, and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PERKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15219, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 558. An act to extend to the port of Chattanooga, Tenn., the privileges of immediate transportation of dutiable merchandise without appraisement; and

H. R. 14011. An act amending an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes."

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and concurrent resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3932. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to convey to the State of Minnesota certain lands in the county of Carlton, Minn., and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Senate concurrent resolution 33.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the balances of the appropriations for the construction of vessels for the Light-House Establishment appropriated for in the acts of Congress approved April 28, 1904 (33 Stat., 468), March 3, 1905, (33 Stat., 1171), June 30, 1906 (34 Stat., 659, 660, 710, and 711), and March 4, 1907 (34 Stat., 1317, 1318, and 1319), are hereby made available for the pay of officers and crews, the payment of consular fees, port dues, and exchange, the purchase of provisions, rations, fuel, engineer stores and supplies, pilotage, water, laundry, and all other necessary incidental expenses in the transfer of the following-named vessels of the Light-House Establishment from Tompkinsville, N. Y., where they are to be delivered when completed, to their respective stations: Tenders for the twelfth light-house district; for the thirteenth light-house district; for the Pacific Ocean; for Lake Superior; relief light-vessel for the Pacific coast; Columbia River light-vessel, Oregon; Swiftsure Bank light-vessel, Washington—to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. SHERLEY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for an indefinite period, on account of sickness in family.

Mr. CHANEY, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence for one week, on account of illness of his mother.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the request that the bill (H. R. 10577) to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma be referred to the Indian Committee. The bill is now standing on the Calendar. There was a mistake in the reference before. It is a matter properly for the Committee on Indian Affairs. It has been reported by the Land Committee, but I desire to have it go to the Committee on Indian Affairs for their investigation.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to recommit the bill indicated. The Clerk will read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10577) to extend the time of payments on certain homestead entries in Oklahoma.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Reserving the right to object, I do not understand exactly what this proposition is.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is the bill, if I may inject myself, that was under consideration the other day, brought up by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCGUIRE] and consideration objected to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It is an amendment to certain laws which have been enacted after a report on bills from the Committee on Indian Affairs. Really the bill ought never to have gone to the Committee on the Public Lands, but it was favorably reported. The gentleman's request is that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Indian Affairs, where it should have originally gone.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to ask unanimous consent to revise, extend, and distend some remarks I made on the Indian appropriation bill and omitted to ask consent in the committee.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

FRANCHISES IN PORTO RICO.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

In accordance with the provisions of section 32 of an act of Congress entitled "An act temporarily to provide revenue and a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes," approved April 12, 1900, I transmit herewith certified copies of three franchises granted by the executive council of Porto Rico to Messrs. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 7, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF TEXAS.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill (S. 485), to create a new division for the northern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Amarillo, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire the statement read?

Mr. JENKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, is there not a rule that these conference reports have to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman that the rule was followed, and the conference report printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. All right.

The conference report is as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 485) to create a new division for the northern judicial district of Texas and to provide for terms of court at Amarillo, Tex., and for a clerk for said court, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 1: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

"After the word 'Texas,' in line 2, page 2, insert: 'shall be held twice each year at the city of Amarillo, in Potter County, Tex., beginning on the third Monday of April and the fourth Monday of September in each year;'" and the House agree to the same.

JOHN J. JENKINS,
C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
R. L. HENRY,
Managers on the part of the House.

C. D. CLARK,
KNUTE NELSON,
C. A. CULBERSON,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The statement was read, as follows:

STATEMENT.

It was the intention of the House to change section 2 of the Senate act so as to provide in the law the time when the court was to be held. The act provided that the judges of the courts should fix the times at which the courts were to be held. The House amendment intended to provide for the change by striking out all of lines 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7 of section 2 of the Senate act, inserting in lieu thereof:

"Beginning on the third Monday of April and the fourth Monday of September in each year."

It is agreed that the amendment striking out line 3 was a mistake. In order to correct the mistake and have the act provide the times when the court should be held, it was agreed to by the conferees that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 1, and agree to the same with amendment, as follows:

After the word "Texas" in line 2, section 2, page 2, insert: "shall be held twice each year at the city of Amarillo, in Potter County, Tex., beginning on the third Monday of April and the fourth Monday of September in each year."

And that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 2, and agree to the same.

JOHN J. JENKINS,
C. E. LITTLEFIELD,
R. L. HENRY,
Managers on the part of the House.

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. JENKINS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT OVER.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

PAY OF COMMISSIONERS FROM THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following joint resolution, by direction of the Committee on Appropriations, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution [H. Res. 130] providing for salaries of the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands.

Resolved, etc., That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Representatives is authorized to pay to each of the two Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands, out of the appropriation made for the current fiscal year for compensation of the Members of the House of Representatives, the same rate of compensation as is authorized and being paid to the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico, together with $2,000 each, as authorized by law, in lieu of mileage.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask what this does. Is the pay of the Resident Commissioners now provided by law, and how does this change it?

Mr. TAWNEY. The pay of the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico is $7,500 per annum, the same as the salary of a Member or Senator, and in lieu of mileage the Resident Commissioner receives a fixed sum, the exact amount of which I do not now recall; but that is not material in this case, for the reason that the act of July 1, 1902, creating a civil government for the Philippine Islands authorized the election of two Commissioners and expressly provided for compensation in lieu of mileage and travel from Manila to Washington, $2,000. That is the amount that is carried in this resolution.

Mr. MANN. Does not the act provide for salaries for these Commissioners?

Mr. TAWNEY. It provides for a salary of the Commissioners which was the salary at that time of a Member of Congress. Since that time the salaries of Members of Congress have been increased to $7,500. The salary of the Commissioner for Porto Rico has been increased to $7,500. Now, it was not thought wise on the part of the committee to report a resolution making any distinction between the compensation paid to the Commissioners from the Philippine Islands and the compensation paid the Commissioner from Porto Rico, so their salary, by the resolution, is made the same as the salary of the Resident Commissioner from Porto Rico.

Mr. MANN. Out of what fund is the money paid?

Mr. TAWNEY. Out of the appropriation for salaries of Senators and Members of the House.

Mr. MANN. Is that provision under the original act?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes; it is paid out of the appropriation for salaries of Members and Senators.

Mr. DALZELL. The same as Delegates from the Territories?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Minnesota is to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from the further consideration of the resolution and consider the same as in the House. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAWNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

FORT RILEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12398, to authorize the War Department to transfer to the State of Kansas certain lands now a part of the Fort Riley Military Reservation, and that the same be considered in the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12398 and consider the same in the House.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the War Department be, and the same is hereby, authorized to transfer, not to exceed 1 acre of ground, to the State of Kansas whereon is located the ruins of the old station building which was the first Kansas Territorial capitol at Pawnee, situated on the United States military reservation at Fort Riley, Kans., the metes and bounds to be determined by the War Department.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following: "That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to grant to the State of Kansas the right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a tract of land, not to exceed 1 acre of ground, whereon is located the ruins of the old station building which was the first Kansas Territorial capitol at Pawnee, now included in military reservation of Fort Riley, Kans., for the preservation of said ruins as a historical relic, the metes and bounds of said tract to be determined by the Secretary of War."

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman how much is this acre of land worth?

Mr. ANTHONY. I should imagine its intrinsic value would be about $25.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Is it so located that it would interfere in any way with the Government use of this reservation?

Mr. ANTHONY. It is not; it will interfere with the use of the reservation in no way. The bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs and has the indorsement of the War Department.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. It is purely for historical purposes?

Mr. ANTHONY. Purely for historical purposes, the preservation of the first capitol of the State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was engrossed and read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ANTHONY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. LOUIS RIVER BETWEEN WISCONSIN AND MINNESOTA.

Mr. BEDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 16050) to authorize the Interstate Transfer Railway Company to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Interstate Transfer Railway Company, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Wisconsin, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a railroad bridge and approaches thereto across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota at the most feasible point in section 12, in township 48 north, range 15 west, in the State of Wisconsin, to a point opposite in section 11, in township 48 north, range 15 west, in the State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges across navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That the actual construction of said bridge shall be commenced within two years and be completed within four years from the date of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out the proviso in lines 4, 5, 6, and 7, page 2.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BEDE, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

BILLS ON PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. FOSTER of Vermont in the chair.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to take up for consideration the bill H. R. 15372, and I ask that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with except by title.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont moves to take up the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker acts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be omitted.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill ought to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk began the reading of the bill.

During the reading of the bill,

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How does this bill come up before the committee at this time? Of course I understand it is on the Private Calendar, but it is not the first on the Private Calendar.

Mr. HASKINS. This is a bill on the Private Calendar.

Mr. DALZELL. Bills under the Private Calendar, unless otherwise ordered, come up in their order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will say in response to the inquiry that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] moves that the committee take up this bill.

Mr. DALZELL. But the motion has not been passed on.

Mr. HASKINS. Oh, yes, it has; there certainly was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill is being read pending the motion.

Mr. HASKINS. I asked unanimous consent, and there was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Clerk will continue the reading of the bill.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Vermont to take up the bill for consideration.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say for the information of the House that this bill embraces the findings of the Court of Claims in 321 cases represented by an equal number of bills, which were introduced chiefly in the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses and were referred by the action of this House to the Court of Claims to find the facts and report them back to this House. A few of those bills that went to the Court of Claims by reference from the House were in prior Congresses, but very few of them, and were not acted upon and certified back to the House until recently. This bill has three classes of claims: First, for stores and supplies taken by the Federal Army from loyal citizens of the States that were in insurrection, amounting according to the findings of the court to $255,436.42; the second class is for officers' pay, amounting to $36,910.53, and the third is by churches, colleges, and lodges that were occupied by Federal troops during the war, amounting to $21,198.28. This makes a total amount of $313,545.28. Mr. Chairman, this is a reasonable bill, when we take into consideration the fact that the omnibus war claims bill of the Fifty-ninth Congress failed of passage. Therefore it includes what should have been in two bills instead of one. In making up this bill the committee has been guided entirely by the findings of the Court of Claims. In selecting these findings several of them have been laid aside and reported upon adversely and others not included here will probably receive an adverse report before this Congress adjourns. It includes nothing but the findings of the court on bills referred to it by the House. Unlike the bill that was reported here during the last session of Congress, we have included no Senate bills and no House bills of a miscellaneous character, but have simply confined it to the findings of the court. In the preparation of this bill it required a great deal of labor. The chairman of this committee has worked faithfully more than three weeks upon it. He has carried the papers to his house, the findings of the court, and has investigated and read them, endeavoring to understand what the court has found and what the court means by its findings, and has done this until the wee small hours of the morning. I believe we have a bill here which should be passed. If the Government is desirous of paying honest indebtedness, as every individual ought to pay his, and rest under the same obligation to pay it as I do to pay the rent of my apartment, there can be no question about the passage of this bill which we have reported to this House. [Applause.]

In the matter of stores and supplies in fixing the valuation of property taken, the court adopted this rule which certainly was just to the Government, and that was to ascertain what the Government was paying at that time for similar stores through the Quartermaster's and the Commissary Departments of the Government. I say this is certainly fair to the Government, if not fair to the claimants, who have been without their interest these many years. The court in the first place, when a bill is certified by the House to that tribunal, ascertains and reports upon the loyalty of the claimant during the civil war, or the loyalty of the deceased who owned the property at the time it was taken, and your committee, in singling out these findings, have cast aside all findings unless it was held affirmatively by the court that the parties were loyal to the Government during the suppression of the rebellion. In the second place, we have been particular to understand what the court has decided, what they have found was the fact as to the property concerned, and where it went to. If there was any doubts in those findings as to whether the General Government or the Federal Army had the use of it, we have laid that finding aside and have not included it in this bill.

Or in some instances the property taken may have been sold, and we find further the court's affirmative finding as a matter of fact as to whether that property, or the avails of that property, had been covered into the Treasury of the United States. So in every case that we have reported here where there has been a taking of property we have reported none except where it has been affirmatively determined by the Court of Claims, the tribunal created by this very body for the adjudication of facts in relation to these matters, that they have affirmatively found that the General Government or the Federal Army had the use of this property that was taken. There is another class of cases which we have reported favorably upon, and that is the pay of officers of the Federal Army during the suppression of the rebellion. Here, for instance, is the case of a first sergeant of a company. The second lieutenancy was vacant, and the governor of his State commissioned him as second lieutenant, or the first lieutenancy may have been vacant, through death or resignation, and the governor of the State to which he belonged commissioned him as first lieutenant or even as lieutenant-colonel or major, or colonel in command of the regiment, and in cases where they were assigned to duty according to the increased rank to which they had been promoted, and were discharging the duties and assuming the responsibilities of the office to which they had been commissioned, but failed of muster for various causes, then we report in favor of the payment of those claims the difference between the amount they received when they were mustered out under the inferior rank and the amount they should have received if they had been mustered out in the grade to which they had been commissioned by the governor of their State and wherein they were performing the duties of the office to which they had been commissioned.

Mr. KEIFER. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HASKINS. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. I think it was the law in the beginning of the late Spanish war that all commissioned officers, regardless of the rank to which they were commissioned and mustered, were entitled to the pay of the rank they exercised.

Mr. HASKINS. I am coming to that in a moment. I have said there were various causes which led to these officers promoted not being mustered at the time. Some of them before an opportunity to muster were killed in battle, others were taken prisoners and from various other causes beyond their control, because it was a rule at that time of the War Department that a company or a regiment that had fallen below the minimum number was not entitled to muster; therefore the War Department refused to muster them in such cases. I want to say, soon after the war these officers who had been refused muster presented their claims to the War Department for payment for the difference from what they did receive and what they should have received if they had been actually mustered out in the superior grade, but they were disallowed for the reason in many cases that their regiment or companies had fallen below the minimum. It was the rule. In 1866 a joint resolution was passed by the Congress endeavoring to relieve them and did relieve them to a certain extent, but not these particular cases; but in 1897, on the 24th of February, 1897, a law was passed by Congress entitled "An act to provide for the relief of certain officers and enlisted men of the volunteer forces," 29 Statutes at Large, page 93, and under the provisions of this act of February 24, 1897, these officers that the accounting officers of the War Department refused to allow their claims are now entitled to be paid, but on presenting their claims to the War Department for the second time they were refused consideration upon the technical ground that where the Department has once made a ruling upon particular cases they will not reverse that, but so far as the Department is concerned everything stands res adjudicata there. Therefore the only remedy that these brave officers and the widows and orphan children of those who died in the service have is to come to Congress for relief, and these are claims from Maine to California, and not a large amount, $36,910.23, I think, as I gave it, which cleans up all these old cases where they are entitled to receive their pay under existing statutes, but can not, by reason of the iron-clad rules and regulations of the War Department. Then another class of cases is where the Federal Army during the civil war occupied churches, and in some instances a college, and in one instance, I think, a Masonic lodge room, for barracks and for hospital purposes, property that from the very beginning has been held sacred under the law of nations, used and desecrated, injured, and now they come here to Congress for relief, and the Court of Claims, in measuring the amount which these eleemosynary institutions and churches are entitled to receive, finds simply the fair rental value of the building during its occupancy by the Federal Army, and in addition thereto such expenses as they have been put to to put the building in a reasonable state of repair, the ordinary wear and tear excepted, which is a fair basis upon which to fix the valuation or the rental value of this property.

Now, I want to say right here, in conclusion, to the Members of this House that I assumed for the committee the responsibility and the duty of examining all these several findings, and I did it with a fair and impartial eye, having in mind not only justice to the claimants who have been so long deprived of their just rights, but at the same time of being actually and absolutely fair to the General Government, and wherever there is any doubt in relation to those matters I have resolved the doubt in making up this bill against the claimant and in favor of the General Government. I believe that there never was a cleaner bill ever presented to this body than the one which you have now before you. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman one or two questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. HASKINS. Certainly.

Mr. KEIFER. In the large number of claims in the bill are there any included that have not been referred to the Court of Claims?

Mr. HASKINS. Not one, and not one except such as has been referred to the Court of Claims by this very body. We have included no Senate claims.

Mr. SULZER. This bill carries the judgment of the Court of Claims?

Mr. HASKINS. It is not a judgment; it is a finding of fact.

Mr. KEIFER. Under the Bowman Act?

Mr. HASKINS. Yes.

Mr. KEIFER. I want to ask, in looking over the findings of fact in these cases, or in some of them, if the committee rejected any claims that were reported from the Court of Claims?

Mr. HASKINS. We have, and reported adversely upon them already; and there are several we have laid aside and withheld making any report out of deference to the Members who have them in charge.

Mr. KEIFER. And I would like to ask the gentleman whether or not the Court of Claims, in considering these claims that were referred by this Congress to that court, took up the question of loyalty in every case.

Mr. HASKINS. In every instance; and I want to add right here, in every single, solitary case the General Government was represented before the Court of Claims by counsel from the Department of Justice.

Mr. KEIFER. I understand that the Court of Claims, in their findings in regard to colleges, universities, churches, and Masonic lodges, found that the owners were loyal and the claimants were loyal.

Mr. HASKINS. The owners were loyal; and let me say right here that the Southern Claims Commission refused any consideration of that character of claims, because they claimed and reported that they were not citizens; that a corporation was not a citizen of the United States, and, therefore, loyalty could not be brought into question.

Mr. KEIFER. But the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the rule of loyalty applies as well to a corporation as to an individual.

Mr. HASKINS. Exactly so.

Mr. GARRETT. But not of a church.

Mr. KEIFER. Now, one other question. Are there any claims included here for mere devastation of property?

Mr. HASKINS. There are none. There are claims made, but the court refused to assess any damages for them.

Mr. KEIFER. Are there any claims of that kind included in this bill?

Mr. HASKINS. Vandalism is not included; destruction of property by act of war or necessity of war—not one.

Mr. KEIFER. Property destroyed in battle or in the movement of an army through the country; but property taken for the purpose of providing for the Army, all have been rejected?

Mr. HASKINS. All rejected, unless the court finds that the property was taken for the use of the Federal Army and by order of some superior officer.

Mr. KEIFER. Well, I am satisfied.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HASKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that there were no claims in the bill except those that had been referred by this body to the Court of Claims. Just what does the gentleman mean by that?

Mr. HASKINS. I mean that this body referred to the Court of Claims bills that were introduced here under the Tucker Act. Bills that were introduced, that come within the jurisdiction of the Bowman Act, are sent direct from the committee to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MANN. How many claims are there in this bill that were referred to the Court of Claims by the House of Representatives?

Mr. HASKINS. None except such as were referred by the House.

Mr. MANN. How many are there—can the gentleman tell?

Mr. HASKINS. There are only about 330 in all.

Mr. MANN. Referred by the House?

Mr. HASKINS. There are 321 claims included in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I know the gentleman did not intend to mislead the House, but certainly the gentleman's statement would lead the House to believe that these claims had been referred to the Court of Claims by the House. Now, the facts are that these claims have never been before the House at all, except the bills; they have been referred to the Court of Claims by the committee.

Mr. HASKINS. All claims arising under the Tucker Act——

Mr. MANN. How many are there in this bill?

Mr. HASKINS. I can not tell.

Mr. MANN. Then I can say that I do not think there are a dozen all told.

Mr. HASKINS. Now, so far as the bills introduced under the Bowman Act are concerned, the very act itself, which is an act of Congress, authorizes the Committee on Claims to refer them direct.

Mr. MANN. I understand, and I know the gentleman did not intend to mislead the committee, and his statement would have been stronger if he had stated that these claims were referred under the Bowman Act by the committee itself, because the gentleman probably knows, what is certainly the fact, that it is more to the interest of the claimants to have the claims referred under the Tucker Act than it is under the Bowman Act, because under the Bowman Act the Court of Claims can not report upon a claim which is contrary to any existing provision of law, which means has been barred by any limitation, while under the Tucker Act there is no such limitation on the Court of Claims. Now, as I understand this bill—and that is the reason that I wanted to attract the gentleman's attention—it endeavors to cover only those cases which have been referred by the Committee on War Claims under the Bowman Act, subject to all limitations that Congress has heretofore placed upon claims, and does not include the claims under the Tucker Act, because they go to the other end of the Capitol, when they have been referred by resolution of either the House or Senate—claims under that act have no limitation at all, and most of which have no merit in them.

Mr. HASKINS. Most of the claims under the Tucker Act are referred by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. That is what I know, but I did not mention the body.

Mr. HASKINS. I do not want to be misunderstood. I want to be perfectly honest.

Mr. MANN. We all know that that is the gentleman's desire and intention.

Mr. HASKINS. Now, we have an item on page 35, commencing at line 1: "To Warwick Hutton, administrator of the estate of Samuel Morrison, deceased, late of Randolph County, $1,340."

Now, a gentleman, a Member of this House, came down to the committee room with that finding of the Court of Claims and asked to have it inserted in the bill. It was inserted in the bill. I have been over this bill and examined it two or three different times, and upon one of my reviews I found that it was a claim that went to the Court of Claims in 1902. Well, that led me to an investigation to know why that claim had not been paid, and upon investigation—and I will say right here that we have documents in our committee room; that no other Department of the Government has to furnish information—I found that that claim was allowed and passed by the Fifty-eighth Congress and had been paid by the Treasury Department. We have been in constant communication with the War Department and the Treasury Department in relation to all these matters, and I propose on the second reading of the bill when it is reached to have that item struck out. We do not want anything in this bill that is not right.

Mr. DALZELL. I want to ask the gentleman a question. Do I understand that the claims embodied in this bill were sent directly from the committee to the Court of Claims?

Mr. HASKINS. Certainly; under the provisions of the Bowman Act; and nearly all are of that character.

Mr. DALZELL. Under the rules of the House claims can not be sent to the Court of Claims without the action of the House.

Mr. HASKINS. Certainly; and by a law of this Congress which stands upon our statute books.

Mr. MANN. I will explain to the gentleman——

Mr. DALZELL. Wait a moment. I want to understand this. I may be in error, but Rule XXIII, section 3, says:

> All motions or propositions involving a tax or charge upon the people; all proceedings touching appropriations of money, or bills making appropriations of money or property, or requiring such appropriations to be made, or authorizing payments out of appropriations already made, or releasing any liability to the United States for money or property, or referring any claim to the Court of Claims, shall be first considered in a Committee of the Whole, and a point of order under this rule shall be good at any time before the consideration of a bill has commenced.

Now, what I want to understand is this: Does this bill embody claims that were sent to the Court of Claims by the Committee on War Claims without having the question first considered in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. HASKINS. It does, under the Bowman Act, and there never was a bill of this kind that passed this Congress but what it included such references.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will permit me, I think I can——

Mr. HASKINS. One moment. It is true the gentleman from Pennsylvania has read from the rules of the House. I submit to the Members of the House, while we certainly have a very able Committee on Rules, whether a rule made by this House can override an express statute passed by Congress itself.

Mr. DALZELL. The point I want to get at is this: Is there a controversy between the committee, relying on Congressional legislation, and the rules of the House? In other words, has the committee been acting in violation of the rule or without regard to the rule of the House upon the assumption that the House rule was not properly made?

Mr. HASKINS. I did not know what the rule of the House was in that respect, but the committee have been governed by the law.

Mr. MANN. I think I can set the two gentlemen right.

Mr. DALZELL. I am only after information.

Mr. MANN. The rule the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to says that a bill to refer a claim to the Committee on Claims shall come before the House, and we have on the Calendar to-day joint resolutions to refer claims to the Court of Claims. They are reported from the Committee on War Claims to the House, and are on the Union Calendar; but the law provides, and it is not contradictory to the rule at all, that when any claim is pending before any committee of the Senate or House of Representatives, or before either House of Congress, which involves an investigation and determination of facts, the committee or House may cause the same, with the vouchers, papers, and proofs pertaining thereto, to be transmitted to the Court of Claims of the United States, and so forth, and the Court of Claims shall report back the facts in the case.

Now, if these claims had been brought in in the shape of a bill or resolution referring them to the Court of Claims, they would have to come before the House; but the bills are introduced to pay the claims, and thereupon the committee, under the law, refers the bill to the Court of Claims for a statement of facts. That is the Bowman Act. It is not at all contradictory of the rules; but I may say, in reference to that matter, the reason I ask the gentleman's attention to it is this: It has been the practice to refer certain claims under the Bowman Act, and when a claim could not pass muster under the Bowman Act, then it has been the practice to obtain its reference under the so-called "Tucker Act." The Bowman Act contains this provision:

> Nor shall the said court have jurisdiction of any claim against the United States which is now barred by virtue of the provisions of any law of the United States.

That provision is not in the Tucker Act. When the committee sends a claim to the Court of Claims it is controlled by that provision of law; but when the House, under the Tucker Act, or the Senate, under the Tucker Act, refers a claim to the Court of Claims there is no such provision in the law, and most of the claims that come under the Tucker Act come that way, because they have not merit enough to pass under the Bowman Act. I am glad that this bill is composed mostly of claims under the Bowman Act. It is the strongest argument in favor of it that I have heard about any omnibus claim bills since I have been in the House.

Mr. HASKINS. The gentleman from Illinois concedes that under the Bowman Act a committee of the House, or Congress, has a right to refer these claims to the Court of Claims?

Mr. MANN. Under the Bowman Act any committee can refer any question of fact, except pensions, to the Court of Claims.

Mr. HASKINS. Now, there are but very few claims in this present bill that were referred under a House resolution under the Tucker Act.

Mr. MANN. That brings up a very interesting question. Of course this bill carries only matters which have come through the House. The great majority of these claims, especially claims which have not much merit in them, go to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act; and there not being the same facility for passing matters through this House under the title of courtesy, they go to another body, and are there referred to the Court of Claims under the Tucker Act. Is it the intention of the gentleman, when this bill comes back to this body, if it should come back loaded down with all sorts of claims under the Tucker Act, with all sorts of claims which have never been referred to the Court of Claims at all, with all sorts of claims which have no merit in them whatever—is it the intention of the gentleman to give the House a fair opportunity for consideration of those claims?

Mr. HASKINS. In reply to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois, I want to say to him and to the Members of this House that I have no knowledge or information as to what the Senate may do to this bill when it goes over to the other end of the Capitol. But so far as I am concerned I propose to act, and so far as I am able to control the War Claims Committee they will act, with perfect fairness and honor toward this House; and if there are any claims in that bill when it gets back to this body that are fishy, as we may say, I propose to have them thoroughly investigated and eliminated from the bill, for I myself will never consent that this Government of ours shall be mulcted out of a single dollar that it ought not to pay.

Mr. MANN. That sounds good to me.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think that ought to establish——

Mr. HASKINS. I am stating to the gentleman from Illinois what my feelings are; but I will not consent to have my patriotism or my honor impugned by him or anyone else. [Applause.]

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is very sensitive of his honor.

Mr. HASKINS. Not at all.

Mr. MANN. Nobody has impugned the gentleman's honor; but if the gentleman thinks his honor is impugned in this House because somebody asks him what he may do under future contingencies, then the gentleman's honor will be frequently impugned. I have no doubt of the gentleman's honor. If I had I should be prepared to delay the passage of this bill to my uttermost endeavors. The gentleman says that he has no knowledge or information as to what will be done with this bill in the Senate. He has no information, but I am sure he has knowledge.

Mr. HASKINS. If I have, I will take advantage of it.

Mr. MANN. Everybody in this body knows that this is a bill to pay war claims. When it comes back to this body it will be a bill to pay any kind of a claim. It will not be confined to war claims. The question comes up at once in the House, if the bill is proposed to be sent to conference, as to who shall be the conferees.

Mr. HASKINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. In just a moment. I have absolute confidence in the gentleman; but the gentleman is not familiar with claims which come from the Committee on Claims, and to my certain knowledge, and I think to the knowledge of every other Member of the House, there have been carried in some of the reports of conference committees on omnibus bills in the past, where the bill originated in the War Claims Committee, and came back from the Senate with claims that in the House would come before the Committee on Claims, and were agreed to in conference, the conferees on the part of the House having absolutely no knowledge in reference to the claims, and the committee which had jurisdiction of those claims saw put into the law, in their faces, and in spite of their efforts, claims which they had rejected in the House, claims agreed to by conferees who had no knowledge of the subject at all. Of course I do not say this for the purpose of even hurting the feelings of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on War Claims, but I want to give him notice that if this bill comes back from the Senate loaded down with all kinds of claims, which had no place in the bill in the first place, and the bill comes before the House again, as far as I am concerned, I shall resist just as far as I can, and make use of every possible parliamentary method to prevent the passage of the bill in that form.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, whatever the gentleman may anticipate, or anyone may anticipate, that the Senate may do with this bill ought certainly not to prejudice the House against the bill which we now have under consideration, but the House should be prepared to act upon it fairly, without any regard whatever to what the Senate may do hereafter.

But, as suggested by the gentleman at my side [Mr. SULZER], "Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof."

Mr. MANN. That is a very good Democratic doctrine.

Mr. HASKINS. Well, we will adopt it, for it is good Biblical doctrine.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is mighty good people's doctrine, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. The gentleman from Illinois evidently is not as familiar with the Bible as he is with the policies of the Democratic party. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. I have not had as much occasion to become familiar with it.

Mr. SULZER. It would do the gentleman a great deal of good to read the Bible. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. It has never done the gentleman from New York any good. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. I don't think the gentleman from Illinois is a competent judge of that.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that I have labored in the committee room, and the committee has agreed with me, to keep everything out of this bill that we have reported to the House except the finding of the Court of Claims, and if the bill should come back to this House loaded down with spurious and miscellaneous measures that ought not to have a place in the bill at all I will second the efforts of the gentleman from Illinois to prevent action, for I would rather see the bill fail unless it is a fair bill.

Mr. PRINCE. Mr. Chairman, I want to suggest to the gentleman from Vermont, chairman of the Committee on War Claims, that the idea of the gentleman from Illinois that the bill may be loaded down with amendments will apply to any bill that this House passes that goes to the other branch, and it would apply to a bill passed by any committee in the House, as well as any passed by the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I congratulate the present House that progress is being made. I can remember, not a great many years ago, when I seemed to be very much alone in looking into claims that were presented to the House. I should have been glad in the earlier years to have had the assistance and the leadership of the gentleman from Illinois——

Mr. MANN. I always follow the lead of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). In looking into the claims that come before the House. Other gentlemen have acquired the same habit, not to speak of individual Members of Congress. The House is getting to that point where it seems to be the desire of the House to look carefully into these claims and where there is less disposition than there used to be in the years that are past to manifest a sort of general feeling that "I have got a claim, and therefore I won't look too closely into other claims in order that they can all go through."

I am glad to see that the new chairman of the Committee on War Claims—although he is an old Member of the House, but new to this particular business—has made such a thorough examination of claims in this bill. I have looked into his report, as far as I have been able owing to the time required for the study of other matters, and I congratulate him on the ability he has manifested in looking into the decisions of the court and, so far as he was able, into the justice and honesty of the claims which he has presented in this bill.

I was a little surprised when he singled out a claim under this bill and said that after further examination he had found that the claim had been paid and settled not a very long time ago. It shows the reason and necessity for the exercise of the most extreme vigilance in looking into these claims. I confess, Mr. Chairman, I do not like to see an omnibus bill go through the House, because I know what that means later when the bill comes up for consideration of the amendments that have been placed upon it. Generally these claims bills come back so padded with amendments that the author of the bill in the House is unable to recognize it, and generally they come back so late, not in the session but in the Congressional term, that the conferees on the part of the House and the Committee on War Claims on the part of the House do not have time to make that thorough and careful investigation that they would like to make. As the gentleman from Illinois has stated, they come back loaded with amendments of simple claims against the Government, arising in various ways, of which the Commitete on War Claims have no knowledge, because the Committee on Claims alone has jurisdiction. To get a knowledge of these new claims they must go into original study in order to find out whether the claims ought to be allowed. Claims under the Tucker Act—claims, as the gentleman has well said, of such a character that they could not have got in under the Bowman Act—come back, or at least appear on the bill, after it has been away from the House a sufficient length of time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman ask that we should defeat this bill because the conferees may do wrong.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman will possess his soul in patience I will try to make my position understood during the small portion of the hour I am entitled to that I shall use.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Very well; I hope the gentleman makes it clear.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I have been sometimes a sort of auxiliary member of the committee on conference when a claims bill has been before that committee, and I remember one Congress that I spent most of my time night and day for two or three weeks trying to get a knowledge of claims that appeared for the first time in the bill, finding that the former chairman of the committee had little knowledge of them. After a long struggle, in which compliments were showered upon me not so much by the membership of this House as by some other gentlemen, we succeeded in taking out a good many of the claims that ought never to be in any bill and certainly not in any law ever recognized by the Government of the United States.

I remember the last time we had such a bill before the conference committee that there was one particular claim on that bill which was opposed by the former chairman of this committee; he said he could not allow it any way. I looked into it and I found that the Court of Claims had found that the party was disloyal, and for that reason the Committee on War Claims in the House had refused to agree to it. I found that the Committee on War Claims had reported that claim by a separate bill, which was upon the Calendar. Of course it is but just to say for them that notwithstanding the Court of Claims reported against the loyalty of the claimant, a former Attorney-General of the United States had written a letter or an opinion, in which he seemed to take ground against the Court of Claims, and, I think, contrary to a decision of the Supreme Court, which the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] has included in his report on this bill. I only speak of this to show the gentleman what he has to face. I have no doubt that he will bring the same integrity and ability to the consideration of those amendments when they come here as he has so far given to this bill and to the matters before his committee and as he has ever manifested during the years it has been my pleasure to serve with him as a Member of the House.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to say to the gentleman that I do not think he need borrow any trouble about the bill to which he has just referred ever being brought up in the House.

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad to hear that from the gentleman, and that is another assurance which is very grateful to me. I would like to see the honest bills against the United States Government paid. I have been beseeching the Committee on Claims for the last six or eight years to select the claims that were honest and just and which in their opinion ought to be paid, and to bring them in here and put them on the Calendar early in the session, that they might receive the consideration of the House, and not let some one put in a bill here that ought not to be paid at the end of the Calendar and block the Calendar or force the House to pass the bill, unworthy as it is, in order that it might get at matters which were worthy and which ought to pass. I congratulate the House that the gentleman from Vermont has been selected as the chairman of this committee, and I hope—I know—he will continue in his good work upon that committee. [Applause.]

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not possible for the Committee on Rules to make some provision and to prevent the very evil at the close of the session to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I do not know. The Committee on Rules are bound by the rules of the House. The rules of the House have been framed for the purpose of expediting the business of the House, and with twenty or thirty thousand bills introduced and going before the committees, and hundreds of them reported and put upon the Calendar, there must be some method of selecting under the general rules by which those bills can be reached. It is true that in order at some times to prevent a block of business and to deprive the House of the right to consider a worthy measure, the power of the Committee on Rules has been invoked in order to take up under special rule some measure that the House desires to pass. That always creates a great deal of criticism and brings out the annual speech of my friend the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHACKLEFORD], which he delivered two or three weeks ago, complaining about the despotism of the Speaker of the House and the Committee on Rules. Now, it is not necessary for the Committee on Rules to provide a different way or a different order for considering the bills on the Private Calendar. The rules provide, and under them the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS] to-day made a motion to take up this particular bill out of its order, and the committee seconded his motion and the bill is now before us, although there is at least one other bill and several resolutions from his own committee that precede this upon the Calendar.

Gentlemen will find as they study the rules with the idea of trying to understand them, and the practices of the House with the idea of trying to understand them, that the rules, formed through a long series of years and worked out by the constant practice in this House, to which the best men in the House for fifty years have given their attention in order to have rules that would enable the House to do its business, ever increasing from session to session; if they study these rules they will find that they are most admirably adapted for the business of the House and for the expedition and proper order of the business of the House.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New York has taken up so much time to answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio I will try to cut my remarks short so as not to detain the committee, but I feel I ought to say that I can not understand why it is that Members upon this floor are so prejudiced against war-claims bills. They seem to insinuate that there is some fraud embodied in all war-claims bills that are presented to this House. I do not think they can possibly have any prejudice against them fifty years after the war is over, fifty years after the supplies and property were taken or destroyed by the Union forces from the loyal people of the South.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me? I want to say if I had the power I would enact this bill into law to-day and without amendment except the one suggested by the gentleman from Vermont. It is only the other things that will get into it before we finally get it through the legislative hopper that have any terrors whatever for me.

Mr. MACON. In response to what the gentleman from New York says I can not help but conclude that he is afraid of the honorable body at the other end of the Capitol. Sir, I am not afraid of that body. I believe they have just as many rights as members of it as we have as Members of the House, and I do not believe that men occupying so exalted stations in life as they do would deliberately and willfully perjure themselves by trying to force upon this body the passage of bills that they knew were dishonest, that they knew had no merit in them. But, sir, getting back to where I was when the gentleman from New York made his inquiry, I will state that I do not believe that we have ever had a pension day in the House but what there was some improper legislation embodied in some one of the many pension bills that have been passed here without question.

There was a time, perhaps, when prejudice wildly and bitterly raged between the North and South, that a son of a southern soldier might have taken the floor to question whether this or that pension was right, exactly, whether or not the applicant was entitled to a pension, but, sirs, that time has passed, and I am glad of it. I am glad to know that no one who comes from the southern side of the Potomac River ever raises his voice on this floor against a pension bill which seeks to give some old soldier or his widow or some of his little children some sort of compensation for the services that that soldier gave to his country fifty years ago. Sir, I do not know about all of the claims that are embodied in this bill, but I do know something about two of them, and in one of them the report shows that in this particular case the following property was taken for the use of the United States Army:

3,000 bushels corn in crib	$3,000
1,000 bushels corn in field	500
10 tons hay	200
47,000 rails	2,348
10 acres timber	500
8 mules	1,400
6 mares	1,050
14 young horses and mules	1,050
30 cattle	1,050
100 hogs	1,050
40,000 feet lumber	1,200
40,000 bricks	400
1,300 pounds of bacon	195
40 acres green corn	480
Board and care of sick soldiers	468
Total	14,891

This was taken, Mr. Chairman, from two minor children who have remained without their money all these years and now the court only finds that they are entitled to receive the small sum of $2,166.67. Is there a Member upon this floor who objects to paying that pitiful sum for provender and supplies taken and consumed by Union soldiers and for care of those soldiers when they were sick? I think not; not one. The other case that I know a little about, Mr. Chairman, is one in which an old negro had three mules of the value of $300 taken from him by Union soldiers nearly fifty years ago—an old negro who happened to be fortunate enough to own three mules by reason of the kindness of his southern master. Now, the Court of Claims says his heirs are entitled to $300 for those mules. Will Members try to defeat a meritorious proposition of that kind? These claims are just and ought to have been paid long ago. In the name of the loyal people of the South who had their property taken from them at a time when it was perhaps necessary to take it, I appeal to the National Government to pay these war claims that are so just and honest.

Mr. HASKINS. I move that the Clerk proceed to read the bill by paragraphs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read, if no one else desires to speak.

The Clerk read as follows:

To S. Inman, administrator of the estate of Jacob B. Russell, deceased, late of Ringgold County, $3,210.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out of line 16, on page 7, the word "Ringgold" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Catoosa."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 16, strike out "Ringgold" and insert "Catoosa."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Sarah Ann Dobbs, widow of Nathaniel B. Dobbs, deceased, of Pulaski County, $152.25.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 13, between lines 10 and 11, insert the following:
"To James N. Hall, of Montgomery County, $750."

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that no Member of this House has a higher regard for the distinguished chairman of the committee than I have, nor is there anyone more thoroughly convinced than I am that the committee was entirely conscientious in preparing this bill. In fact, I think that the committee, in its great anxiety to avoid any possibility of including a claim that ought not to be included, has leaned a little too far the other way. This claim of James N. Hall has been certified to Congress from the Court of Claims. The amount due him for his half interest, as given in the finding of fact, is $750. Mr. Hall during the war of the rebellion was engaged in partnership with a Mr. Burroughs in the retail liquor business at Mount Sterling, Ky. Federal troops were stationed there at the time, and the officer in charge, as stated in the finding of fact, claiming that some of the whisky had been sold to men belonging to his command, in violation of his orders, had the entire stock confiscated and taken away. It was taken away in military wagons, and the general understanding there at the time was, as the proof shows, that it was finally taken to a military hospital located at Mount Sterling for the use of patients in that hospital. The court says in its finding that the evidence does not show to the satisfaction of the court what use was made of the liquors. Now, it is true that there is no specific testimony in the record showing just how the whisky and other liquors thus taken were disposed of. I have taken the trouble to get an abstract of the testimony in the case and I have it here. Major Wood, a distinguished Union officer who is now the United States pension agent at Louisville, Ky., testified that he was there at the time and that the liquors were hauled away by order of Major Benjamin, commanding the Union forces there, and taken toward the quartermaster's department, and that the general understanding was that it was used by the military authorities. The claimant himself testified that the liquors were appropriated and used by the military authorities for hospital patients. Mr. Burroughs, who was the partner of Mr. Hall, also gave substantially the same testimony. I submit to the House that in those days when whisky got into the possession of the officers and men as this did, whether in Kentucky or elsewhere, the presumption that it was not destroyed, but used by them, is so strong that there is no need of offering testimony in support of the proposition. In fact, the presumption I think may be regarded as conclusive. [Laughter.] This Mr. Hall is now an old man. Every dollar of his savings was invested in that business, and this confiscation of his property left him penniless. He was intensely loyal to the Union throughout the rebellion. He has never received a dollar of compensation for this loss. If I had the slightest doubt that his claim was less just than others embodied in this bill I should not offer this amendment. But I feel that this amount, and more, for that matter, is justly due him from the Government, and I believe that the House will so decide. I am sure it would if it knew the facts as I know them. [Applause.]

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state for the information of the House the reason why this claim was not included in the bill. It is for nine barrels of pure copper whisky, four barrels of pure apple brandy, one barrel of Holland gin, one barrel of ginger wine, and six barrels of spirits, amounting to $3,027. This, it seems, was owned by Mr. Hall, the present claimant, and Mr. Burroughs. The court found as a matter of fact that they were selling liquor to the soldiers that were stationed at Mount Sterling, contrary to military orders, and an order was issued to seize the whisky. It was seized and it was taken away. But the court says that the whisky and liquors were taken away in wagons by said military forces, but what use was made of them does not appear to the satisfaction of the court.

Now, as I stated a while ago, we have included no claims in this bill except those where the court affirmatively found that the property taken went to the benefit of the Federal Army or the Federal Government. There being no finding of fact here, of course we could not well include it in the bill upon the basis that we adopted. Mr. Burroughs upon the preliminary hearing was found to be unloyal, but Hall was found to be loyal, and the court found one-half of that due Mr. Hall, amounting to $750, providing he was entitled to recover anything. And our only objection to the bill is that the court failed to find that the General Government had the benefit of this particular property.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, just a moment——

Mr. HASKINS. Wait one moment. Of course the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] brought me what purports to be an extract of the testimony taken before the Court of Claims, received from the attorney of Mr. Hall. Well, now, that may be all correct, but the committee could not very well assume that to be true which the Court of Claims failed to find.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To John F. Wells, of Mason County, $256.24.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by substituting for the letter "F" in the name the letter "E." It is "John E. Wells" instead of "John F. Wells." It is a misprint at the Government Printing Office.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the initial "F." in line 24, page 14, and insert in lieu thereof the letter "E."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To John Wood, of McCracken County, $880.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 20, line 1, by striking out the word "McCracken" and inserting in lieu thereof "Tishomingo."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, page 20, strike out "McCracken" and insert "Tishomingo," so as to read "Tishomingo County."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Susan E. Joyner, Mary E. Roberson, Martha F. Luster, and Jane F. Crump, sole heirs of Joseph Anthony, deceased, late of Sumner County, $4,520.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend on page 26, line 10, by striking out the word "Joseph" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Josiah," so that it will read "heirs of Josiah Anthony."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 26, line 10, strike out "Joseph" and insert "Josiah."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Charles W. Hewglez, of Wilson County, $580.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, that name should be amended, so as to read "Charles W. Hewgley" instead of "Hewglez."

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 13, page 29, change the spelling of the name to "Hewgley" instead of "Hewglez."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Robert E. Williams, John T. Williams, Mary E. Williams, George M. Williams, and Ida Williams-Eddy, heirs of estate of Robert M. Williams, deceased, of the city of Dallas, $1,140.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following:

"VERMONT.

"To Henrietta V. Dale, widow of John J. Dale, deceased, of Windom County, $124.06."

Mr. HASKINS. This is a finding which has come in since the bill was printed.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the trustees of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Lamberts Point, $780.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer, on page 34, after line 18, by inserting the following:

To the trustees of Fredericksburg Baptist Church, Fredericksburg, Va., $3,000.

To the trustees of Presbyterian Church of Fredericksburg, Va., $2,625.

To the trustees of St. George's Episcopal Church, Fredericksburg, Va., $900.

To the trustees of the Christian Church of Fredericksburg, Va., $2,125.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 18, page 34:

"To the trustees of Fredericksburg Baptist Church, Fredericksburg, Va, $3,000.

"To the trustees of the Presbyterian Church, Fredericksburg, Va., $2,625.

"To the trustees of St. George's Episcopal Church, Fredericksburg, Va., $900.

"To the trustees of the Christian Church, Fredericksburg, Va., $2,125."

Mr. MANN. Let me inquire, does the gentleman offer these as separate amendments?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I offer it as one amendment.

Mr. MANN. A parliamentary inquiry: Is this one amendment or a number of amendments? I desire to ask if the gentleman offers them as an amendment.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I offer it as one amendment, with five items, and the fifth one is "to the trustees of St. Mary's Catholic Church, Fredericksburg, Va., $500."

The Clerk read as follows:

To the trustees of St. Mary's Catholic Church, Fredericksburg Va., $500.

Mr. HASKINS. I must object to the insertion of these several amendments in this bill. I understand they are findings of the Court of Claims, but they have never been before the Committee on War Claims, never have been considered by any member of the Committee on War Claims, that I know anything about or have heard of. Not only that, but I notice that these are findings on Senate bills that were referred to the court.

Now, this bill contains nothing but pure and simple findings upon House bills, and I object for the want of jurisdiction of these claims.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to make the point of order on these amendments?

Mr. HASKINS. I make the point of order against them.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I do not suppose it is necessary for me to discuss the point of order.

Mr. HASKINS. That they are findings that have been had on bills sent to the Court of Claims by the Senate and not by the House, and beyond our jurisdiction.

Not only that, they ought not to be forced into this bill without the committee, or some member of the committee, inspecting these items and examining them.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The chairman of the committee has stated two distinct propositions. He has raised a point of order against my amendment on the ground that the claims which it embraces were referred to the Court of Claims by the Senate and not by the House. That is one proposition. The other contention of the gentleman is that they ought not to be included in this omnibus bill in any event.

As to the point of order, I do not believe it is necessary for me to discuss that. The items in this bill, as well as those in my amendment, are all findings of the Court of Claims, and whether they were referred to the Court of Claims by this House or by the Senate, or, in cases referred under the Bowman Act, by the Committee on War Claims of this House, is wholly immaterial. The claims are all of the same character, and all having been passed upon by the Court of Claims, it is of no importance as to how they got before that tribunal so they got there properly. It seems to me that a mere statement of that fact disposes of the question of order. I should like to have the Chair rule upon that point before I undertake to reply to the objections urged to the adoption of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Vermont, chairman of the committee, state whether this bill contains any other than war claims?

Mr. HASKINS. No; this bill contains nothing but claims growing out of the war—no miscellaneous claims.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The claims that I ask to have put on the bill all grew out of the war, are all war claims; and I further state, in connection with what the chairman of the committee has said, that bills covering these claims were introduced in the House, and referred by the House to the Committee on War Claims, whether that committee ever examined them or not.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Vermont state whether there is anything to differentiate these claims from the other claims included in the bill, except the fact that they were referred to the Court of Claims by the Senate?

Mr. HASKINS. I know of none, because I have not seen them, and I think it is wrong and highly preposterous on the part of the gentleman to undertake to force into this bill claims which the committee never have passed upon and never have seen, and which no other Member of this House probably, except himself, ever has seen.

The CHAIRMAN. The reports on the bills indicate that they are of the same nature as the claims included in the bill under consideration, and that they were referred to the Court of Claims under the acts known as the Bowman Act and the Tucker Act by the Senate. That being so, the Chair holds that the amendment is germane, and overrules the point of order.

Mr. HASKINS. Then, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] withheld his discussion on the merits until this decision, so the gentleman from Virginia still has the floor.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I understand that one of the objections urged by the chairman of this committee to the payment of the claims embraced in my amendment, or at least to their being incorporated in this so-called "omnibus bill," is that they have never been considered by the committee of which he is the honored chairman. Mr. Chairman, as a matter of fact, separate bills were introduced in this House in the Fifty-ninth Congress, bills which had been introduced in a number of Congresses previous thereto, for the payment of each one of these claims, and each of those bills was referred to the Committee on War Claims, and the gentleman knows, what every other Member does—what the difficulty has always been of getting this House to refer these just claims to the Court of Claims. For this reason the almost universal custom has been for Members having them in charge to secure their introduction in the Senate also. The Senate has more than once by a single resolution referred all the claims of this character pending before it to the Court of Claims. It was under such an omnibus resolution that these claims were referred. The rules of this House do not permit of the reference of war claims to the Court of Claims when the Speaker is opposed to even the consideration of such claims, and therefore it is that Members must get them referred in the Senate or not get them referred at all. This in no way affects or detracts from the merits of these claims, and does not, in my opinion, constitute any good reason for opposing their being placed in this bill. They have received the same examination by the Court of Claims that has been given to the claims embraced therein.

On the contrary, it does seem that bills referred by resolution of the Senate have really had more consideration than bills referred merely by the Committee on War Claims without any intervention on the part of the House. These claims are as meritorious as any contained in this bill, and they have received the same consideration at the hands of the Court of Claims, the Government having been represented in every instance by a representative of the Department of Justice. The Court of Claims has carefully considered every one of them and fixed the amount due by the Government.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Were there many other claims of the same character referred by the Senate to the Court of Claims?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. There were a great many others.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What became of the other claims?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I can not answer as to that. I am not familiar with the history of the war claims represented by my colleagues. They were all doubtless passed upon by the court. It may be that in a number of cases the Court of Claims found that the claims were not well founded. The claims embraced in my amendment have been favorably reported on by the Court of Claims and have been referred back to Congress for payment.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is it expected that the claims referred by the Senate to the Court of Claims and passed upon by the Court of Claims will be sent back to the Senate to be passed upon by the Senate?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. They may be sent back to the Senate for payment, but it is entirely immaterial, in my judgment, which body first considers them. The fact that claims are referred in one body does not preclude, I take it, the other body from first considering the question of their payment. It was perfectly competent, of course, for this House to have passed the reference resolution; but the gentleman from New York knows how difficult it is always to secure the passage of a resolution of that sort here.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Why can not the gentleman get the claims inserted in the bill after it goes to the Senate, where the committee of that body has had a chance to pass upon them?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I think that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] was right when he said the probability is that this bill, if it gets to the Senate, will have these claims put on it there; but the gentleman from Illinois has also said to the House that if the Senate amends this bill by adding to it any considerable number of claims, it will encounter great opposition when it gets back here. The only reason which has been offered for not including such claims as I represent in this bill was that to have done so would have made the bill too large and thus endanger its passage. The same result must follow, no matter where the claims are put on.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Let me ask the gentleman, Are the findings of the Court of Claims, when sent to them from the Senate, sent back to the Senate, and those sent to the Court of Claims by the House referred back to the House?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I am not sure as to this. I think Senate bills are sent back to the Senate and House bills to this body.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Those referred by the Senate to the Court of Claims are reported back by the Court of Claims to the Senate, are they not?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I am not entirely familiar with the course which is pursued, but I can say to the gentleman that the omnibus bills which have been reported by the Committee on War Claims heretofore, and which have been passed in this House, have included a great many bills referred to the Court of Claims by the Senate. I think the large majority of the claims heretofore embraced in omnibus bills originating in the House were referred to the Court of Claims by the Senate. My understanding is that after the Court of Claims examines and passes on the bills the committees of the two Houses do not look very carefully into the questions passed upon by the court.

The point I make is that these claims are of exactly the same character as a number of the claims embraced in this bill, and the mere fact that the claims embraced in this bill were referred by the House or by the Committee on War Claims to the Court of Claims does not, or at least ought not to, give them any better standing in this body than claims referred by a resolution of the Senate. For this reason I think it very unjust to exclude them from this bill. It is because I know the claims embraced in my amendment to be in all respects as just and meritorious as any included in the pending bill that I have offered my amendment. They are of precisely the same character as the church claims in this bill, and they should, in fairness and justice, receive the same treatment. The objection urged against them is purely technical, and it is not, in my judgment, a valid one. All claims of like character and merit should receive the same treatment. It is not just to single out a few church bills and give them this advantage over hundreds of others of equal merit.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] for the compliment which he has paid the Committee on War Claims when he informs the House that he understands that the committee gave but very little attention and examination to these findings of the Court of Claims. I do not know how it has been heretofore, but during this session of Congress the Committee on War Claims has not taken as conclusive the findings of the Court of Claims, except upon the subject of loyalty and the amount found due; but they have given thorough and careful investigation to every finding that has been reported to the House by the court. Let me say for the information of the gentleman—and he ought to have known it because he has served in this House much longer than I have—that bills emanating in the Senate that are sent down to the Court of Claims are certified back by the Court of Claims to the Vice-President or the presiding officer of the Senate. Bills that originate in the House, after they have been passed upon by the Court of Claims, are certified back to the Speaker of the House. That is the way the Committee on War Claims in the House gets possession of these findings of the court. I think it would be discourteous, to say the least, to the Senate of the United States for this Committee on War Claims of the House to undertake to assume jurisdiction of claims, bills that originate in that body and were sent by that body to the Court of Claims for the finding of facts.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HASKINS. Yes.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The gentleman stated that this committee did not recognize as conclusive the reports or certificates of the Court of Claims in all cases. I would like to ask him whether in any cases this committee has rejected the findings or conclusions of the Court of Claims in any of these cases?

Mr. HASKINS. I have already stated heretofore in the House that we have turned down several of them because the Court of Claims was unable to affirmatively find that the property that was claimed to have been taken went to the use of the Government.

Mr. MANN. Is it not a fact that under this law the Court of Claims makes no recommendation as to whether the claim ought to be paid?

Mr. HASKINS. Yes; they simply make a finding.

Mr. MANN. All they do is to find the facts, and sometimes a case comes before the committee where the court intimates clearly that the claim ought not to be paid, although the finding of facts is there.

Mr. HASKINS. The gentleman is correct about that, and these bills which originate in the Senate and which were certified back to the Vice-President of the Senate ought not to be embraced in this bill at all. A year ago the omnibus bill reported by the Committee on War Claims failed, and one reason was that it included in its findings of the Court of Claims those that were reported to the Senate instead of the House, as well as miscellaneous bills also. I would like to investigate and examine those claims.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Do I understand the gentleman to say that one reason that that bill failed was because claims of precisely the same character as those put on in the House were put on in the Senate?

Mr. HASKINS. I say it did fail, and it carried such bills.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understood the gentleman to say that that is one of the reasons.

Mr. HASKINS. It did not pass.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I know that, but I do not think the gentleman will assert that as one of the reasons for its failure. It did not pass because it was so large.

Mr. HASKINS. Since this bill was made up I have been besieged by Members of the House who would say, "Why is not such a claim in your bill? There is such a finding of the Court of Claims." We would look it up and find that it was a Senate bill that had been reported back to the Senate, and I would say to the Member that all he had to do was to go over to the Senate and see Senators or members of the Committee on Claims in the Senate, and when this bill gets over there it will be amended by placing in the bill those findings. Another objection that I have to embracing in this bill the findings the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] has introduced here is this, that I have not seen them. There is not a single finding there in this bill as reported but what I have examined once or twice or three times over, so that I know what is in them, and I can stand here in the face of this House and affirm that I knew what they contained, and I dislike very much to have these claims that have not been investigated by any member of the Committee on War Claims inserted here, and I ask that the committee vote down this amendment.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment of my friend from Virginia will not be adopted, not out of any hostility to the merits of the claims, because I do not know what they are.

The Committee on War Claims agreed to make up the omnibus bill containing only findings of the Court of Claims on references made by the House. Numbers of Members of the House, especially on this side, have besought us to embrace in that bill findings of the Court of Claims on Senate references, and we have refused every one of them, although some I know were from my own State. We did not go into the merits of any of them. They were referred by the Senate, and the preliminary investigation of those findings should first be by the body which referred them, because, possibly, as liberal as that body is, they may turn some of them down, and we may never have to consider them, but it would be very unjust to those Members of the House who have claims exactly in the shape of those of the gentleman from Virginia should we adopt his amendment and not amend the bill immediately so as to bring all of them in, and we could not possibly do it here on the floor of the House; if we do, we take the Court of Claims' findings on faith without any examination. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned, that any finding from the Court of Claims on claims sent there by a Tucker Act resolution I do not think should be binding on this House, especially as to whether or not there ought to be an appropriation to pay them, because the court has not expressed any opinion on that matter, has not rendered any judgment, nor have they been asked to do so. I have seen claims passed by resolutions sent by this House under the Tucker Act limiting the court to finding such facts as the author of the bill wanted certified and leaving the court absolutely without expression on anything else. I think they ought to be examined, each and every one of them, and I want to say to my friend from Virginia we do examine these court findings when they come back, especially when referred under a Tucker Act resolution, and if we do not we fail to do our duty, and this House ought to do it. I also want to say that I have not any doubt his claims are correct, in view of his statement of the fact, and in the Senate where they were referred they will be added to this bill and will meet no opposition in this body by the conferees of the House if they are the character of claims that are in this bill, and I take his word that they are. However, he can see where we will be. If we take care of his, we will have to take others in on the statement of the Senate findings, which we have invariably excluded from this bill. For that reason, and for that only, I hope the gentleman's amendment will be voted down.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I do not think the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia should pass——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment, if the gentleman will yield to me. Mr. Chairman, I was going to say, in view of the statements made by the members of the committee, that these claims and claims of a similar character will be put on in the Senate and that there will be no opposition to just claims of that character on the part of the House when they come back here, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

To Warwick Hutton, administrator of the estate of Samuel Morrison, deceased, late of Randolph County, $1,340.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 35.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 35, lines 1, 2, and 3, strike out the paragraph.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

A. J., C. C., AND T. W. HODGES.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee take up for consideration the bill (H. R. 14446) for the relief of A. J., C. C., and T. W. Hodges.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. It does not require any motion from the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. HASKINS].

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay A. J., C. C., and T. W. Hodges, of Gonzales County, Tex., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,175, being for labor performed for the United States upon the written order of W. T. Wilkerson, colonel in United States Army and commanding a post at Columbus, Tex., during the month of August, A. D. 1865.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER], who is a member of the Committee on War Claims, has charge of the bill.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read, as it gives all the information necessary about this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on War Claims, to whom was referred House bill 14446, beg leave to report favorably and recommend that said bill do pass.

The facts in this claim, briefly stated, are these: During the year 1865, 108 bales of cotton were seized in Gonzales County, Tex., by the Federal troops and were left temporarily in the possession of A. J. Hodges.

In the month of August, 1865, Col. W. T. Wilkinson, commander of a post at Columbus, Tex., wrote a letter to A. J. Hodges, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS POST,
Columbus, Tex., August 12, 1865.

SIR: I have been informed by Lieutenant Kook that the cotton in your possession is not in a fit condition to be moved. Upon receipt of this order you will please have the cotton rebaled. If you have teams, send the cotton to this place as soon as practicable, for which you will be paid.

Yours, respectfully,
W. T. WILKINSON,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Commanding Post.

Mr. A. J. HODGES.

The original of this letter, with the envelope, is filed with the committee. At this time there was no railroad, and the cotton had to be hauled in wagons to Columbus, a distance of about 100 miles. A. J. Hodges, aided by his two brothers, C. C. and T. W. Hodges, had the cotton repicked and rebaled, purchasing bagging and rope for the purpose, and with teams hauled the 108 bales of cotton to Columbus from the home of A. J. Hodges, in Gonzales County. When they got there with the cotton Colonel Wilkinson was away and they were not paid. The cotton was delivered to Lieutenant Kook. After waiting two or three days for the return of Colonel Wilkinson they returned home without having seen him. Several weeks later A. J. Hodges went to Columbus again to collect his pay. Colonel Wilkinson was still absent, and soon after the camp was broken up, and they never received pay for the work.

The itemized account is as follows:

Labor in repicking and rebaling 108 bales of cotton	$540
Bagging for same	243
Rope for same	90
Hauling said cotton to Columbus	302
Total	1,175

The committee is of opinion the work was done and services rendered, and that these men have never received any pay; that the bill is a reasonable one, for which the Government ought to pay.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. We have just passed a bill having something over three hundred claims in it which were referred to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts. What is the objection to having the Court of Claims pass upon this bill if it has merit?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Except that the facts are already found and proven. The testimony has been submitted to the committee, and the committee have acted and reported that the claim be paid.

Mr. MANN. The only testimony that is stated in the report is what is said to be a copy of an order.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. From a lieutenant-colonel in command.

Mr. MANN. Which I suppose was not obtained from the War Department. There was a letter written by somebody, but no finding of facts in reference to the matter at all. The committee will not pretend to say that it has given careful consideration to the facts in the case.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] makes the statement that the committee certainly have not carefully considered this bill.

Mr. MANN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said they have had no opportunity to carefully consider the facts in the case.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. On that statement I must dispute with him. The facts have been before the committee. The facts were that the claimants were employed to haul and look after this cotton. They performed this service, and they attempted to get their pay. There was no judicial tribunal which had jurisdiction to which they could go. The officer was the only one who could pay, and he left the country and had no opportunity to pay them, and they came to Congress, showing by legitimate and competent testimony that the services were rendered, and that they are entitled to the pay mentioned in the bill. This bill is in the interest of a constituent of my colleague [Mr. BURGESS], and I yield to him for further explanation to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. HASKINS. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. COOPER] yield to a question?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Certainly.

Mr. HASKINS. It is not true that in the consideration of this bill the old, original letter of Lieutenant-Colonel Wilkinson was presented?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It is true that the original letter was presented, and is now on file with the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say briefly, not only for the benefit of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] but others of my colleagues, that this bill has been considered on the facts by two committees in this House. At a previous session the bill was referred to the Committee on Claims, of which my friend from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] was and is the distinguished chairman. He was of opinion, and so was I, and I am yet, that that was the proper committee to consider this bill. They considered it, made a unanimous report upon the facts, almost identical with this report from this committee—identical in substance and fact—favorably recommending the bill, and it went on the Private Calendar. When the bill came up for consideration under the rule, my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objected then that it ought to go to the Committee on War Claims, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole who then occupied the chair sustained the point of order and sent it to that committee. Now, that committee has considered the facts, and they have unanimously made a favorable report upon this bill, and I do submit that in view of such a consideration by two committees, both unanimously and favorably reporting the bill, it would be useless and unfair to protract further settlement of this matter. The facts are brief, and in my judgment will convince a majority of this House that the point of order ought never to have been sustained, in fact, for the reason that it is a payment by the Government for work done after the close of the war. The only fact upon which the point of order could hinge was the one that undoubtedly the cotton upon which the work was done after the war had been taken by the Government during the war.

Cotton in Gonzales County was seized, as it was in a good many other places. This was left in charge of this man A. J. Hodges. After the war closed, as the letter shows date of August 12, 1865, this lieutenant-colonel, then in command of a temporary post at Columbus, about 100 miles by dirt road—and pretty bad ones in those days—wrote this letter asking this man to repick this cotton, rebale it, and haul it to the post at Columbus. In those days we did not have cotton baling down as fine as we have it now. It did not then take very long for a bale of cotton to get in very bad shape, especially if it was exposed, and there were 108 of these bales. This was done by this man, A. J. Hodges, with those that are joined with him in this claim. They repicked the cotton, bought the material, and rebaled it, and tied it and hauled it this 100 miles down to Columbus, and delivered it at the post. Now, this is established by sworn affidavits, which were before both these committees. I have known these three men myself for twenty-five years, and they are as honest and upright citizens as there are in Texas. They performed the work that they were ordered to do by the Government; there is no question about that; the Government got the cotton, and there is no doubt the Government ought to pay what this colonel ordered to be done, and so from my point of view the claim should never have been referred to the Committee on War Claims and has no place before the Southern Claims Commission at all.

Mr. PAYNE. You do not raise any point of order upon that?

Mr. BURGESS. I am arguing against any point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. You are not making the point of order?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. You do? [Laughter.]

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I am not making the point of order. I will try to make the gentleman from New York understand.

Mr. PAYNE. I think I understand you.

Mr. BURGESS. The gentleman from Illinois suggests that this claim ought to go with these other claims to the Court of Claims. I say there is no reason for it to be referred. It only means another delay. These facts are simple and have been established in affidavits before two committees, and I do not know what more we will know if the claim were sent to the Court of Claims and came back.

Mr. KEIFER. I am not opposing your bill. You said this cotton had been seized by the Government during the war. Was the seizure made under what is called the "captured and abandoned property act?"

Mr. BURGESS. Really, I do not know about that.

Mr. KEIFER. What was the form of the seizure that you refer to?

Mr. BURGESS. I do not know about that. I just really assume that it must have been seized in some way. I never inquired into it, because in my view that is utterly immaterial.

Mr. KEIFER. What I am trying to get at is the form in which title was acquired by the Government and what that title was at the time of the employment of these three men.

Mr. BURGESS. Well, really I do not know, and really, in my view of it, I submit to the gentleman from Ohio that would be immaterial in a question relating to the payment of this claim.

Mr. KEIFER. It might be quite different if it turned out the Government had no title at all and this employment was for moving cotton that the Government had no interest in and probably never got any benefit from. It might affect this question. I do not concede that a lieutenant-colonel or a colonel or general in charge of a military post, unless he had special authority from the Treasury Department to deal in such matters, had any right to make such a contract. I am not trying to overthrow your bill, but I want to see what foundation there was for it.

Mr. BURGESS. I really do not know what the particular facts of the seizure were. I suppose it was done as that was usually done.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I will state to the gentleman from Ohio that the Government received the cotton. The Government ordered this done, and the Government received the cotton, and these men performed the service for the Government under this contract which is shown by this letter.

Mr. KEIFER. Have you a letter, or where is the evidence to show that the Government received the cotton and got the benefit of it?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. I know they got it. Here is the order and the affidavits on file before the committee.

Mr. KEIFER. What is the character of the testimony to show that the Government received it? I will concede that somebody received it.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. It was shown that it was received by the officer.

Mr. BURGESS. It is shown by the affidavits of five different citizens.

Mr. KEIFER. What was the character of the officer?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. KEIFER. That is not by any means conclusive, but suspicious in the sense that very few officers represented the Secretary of the Treasury in seizing cotton during or at the end of the civil war or could take possession and dispose of captured and abandoned property such as cotton and things of that kind. I do not think the Secretary of War could have given that authority to have done what was done in this case.

Mr. WALDO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KEIFER. Certainly. I am not in control of the time and have no time of my own, but I will yield. [Laughter.]

Mr. WALDO. The gentleman does not mean to intimate that he believes the lieutenant-colonel got the money himself?

Mr. KEIFER. I do not mean to say that; but it may be that nobody got it in the name of the Government.

Mr. BURGESS. I think the gentleman from Ohio, who, as I understand, is a good lawyer, would not say for a minute that we ought to refuse to pay these people because there might have been a failure of title in the Government in the property on which they had worked under the direction of an officer of the Government.

Mr. KEIFER. The officer of the Government must be one authorized to act in such a matter. It seems to be assumed by the gentleman from Texas, and probably by the committee, that a lieutenant-colonel in command of a temporary post has authority to act for the Government in the way of taking possession of property and handling it and, in the name of the Government, selling it and returning the money to the United States Treasury. I say that is, as a general proposition, far from the case. Officers of the Army who did take possession of property always had to have special authority from the Secretary of the Treasury in those times; and although they might have been commanders of armies, they did not have authority to deal with property unless it was by special direction and through an agency extended by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BURGESS. I think technically the gentleman from Ohio is right on the last ground, but he changes his ground rapidly. His first position was to inquire into the character of the taking of the property as determining liability, and upon that issue I said that there was nothing in it. Now you make a point of the authority of the officer in the case. I do not think the gentleman is making any captious contest about this little bill of mine. I know he is not, because he says he is not; but that would be purely technical. It would be bad faith on the part of the Government to compel people who do work to determine technical questions of authority on the part of a lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. KEIFER. That is the way it is always, in any transaction. You have to find a competent agent to make a contract for an individual, a corporation, or the Government, and he must act within the scope of his agency. But if I were satisfied that the committee were right in reaching the conclusion that the Government of the United States got the proceeds of the sale of this cotton, I would not make any point about whether the agent was authorized to take it or not——

Mr. BURGESS. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. KEIFER. Because in that case it would be held that the Government had ratified the action of the party who assumed to be its authorized agent, and no proof of original authority to act would be required.

Mr. BURGESS. Two committees have decided that the Government did get the money.

Mr. KEIFER. I have not understood from any person that there was any testimony tending to show that this cotton was subsequently sold and that the money went into the Treasury.

Mr. BURGESS. We have the testimony of five credible persons who swear that the cotton was delivered to Lieutenant-Colonel Cook, acting at that post. Now, what the officer did with the cotton we do not know, and, in God's name, how could these citizens know that? I do not know whether the officers embezzled it, or sold it, or whether they turned it over to other officers; but they got the cotton, and I think that is sufficient. Both committees say so.

Mr. KEIFER. I think that throws the only serious suspicion that there is against the claim—that last statement of the gentleman. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas, who introduced the bill, and the gentleman from Texas, who reported the bill, both indicate to the House that this bill has received careful consideration from the Committee on War Claims; that the evidence relating to the matter has been presented to that great committee, and that hence the House ought to take the judgment of the Committee on War Claims, based upon the evidence presented to that committee. It is unfortunate perhaps that the record of the bill itself shows that it was introduced in the House on the 28th of January and reported the next day. Everybody in the House knows that it is absolutely out of the question for the committee to have had an opportunity to give careful consideration to the evidence in the case and report it into the House the day after it was introduced.

Mr. BURGESS. Will the gentleman be fair? Will the gentleman kindly yield?

Mr. MANN. I always am willing to yield to the gentleman, if he will possess his soul in patience until I have finished a sentence. I yield to him with pleasure.

Mr. BURGESS. I will be patient, and I will present an explanation that will be perfectly satisfactory, even to the gentleman from Illinois, and that is putting it strongly.

Mr. MANN. Well, I did not yield for the gentleman to throw slurs on me. The gentleman should ask his question, if he wishes to.

Mr. BURGESS. There was no idea of a slur in it.

Mr. MANN. That was the only idea, of course, I am perfectly willing to say. The gentleman and I are good friends.

Mr. BURGESS. Let me make my statement.

Mr. MANN. I will let you make a speech in my time.

Mr. BURGESS. I do not want to make a speech. The facts are these: The bill was introduced early in the session. The original documents, which were in the room of the file clerk, and which had been before the Committee on Claims, were gotten out and filed with that bill.

The chairman of the committee—who is present on the floor, and will verify the facts as I state them—upon examination of the bill concluded that the phraseology of the bill I had introduced was deficient and it was really necessary to change it so that under the ruling of the Treasury officials the money would be paid, and he kindly sent for me and gave me a copy which he had drawn with the correct phraseology and which I introduced, as the gentleman from Illinois has stated, and which was reported the next day, the committee having previously passed upon the substance of the facts of my bill and the proof which accompanied it.

Mr. MANN. I should say that the gentleman's explanation was proof satisfactory and fully exonerates the committee. Now, that does not go to the main objection of the proposition in this bill. We have just passed an omnibus bill containing war claims with over 300 items in it, which has been considered by the Court of Claims, where the Government was represented by counsel, where full opportunity was given for the Government to put in its side of the case, where the facts are ascertained and reported to Congress, and everyone here knows that it is not within the power of the Committee on War Claims in the House, or any other committee, to give consideration to the facts in regard to all the bills before the committee.

Now, why is it sought to take this kind of a claim out of the general rule and send it to the Committee on Claims? My observation in the past has been that when a man had a good claim he asked to have it referred under the Bowman Act; if he had a doubtful claim he asked to have it referred under the Tucker Act; and if he had a thoroughly bad claim he asked to refer it to the committee without any reference to the Court of Claims. That is the suspicious fact about this bill. If it is a good claim it can be reported on after it is passed upon by the Court of Claims.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist that this claim could be referred under the Bowman or Tucker Act? Is it that character of claim which could have been referred under those acts?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly; this bill can be referred under the Bowman Act.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. By Congress.

Mr. MANN. It can be referred by the committee under the Bowman Act.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Well, for the purpose of concluding the argument, I will admit the fact. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Texas is on the Committee on War Claims; he is a distinguished member of that committee, and a very distinguished Member of the House. I am very glad, by the way, to see him back in the House, because I think he is an ornament to this body. The Bowman Act provides that whenever a claim or matter is pending before any committee in the Senate or House, or before either House, which involves the investigation and determination of facts, etc.—it may be referred to the Court of Claims. Nine-tenths of the claims in the omnibus bill just passed were referred to the Court of Claims under that provision of the law. Why does the gentleman seek to take his claim out and give it a more preferential standing, instead of being willing to pass it through the scrutiny of the Court of Claims?

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Vermont, chairman of the committee, a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has the floor.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I wanted to ask the chairman of the committee if he recommends the passage of this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas to lay the bill aside with a favorable report.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM WILMOT WHITE.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to take up the bill H. R. 4763, transferring Commander William Wilmot White from the retired to the active list of the Navy.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves to take up the bill H. R. 4763.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he hereby is, authorized to appoint, by and with the consent of the Senate, William Wilmot White, now a commander on the retired list of the Navy, a commander on the active list of the United States Navy, to take rank next above Commander Emil Theiss, United States Navy: Provided, That the said William Wilmot White shall be carried as additional to the number of the grade to which he may be appointed under this act or at any time thereafter promoted: And provided further, That the said William Wilmot White shall not by the passage of this act be entitled to back pay of any kind: And provided further, That the said William Wilmot White shall pass a physical examination before said transfer, showing his fitness to enter the active service of the Navy.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

L. K. SCOTT.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 2756) for the relief of L. K. Scott and consider the same at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to L. K. Scott the sum of $7,500 for royalty upon telescopic sights; and said sum shall be in full satisfaction of all claims in behalf of said Scott, or his estate, against the United States arising from the use of said telescopic sights; and there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $7,500 for the purposes specified in this act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. For what purpose has this bill been read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asked unanimous consent for its present consideration, and that consent was granted.

Mr. MANN. Before the bill was read?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. That is a very unusual proceeding.

The CHAIRMAN. After the title was read the gentleman obtained unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. MANN. It is a very unusual proceeding to ask that the title of a bill be read.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand that that is a parliamentary situation at all. Under the rule, if the Committee on War Claims or anyone interested in war claims waives the right to proceed, the Committee on Claims has precedence, and there is no such parliamentary situation as stated.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the Chair having decided, I think I shall proceed. There will be no objection on the part of this committee, or especially on the part of the chairman, to any Member of this House objecting to any bills that we present. There is no such pride on the part of the committee that would cause our feelings to be wounded for a single moment if any Member of this House desires to offer any objection to any report that we present. We present only such reports as in our judgment we feel justified in presenting to the Committee of the Whole House.

In brief, I desire to say, in reference to this bill, that it is a bill for the relief of L. K. Scott. L. K. Scott, in 1809, entered into an agreement or contract with the War Department to furnish that Department some telescopic sights. At the time he did not want to sell one or two of these sights without having some assurance that he might sell to the Government a large number of sights, so that he might make a large profit out of his invention, and the War Department agreed with him. He went then to the Patent Office and filed an application for a patent, and took out a patent upon his sights, and then he sold to the War Department these sights. It was understood at the time that a certain number of sights were to be purchased by the Government, but afterwards while a large number of sights had been purchased, not nearly the number that had been agreed upon or talked about were purchased, and the Government finally decided that they could not pay his claim and offered the following as a reason:

The War Department has endeavored to secure payment to Colonel Scott of the sum of $7,500 as royalty of $50 for each of the 150 sights first manufactured in the United States, and such payment has been recommended by the Ordnance Department, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of State; but as Colonel Scott's claim was not founded upon a legal contract, payment from existing appropriations has been disapproved by the Comptroller of the Treasury.

Colonel Scott was not a citizen of the United States, but was a foreigner, and he entered into a contract with a Department in this country, a Department of our Government, and we feel, as did the Secretary of State, and the Secretary of War, and other officers of the Government, that we ought to keep good faith, especially with citizens of other countries if we do not with our own people. They have recommended this payment, and I move that this bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is an old familiar friend. I suppose it might get through this time. It has failed several times before. The facts are—I have not the report before me, for I did not expect this bill to be called up, but I remember them well enough to state them—the facts are that a gentleman living, I believe, in England, having a patent on certain kinds of gun sights, sold certain of his sights to this country. He thought he was going to sell a large number, and it is very likely that the War Department thought they would purchase a large number of sights. He sold two or three to begin with, took out a patent to protect himself in this country, and afterwards the War Department purchased a large number of additional sights from him, but not as many as he thought they ought to purchase. Afterwards his patent ran out, and the Government purchased a number of sights from a firm in Cleveland, Ohio, which sights it was claimed were an infringement, or would have been an infringement, of Scott's patent if that patent had still been in force. That is all there is to the claim. There was no promise on the part of the Government to purchase any number of sights. They never purchased additional sights from him. There is no certainty that the sights furnished by the Cleveland company were even an infringement upon the patent if it had been in force, but here is a proposition to present a gratuity to a man simply because he is not a citizen of the United States.

Mr. HINSHAW. Is the gentleman certain that the patent had ceased to exist or had run out at the time of the purchase of the Cleveland firm?

Mr. MANN. Well, I am not certain about that. I have stated my recollection in regard to it, and the gentleman may correct me about it. I have not read the report in recent months, but my recollection is that that is the case, and if the patent had not run out there would have been no question of the payment of the claim by the Government or by the company that sold the sights to the Government. If the patent had not run out, Warren & Co., or whatever the name was—Warren was a member, I think, of Cleveland—that furnished these sights were perfectly responsible and good for the infringement of the man's patent, if there was an infringement of it. Now, what excuse is offered? None has been offered to us for the payment of this gratuity. There is no claim against the Government, there is no promise on the part of the Government to purchase the sights. All the sights the Government ever purchased from this man they paid him for, and they paid him for some and they paid him his royalty, but because the Government did not purchase as many as he thought the Government ought to purchase from him, therefore we ought to pay the royalty he would have received if we had purchased a much larger number. What justice is there in such a claim? And yet that is the claim before the House.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I want the committee to distinctly understand what there is in this case. This is what the officers say in reference to it:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF ORDNANCE, UNITED STATES ARMY,
Washington, March 16, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith an estimate, amounting to $7,500, for compensation to L. K. Scott for his telescopic sights procured by this Department. Accompanying the estimate are the papers on which the estimate is based, the action of the War Department thereon, and the decision of the Comptroller of the Treasury (to whom the matter was referred for authority to pay the claim from an existing appropriation), to the effect that if the proposed payment were predicated upon a legal contract, expressed or implied, he would be disposed to give it his approval, but in view of the facts he finds that resort in this case must be had to the legislative department of the Government. The whole correspondence tends to show that the inventor had reason to believe that he would eventually receive from this Government an order for a further supply of sights or a royalty for sights made in this country.

Very respectfully,
A. R. BUFFINGTON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Then, again, we have the following:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 22, 1900.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith, for the consideration of Congress, an estimate ($7,500) of appropriation required to pay L. K. Scott a royalty for telescopic sights furnished the War Department, and to request that the item may be included in the general deficiency bill.

Very respectfully,
ELIHU ROOT,
Secretary of War.

The SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Then the matter was referred to the Secretary of the Treasury, and he referred it to Congress, asking for an appropriation, and then afterwards Mr. Hay wrote the following:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, December 11, 1903.

The PRESIDENT:

In connection with House Document No. 533, Fifty-sixth Congress, first session, I have the honor to lay before the President a copy of a communication from the British ambassador with reference to a claim of Lieut. Col. L. K. Scott, C. B., late of the Royal Engineers, on account of the adoption by the United States Ordnance Department of a system of sighting of which he is the inventor.

The equitable right of Lieutenant-Colonel Scott to payment for the use of his invention is stated in a report made by the Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army to the Secretary of War on May 11, 1903, a copy of which I also submit herewith.

I do not hesitate, therefore, to recommend that Congress be asked to provide for the payment of the claim in the amount stated by the Chief of Ordnance.

Respectfully submitted. JOHN HAY.

Then, later, Mr. Taft, speaking of the same case in a letter of January 17, 1905, said:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 17, 1905.

SIR: I recommend the passage of the bill appropriating $7,500 to Col. L. K. Scott.

It appears to be the general custom in European countries for those who have invented devices in arms for which generally governments are the only customers not to furnish samples of their new devices, though patented, to any government except upon an agreement that the government will take a large amount of the arms.

Colonel Scott was induced to depart from this custom by the understanding that the Government, if the sample sights proved to be satisfactory, would take a large number within a short time. The Government did take 100 sights, which made a profit to Colonel Scott of about $5,000, but Secretary Root thought that he was entitled to anticipate a much larger sale than this. As a matter of fact, the patent which he took out to protect him expired before the Government used the sights.

Thereafter the Government did use a large number of the sights, some 250. Secretary Root thought it equitable to allow Colonel Scott $7,500 in addition to that which he had already received, and I concur in that recommendation. There is no legal obligation on the part of the Government; the moral obligation grows out of the fact that Colonel Scott was induced to part with two sample sights with the expectation, which then Lieutenant Crozier and Colonel Scott both had, that if the sights proved to be satisfactory the Government would at once purchase enough to equip all the guns in the artillery with them. The truth is that this is what ought to have been done, but through an unjustifiable delay of the officer charged with the duty the sights were not then purchased. When the Spanish war came on it was necessary to manufacture them, and we were enabled to manufacture them quickly and promptly by reason of having obtained the sights from Colonel Scott, when if we had not obtained them we should have had to secure them, if at all, in some surreptitious way.

Very respectfully,
WM. H. TAFT, Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
United States Senate.

I simply ask the committee to adopt the recommendations of Secretary of War Taft, of former Secretary of State, Mr. Hay, and of Elihu Root, Secretary of State at the present time, and the President's indorsement and request.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. PAYNE. I have been looking at the report, Mr. Chairman, and the report in this case refers to the report in the Fifty-ninth Congress, which seems to state the facts as they were understood by the committee at that time. I will read:

In 1889 the War Department ordered from Lieutenant-Colonel Scott, of the Royal Engineers, through Lieutenant Crozier, the representative of the Ordnance Department in London, two Scott telescopic sights for trial. Colonel Scott was unwilling to sell a single sight to the Department without an assurance that in the event of its proving satisfactory the right of manufacture should be purchased or a further supply of sights be ordered to the value of about $100,000. Knowing the difficulties in the way of making any such arrangement, Lieutenant Crozier advised Colonel Scott to seek the protection of the United States patent laws, in order that he might sell a single sight without fear that it would be used as a pattern without proper compensation to him. This course was adopted, and having patented his system May 27, 1890, Colonel Scott furnished the Department with two sample sights, for which he received £79.

Instead of making a contract, he told him to seek the protection of the patent laws.

Subsequently, in 1894, a third sight, slightly modified, was procured. This was subjected to a careful test, as the two previous sights had been, and was found satisfactory. The War Department thereafter purchased 100 sights, for which Colonel Scott was paid £2,500, this price including the royalty of £10 per sight. Pending the delivery of these sights in the spring of 1898 the Spanish-American war broke out and it was not practicable to obtain others abroad.

More sights, however, were urgently needed for the guns in place in the fortifications, and it was found necessary to manufacture them in the United States. On March 22, 1898, an order was placed with Warner & Swasey, of Cleveland, Ohio, for 125 Scott sights, this number being subsequently increased to 150. These 150 sights clearly embodied Colonel Scott's patent, though they differed slightly from sights previously furnished by him.

Colonel Scott's English patent expired November 18, 1895, having run the full term of fourteen years, and his American patent expired contemporaneously with it. No sights, therefore, were manufactured in the United States until after the expiration of the patent, and the War Department, in view of the urgent need for the sights, was justified in placing the order with Warner & Swasey, inasmuch as none of Colonel Scott's legal rights were thereby infringed.

The War Department might have ordered the 150 sights which they ordered at the breaking out of the Spanish war, without paying Colonel Scott anything, because his patent then had already expired.

It thus appears that the United States has adopted and made use of 250 Scott sights, embodying the English patent, and of 185 others modeled somewhat after the same patent—in all, 435 sights. Colonel Scott received royalties only upon the 100 sights made in England.

Now, it seems to be simply a case that after a patent has expired and the United States has paid royalty upon 150 of these patented articles, and then, because they could not get them of him and did not continue to pay it, went to somebody else and got them to manufacture them, therefore here is a claim for a royalty of £10 a sight on these sights that were manufactured in the United States. Certainly the man has not the slightest legal or equitable standing. He knew when the patent expired. He knew it expired in November, 1905. He had the benefit of his fourteen years' patent in Great Britain and for the time it was patented here in this country.

Mr. HACKNEY. Would not this also be extending this patent law if we were to pass this kind of a claim by putting a further time on his patent than what was fixed by the general law?

Mr. PAYNE. That would amount to an extension of the patent law. Of course the House knows it has been the settled purpose of the House not to extend any patent law for our own citizens or citizens abroad. The time was when we used to do that sort of thing by special act, but that bad practice has been broken up and we have not had a single patent extended in this country, no matter how meritorious the device, no matter how late the patentee was in getting it upon the American market, no matter how little money he might have received for the work of his brains. They have established the fact that they will not extend a patent. Then, why come in here and extend this patent?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WALDO].

Mr. WALDO. I must beg leave to differ with the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] who has just spoken, when he says that there are no equitable rights in this case. I am happy to say that our Secretary of State and a former Secretary of the Treasury and the President of the United States agree with me that this is an equitable claim that the United States ought to pay. The question is not a question of patent at all. This inventor had this invention that eventually we were obliged to use by reason of the Spanish-American war by means of an agreement made by our War Department with Colonel Scott, that got that invention for use in this country for the War Department on the agreement that we would pay for whatever we used of them. And General Crozier got him to go and take out a patent. That had nothing to do with the case. We agreed to pay for that invention. The only thing in it is that General Crozier thought we would try to beat him out of it if he did not get a patent. That is what these gentlemen want us to do. This patent has nothing to do with it. We had his invention. We could not have got it without the representations that General Crozier and our officers made to him. We got it, and we used it, and all the officers of the War Department, the Secretary of State, and the President say that we ought to pay him as we agreed to, and that is what I believe, and that is what our committee unanimously believe, and that is why we report that bill here. And that is the reason I think this House ought to vote to pay him.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MANN. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 56, noes 16.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HASKINS. I move that the committee rise and report to the House such bills from the War Claims Committee as have been laid aside with a favorable recommendation, including the bill of the Naval Committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to rise and report under these circumstances has precedence.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 33, noes 64.

So the motion was lost.

JOHN P. HUNTER.

Mr. MILLER. I now call up the bill (H. R. 2915) for the relief of John P. Hunter.

The bill was read.

Mr. PAYNE. I make a point of order against that bill. It is not in order at this time. This day has been set apart for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, giving the War Claims Committee preference. There are other war claims bills on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLER. I only desire to say, in reply to the gentleman from New York, that I have asked unanimous consent to take up this, and the House has granted its consent.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman from New York, that the chairman of the Committee on War Claims has made his report, and there are a number of other war claims bills on the Calendar, and no member of this committee has asked to take those claims up, and when neither the Committee on War Claims nor the members of this committee have asked for their consideration, I have the right to call up these claims, and they have as much right for consideration as any others.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the point of order of the gentleman from New York is not well taken, for the reason that the motion made by the gentleman from Vermont in the House this morning was to the effect that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for for purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar, and there was nothing whatever in the motion as to the consideration of bills of the War Claims Committee on the Calendar.

Mr. MANN. But the rules provide in regard to that. Now, this is the situation, it seems to me. I do not think it makes much difference whether these bills are considered to-day or not. Under the rules, the Clerk will proceed to report the bills from the Committee on War Claims on this day in the order in which they appear on the Calendar. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take up one bill. He could ask unanimous consent to take up another bill, otherwise, as I take it, this committee would have to proceed with the bills on the Calendar in the way in which they appear.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. Is there any person asking permission to call up any bill on the Calendar from the War Claims Committee?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman misstates what I say. It is not necessary to ask permission to call up a bill on that Calendar from that committee. When the House goes into Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar it is not necessary nor customary for some one to ask unanimous consent to take up or to move to take up a bill. The bill takes up itself in regular order unless otherwise ordered.

Mr. FINLEY. I would like to state to the gentleman from Illinois that I understand unanimous consent is required to consider this bill. I believe in my nine years' experience in the House I have had but two claim bills of this character, and I know this one is meritorious. The gentleman who is named in this case is now on his deathbed, and I hope there will be no objection to its consideration.

Mr. MANN. I can assure the gentleman, so far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing that all these bills from the committee may be considered in that way.

Mr. FINLEY. I have had only two bills before the Committee on Claims, and I hope this one will be considered, as I have information that the claimant is on his deathbed.

Mr. PAYNE. So far as the point of order is concerned, it is perfectly clear what the order is to-day. It is to take up and give preference to bills from the Committee on War Claims on the Calendar in the order in which they appear. Now, that works automatically, and the only way that can be changed is for some gentleman to ask to take up a particular bill. If the gentleman wants to take up this bill on the Calendar, I have no objection to his asking it; but I want to see the committee proceed in order and not get into a disorderly way, trying to take up these bills out of their order on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the committee proceed to the consideration of the bill for the relief of John P. Hunter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is well taken. The Chair is also of the opinion, however, under the order adopted by the House on March 14, 1900, and repeated in every Congress since, that to-day we can not take up the bills reported from the Committee on Claims, except by unanimous consent, so long as there are any war claims on the Calendar.

Mr. MILLER. I ask unanimous consent to take up the next bill on the Calendar.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman let the bill be read, to see what it is, before consent is given?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the relief of John P. Hunter.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to John P. Hunter, late United States marshal for the district of South Carolina, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $308.13, which sum shall be taken and accepted and receipted for in full satisfaction of his claim for services performed by his deputy, H. J. Hickson, in the case of the United States against J. T. Tillman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MILLER. I call on the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. PATTERSON] to make a statement in reference to this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. Chairman, this is a claim on the part of the United States marshal for the district of South Carolina, who executed a bench warrant issued by the circuit judge of that circuit upon one J. T. Tillman, in the State of Texas. He arrested Tillman and brought him to Charleston, and when he made out his account for his fees for that service it was rejected upon the grounds that he was not the proper official to perform that duty, that the United States marshal of the district in Texas where this defendant was found was the proper person. He did, however, perform the service as required and brought the defendant to justice.

Mr. FINLEY. Had it not been the practice and the understanding that the law was that the work should be done by Marshal Hunter, and that he should be paid for it, and is it not true that three or four days before the warrant was issued the Comptroller had made a decision in which he held that that was not the law? At the time Marshal Hunter performed this service that decision was unknown to him, and it was only when his account was finally adjudicated that he discovered that this ruling had been made. At the time this service was rendered the practice all over the United States was for marshals to do the work just as Marshal Hunter did it in this case.

Mr. MANN. Is not this a bill to pay a marshal 20 cents per mile for the transportation of a prisoner?

Mr. FINLEY. Ten cents.

Mr. MANN. To pay a marshal and his deputy 10 cents a mile, most of which is profit and does not represent outlay?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is for the mileage of the deputy who serves the bench warrant.

Mr. MANN. This bill has been before the House before?

Mr. FINLEY. Never; only it was favorably reported.

Mr. MANN. But I remember the case in the last session.

Mr. FINLEY. It was reported late in the last session.

Mr. MANN. I was sure that I remembered the case. A marshal and his deputy carried a prisoner across the State line, out of one district into another. If he had remained in the district the law would give him 20 cents a mile for the distance traveled, although we know that it cost him but 3 or 4 cents a mile. Going out of the district, the law did not give it to him, but he still wants it just the same, for the prisoner, for himself, and for the deputy, most of which would be profit if he had received it under the technical provision of the law.

Mr. FINLEY. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the course followed by Marshal Hunter was followed by all the marshals in the United States up to December 27, 1894. This work was performed in January, 1895, and but for the decision of the Comptroller, rendered on the 27th of December, there would have been no question about it.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that so far as equity is concerned a marshal who pays now, in the gentleman's State, I suppose, 2½ or 3 cents a mile railroad fare for himself and prisoner, is entitled to charge the Government 10 or 20 cents a mile?

Mr. FINLEY. I will answer the gentleman from Illinois by saying that I think this bill is in every respect entirely equitable and just.

Mr. MILLER. I simply want to say, as chairman of the committee, that the Comptroller who decided against the allowance of this account did so on the ground that a warrant of arrest does not extend beyond the district out of which it issues. This prisoner had got away and the mashal went after him and brought him back, and they disallowed the fees because the warrant of arrest did not extend beyond the district out of which it was issued. He had to pay the expenses of bringing him back.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman from Illinois inquires about the equity of the matter. The equity is this. The marshal was sent by the district judge after this prisoner and he went for him and brought him back. He ought to be paid for his work and his mileage. The horse that draws the plow ought to eat the corn. [Laughter.]

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the next bill.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say to the gentleman that unless this is the last bill I call for the regular order.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HASKINS] there were—ayes 4, noes 62.

So the motion was lost.

L. B. WYATT.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the following bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3388) for the relief of L. B. Wyatt.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to L. B. Wyatt, late postmaster at New Decatur, Morgan County, Ala., the sum of $135.60, in full compensation for fumigating the mails during the yellow-fever epidemic between September 22 and November 12, 1888, made under proper authority.

SEC. 2. That all the proof heretofore taken and now on file in the office of the file clerk may be used in evidence in support of this claim.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I understand, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman of the committee has only six bills that he wants to call up, and that they do not involve a large amount. Inasmuch as it seems to be the temper of the committee to give the gentleman a chance, I shall not object.

Mr. MILLER. I am not sure that there are only six; there may be eight. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

POPE & TALBOT, OF SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (S. 1256) for the relief of Pope & Talbot, of San Francisco, Cal.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Pope & Talbot, of San Francisco, Cal., the sum of $3,179.20, in full for damages to their schooner Spokane, injured by the United States revenue cutter Bear off the port of San Francisco, Cal., on the 4th day of June, 1904.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, what is the amount carried in that bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Three thousand one hundred and seventy-nine dollars and twenty cents.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. The chairman has asked for unanimous consent. I suppose it will be essential to find out about that first.

Mr. MILLER. I will yield to the gentleman from California to explain it.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the bill has passed the Senate and is a unanimous report. On the 4th of June, 1904, the schooner Spokane, near the port of San Francisco, was run into by the revenue cutter Bear. At that time an investigation was had, and a board of survey consisting of three captains of the Revenue-Cutter Service made this report:

CONCLUSIONS OF THE BOARD.

The board concludes from the testimony as above cited that the responsibility for the collision rests with the Bear for the following reasons:

1. The schooner Spokane, under the circumstances and according to the provisions of the Rules of the Road, had the right of way and that she did not violate any of these rules; that her lights were burning and the proper lookout was being maintained.

2. Lack of judgment on the part of the officer of the deck of the Bear in attempting to haul up and cross the bow of the schooner against a heavy sea and wind when she was practically lying dead in the water, when a little consideration must have convinced him that there was not sufficient room between the two vessels to make such an attempt successful. The state of the wind and sea and the direction of the Bear's head makes it clear, in the judgment of the board, that had the officer of the deck increased the speed of the vessel from "slow" to "full speed ahead" and put his helm astarboard, the Bear would have fallen off before the wind and sea and cleared the schooner.

3. In the handling of the vessel the officer of the deck furthermore showed lack of decision as well as lack of judgment by changing the speed of the vessel from "full speed ahead" (which might possibly have cleared them) to "full speed astern" while still directly in the path of the approaching schooner. Such action on his part not only jeopardized the safety of his own vessel, but would tend to confuse the people on the approaching schooner and nullify any attempt that they may have made or wished to make to avoid the collision.

Respectfully, yours,

F. M. MUNGER,
Captain, Revenue-Cutter Service.
F. TUTTLE,
Captain, Revenue-Cutter Service.
H. B. ROGERS,
Captain, Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have no objection to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

J. A. GALLAHER, ADMINISTRATOR OF JOSEPH H. GALLAHER.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 6515) for the relief of J. A. Gallaher, administrator of the estate of Joseph H. Gallaher, deceased.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of J. A. Gallaher, administrator of the estate of Joseph H. Gallaher, deceased, United States coupon 5–20 bonds, act of March 3, 1865, consols of 1865, Nos. 22421, 22422, 61411, 61412, 61413, 61414, 61415, 61416, 61417, 137836, 137837, 137838, 209608, each of the denomination of $1,000, with interest from January 1, 1872, to date of maturity of the respective calls in which the bonds were included, said bonds and interest coupons alleged to have been lost or destroyed: Provided, That the said J. A. Gallaher, administrator, shall first file in the Treasury a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal of said bonds and accrued interest thereon to the date of their maturity, with good and sufficient sureties to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, with conditions to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim because of the lost or destroyed bonds hereinbefore described and the interest thereon.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN V. JOHNSON.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 13875) for the relief of John V. Johnson.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to take up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the said John V. Johnson (doing business under the name of the Brooklyn Architectural Iron Works) be, and he hereby is, relieved from any penalty, forfeiture, or claim for liquidated damages under his certain contract with the United States of America, dated on or about the 22d day of December, 1906, to install a steel book stack and gallery in the record vault at the United States Immigration Station, Ellis Island, New York Harbor.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the said John V. Johnson (doing business under the name of the Brooklyn Architectural Iron Works), the sum of $1,800, the full amount due him under said contract without deduction of any penalty, forfeiture, or claim for liquidated damages or otherwise.

With the following amendment:

Strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 2. That the said John V. Johnson (doing business under the name of the Brooklyn Architectural Iron Works) shall be paid the sum of $1,800 from the permanent appropriation 'Expenses of regulating immigration,' in full of the amount due him under said contract, without deduction of any penalty, forfeiture, or claim for liquidated damages or otherwise."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Chairman, this bill is for the purpose of relieving this contractor from liquidated damages charged against him by the Department under the contract. The principal trouble that arose was the question as to whether the enamel should be baked upon the stack. The Department insisted that it should be, and thereupon the goods were taken back and a delay occurred from having that enamel baked upon it. Then it was sent back. The Department say they suffered no damages really; they got the thing in proper shape, in the shape they desire, and the only question now is whether this man shall be paid his $1,800, which was his contract, or whether nearly the whole amount shall be taken away from him for liquidated damages. This merely relieves him from the penalty that occurred in having this enamel baked upon the stack, and it is recommended by the Department as being proper. I believe he ought to be paid. It will practically ruin the man if he is not. He is a small manufacturer, and he will receive no pay at all if the penalty is charged against him.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER. I now move that the bill as amended be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

RELIEF OF COPIAH COUNTY, MISS.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 10075) for the relief of Copiah County, Miss., which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to the board of supervisors of Copiah County, Miss., the sum of $164.50, in full compensation for costs incurred in defending the suit of the United States against the board of supervisors of Copiah County and the Virginia Bridge and Iron Company in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of Mississippi, at May term, 1899, held at Jackson, Miss., said suit being instituted to enjoin the board of supervisors of Copiah County from constructing a bridge over Pearl River at Rockport, Miss., which injunction was dissolved by the court and costs adjudged against the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he is sure that this bill was not passed and the amount paid in the last Congress?

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from New York that it did pass the House at the last session of Congress, but it did not become a law, and the amount has not been paid.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that this bill did pass the House, but it was so bad after the exposé which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and some more of us made in the House that even the Senate would not pass it. [Laughter.]

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, Mr. Chairman, that statement is incorrect, for the reason that it did pass the Senate, but did not reach the President in time to receive his signature.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY RUSTAN.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 6902) for the relief of Henry Rustan, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Henry Rustan $200, to reimburse him for money paid by him at the direction of the register and receiver of the United States land office at Grand Forks, N. Dak., for making cash entry No. 17064, dated November 28, 1904, when no part of said payment was required, as said Henry Rustan was entitled to patent for the land entered without such payment under section 2291, Revised Statutes, and said sum is hereby appropriated for said purpose out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

With the following amendment:

In line 4, in lieu of the words "two hundred" insert the words "one hundred and ninety-six."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MILLER. I move that the amendment be agreed to.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HERMAN ANDRAE ELECTRICAL COMPANY, MILWAUKEE, WIS.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8947) for the relief of the Herman Andrae Electrical Company, of Milwaukee, Wis.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be paid from the proper Indian tribal fund, to the Herman Andrae Electrical Company, of Milwaukee, Wis., the sum of $480, deducted by the Secretary of the Interior as a penalty under contract No. 15042, dated December 4, 1906.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to have that bill explained. I wish to know something about the facts in connection with this bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman gets to that I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he is sure there are not more than six more bills?

Mr. MILLER. I will assure the gentleman from New York that there are not more than six.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, this bill is to reimburse the contractor for an amount which was deducted because the work was not completed within the stipulated time. The contract provided for the establishment of an electric lighting plant at the Green Bay Indian Reservation and was to have been completed on March 1 last, but was not completed until April 28. Forty-eight days expired and a penalty of $10 a day was exacted as provided in the contract for failure to finish the work on the stated day. The Comptroller held the Indian Commissioner had no discretion whatsoever to relieve the contractor of this penalty, even though the Government had suffered no damage through the delay. Under the contracts that are now being executed discretion is vested in the Secretary of the Interior to relieve the contractors of the penalty when no injury is suffered by the Department. In the present contract no such discretion was lodged with the Department. In this instance no injury was suffered by the Government at all. The letter from the Secretary of the Interior as printed in the report shows that no damage was suffered whatsoever and this bill seeks to reimburse the contractor $480, the amount of the penalty.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken and the motion was agreed to.

J. EDMUND STRONG.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 15070), for the relief of J. Edmund Strong.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay to J. Edmund Strong, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $434.89.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, this is a case where a contractor with the Government to furnish Indian supplies could not fulfill his contract within the time prescribed, but shortly afterwards he did fulfill his contract, so the Government was not damaged in any way.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Did the Department recommend the reimbursement?

Mr. MILLER (reading)—

In view of this fact and the statement that no damage was suffered by reason of the delay, I am of the opinion that the claim as presented is meritorious.

JESSE E. WILSON,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. MANN. I have no disposition to antagonize this bill any more than the others of this sort, but does the gentleman think it ought to be the policy of the Government to relieve contractors in all cases where they fail to fulfill their contracts at the time they agree to do so?

Mr. MILLER. In answer to that, I will say each case must stand upon its own bottom. I would judge of the case by the conditions surrounding it. In this case it appears it was impossible for him to comply with his contract. The Government admits that no harm came to the Indians and the Government has lost nothing by it, and in such a case I think the claim ought to be paid, and I think the Government ought not to keep out the amount they kept back.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt there are equities in this case. There were three cases of this kind this afternoon. Does the gentleman's committee have a great many of these claims pending before it, and is it not likely you will have a great many pending if we start out upon the plan of relieving contractors every time?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, my attention has not been called to any other of this class of claims before this committee, but I want to call the attention of the committee to the last claim which has just been reported, showing the great injustice that might be put upon a man dealing with the Government of the United States.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. While the gentleman from Kansas is hunting that, let me ask if this is not the rule now? I understand the contracts made since these contracts embody always discretionary power in the head of the Department to relieve, under proper circumstances, the contracting party from forfeiture. These contracts had no such discretion and the Department had absolutely no power to grant relief, and the Department recommends that the relief be granted. If these contracts had contained that provision, relief would have been granted by the Department and the parties would not have been compelled to come to Congress. Upon the strength of that statement I made no further objection, because I thought it was not establishing a bad precedent, in view of the statement made of the change of the character of the contracts.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the chairman of the Committee on Claims to say that the different Departments of the Government now provide, where liquidated damages are put in a contract, that on failure to perform the contract on time in any case the head of the Department can waive these provisions? Is that the practice?

Mr. MILLER. That is the very reason these people are here—because the Department could not give them relief.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] suggests that he has information, acquired on the floor here, that the old practice has changed and now the practice is that any Department can relieve——

Mr. MILLER. No Department of the Government has any such authority.

To show the great injustice in claims of this kind, I call attention now to the last bill. The amount of the contract was $1,800, but the amount assessed as penalty was $1,480. There is no question in the world but that the man did everything in his power to fulfill his contract in accordance with the terms thereof, but it was an utter impossibility for him to do it, and yet the Government held back $1,480 on a contract that only called for the payment of $1,800.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. If the gentleman will allow me, in relation to the other proposition, did not the gentleman from Kansas state a short time ago that the contracts that are being made now, instead of making the forfeiture absolute, gave the head of a Department the discretion to relieve the contracting party from forfeiture under proper circumstances? I think, perhaps, that statement was made by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD], however.

Mr. MILLER. I have no such information, and did not make any such statement. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] will allow me for a moment. It has been stated here that this was a penalty and then that it was liquidated damages. If it was a penalty, the Government would not have any right to hold on to it. If liquidated damages, they would have the legal right. And I want to say another thing to the gentleman from Kansas, that he will have to keep a wary eye on these people in the future, because the first thing he knows there will be bills before his committee to pay these gentlemen damages because they were delayed by the Government and could not fulfill their contract in time. And I expect to recognize some of these old friends in the future coming in in that way.

It is not a good practice. We had that same experience years ago about the building of vessels. They would come in here to be relieved from the liquidated damages, and then they would come in for damages because the Government had changed their plans, and things of that kind, which created a good deal of trouble and considerable expense. And I want to warn the gentleman against that sort of thing in the future.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a word in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE]. There are now in the neighborhood of 2,000 claims before the Committee on Claims. It would require many millions of dollars to pay them. Out of more than 2,000 claims the committee have only favorably reported 10 claims so far in this Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. How many have they reported unfavorably?

Mr. MILLER. They have considered a large number of claims that they will hereafter report unfavorably.

Mr. PAYNE. I am glad to have that assurance. I have had it before through other chairmen of the Committee on Claims and the Committee on War Claims that they would report them unfavorably, and I have not seen a great many of those reports. I think we ought to see them. I think it is their duty to the House to do it in order that the House in the future may have at its command the facts which they find out in investigating these claims, that they may guide our great-grandchildren when they are considering these claims many years from now.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MILLER] to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. FOSTER of Vermont, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration sundry bills, under the order of the House, and had directed him to report some with amendments and some without, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bills do pass.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared, with considerable care, some facts and statistics in regard to the State of North Carolina, which I desire to print in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that I may have leave to print.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

BILLS REPORTED FROM THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. HASKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question may be considered as ordered upon the bills and amendments, reported from the Committee of the Whole House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the previous question be considered as ordered on the several bills and amendments that have just been reported. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PAN-AMERICAN SCIENTIFIC CONGRESS.

Mr. CULLOM presented a resolution of the Association of American Universities assembled in convention at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Mich., which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN.

Whereas the executive committee of the Latin-American Scientific Congress had determined to make the next congress "Pan-American" instead of "Latin-American;" and

Whereas the Chilean Government has extended an invitation to the Government of the United States to participate in this congress, to assemble at Santiago, Chile, in December, 1908; and

Whereas this congress will serve to bring the best thought and experience of America to bear on the great problems common to all the Republics of this continent and will thus serve to strengthen the ties between the American nations: Be it

Resolved by the Association of American Universities assembled in convention at Ann Arbor, Mich., That the Congress of the United States be earnestly requested to make provision for adequate representation at this forthcoming Pan-American Scientific Congress, as recommended in the report of Secretary Root of December 19, 1907, and in the special message of the President of December 21, 1907.

DISTRICT JAIL AND WORKHOUSE.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I have here a report made by Samuel W. Curriden, chairman of the charities and correction committee of the East Washington Citizens' Association, regarding the deplorable conditions existing at the jail and workhouse of the District of Columbia.

I wish to add, Mr. President, that I have personal knowledge of the fact that there is a condition existing, especially in the jail in this District, that is a reproach to any civilized community, and I hope that in the near future we may have legislation that will correct it.

I move that the paper be printed as a document and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORT OF NATIONAL ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

Mr. WETMORE. I present the annual report of the National Academy of Sciences for the year 1907, as required by statute. The same statute provides for the printing of the report, so that no action by the Senate is necessary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will lie on the table.

A bill (S. 5151) to regulate interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors.

Be it enacted, etc., That spirituous, vinous, malt, and intoxicating liquors of all kinds within the borders of any State, and also the regulation and control of the same in all particulars and to the fullest extent, are hereby declared to be within the lawful police powers of such State, and, subject to the limitations expressed in this act, to be in all respects as fully subject to the laws of such State wherever and whenever found within the territorial limits thereof, and from whatever source they may come or be derived, as if produced therein, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in original packages or otherwise.

SEC. 2. Whenever any spirituous, vinous, malt, or intoxicating liquors of any kind shall, by being transported from one State into another

State, become a part of interstate commerce, said liquors are for all the purposes of this act hereby constituted a special class in such commerce, subject to the regulatory powers of Congress, and are hereby declared to be, upon arrival at the place of consignment within the borders of said State, and before delivery to the consignee or other person claiming any title or interest in the same, subject in all particulars and to the fullest extent to the police powers of such State as declared in the first section of this act: Provided, That nothing in this act shall authorize any interruption or interference with, by any State or its authority, of the transportation of such merchandise from without such State to the place of consignment within such State: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other common carrier, or other carrier engaged in interstate commerce, to deliver or offer to deliver to any person any of such liquors at any other point than the point of consignment, or to unnecessarily and unduly arrest the transportation of such liquors at any other point than the point of consignment, with the intent, either directly or indirectly, to violate the provisions of this act.

SEC. 3. That whenever any spirituous, vinous, malt, and intoxicating liquors of any kind shall be or become a part of interstate commerce, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other carrier, or any officer, employee, or agent thereof, engaged in or in connection with the transportation of such liquors of any kind from one State into another State, to collect, either directly or indirectly, on or before or after delivery from the consignor or consignee, or from any other person, the purchase price or any part thereof of such liquors; and it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other carrier, officer, employee, or agent thereof, engaged as aforesaid in any manner directly or indirectly to act as the agent of the consignor or consignee, or of the buyer or seller of such liquors, for the purpose in any manner or degree of buying or selling the same, saving only in the actual transportation and delivery of the same, and to the extent as provided in this act, subject in all cases to the full exercise of the police powers of the State into which such liquors are transported.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other carrier, officer, employee, or agent thereof, engaged as aforesaid, to accept for transportation or to transport from any State into any other State spirituous, vinous, malt, or intoxicating liquors consigned to any fictitious person or to any fictitious name, or without consignment to some person, or after having so accepted or transported any such liquors consigned to any fictitious person or fictitious name, or without consignment to any person, to deliver the same to any person whomsoever except in pursuance of the requirements of the police regulations as aforesaid of the State into which said liquors are thus transported.

SEC. 5. That every railroad company, express company, or other carrier as aforesaid, or any officer, employee, or agent thereof who shall knowingly violate the provisions of sections 3 and 4 of this act, or any part thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $5,000: Provided, That any officer, employee, or agent of such company or carrier who shall be convicted as aforesaid shall, in addition to the fine herein provided for, be liable, in the discretion of the court, to imprisonment for a term of not less than one nor more than two years.

SEC. 6. Nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize a State to control, or otherwise interrupt or interfere with, the transportation of liquors intended for shipment entirely through such State and not intended for delivery therein.

SEC. 7. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—KATE RANDALL.

On motion of Mr. BORAH, it was Ordered, That leave is hereby granted to withdraw the papers accompanying the bill (S. 3493) granting an increase of pension to Kate Randall, Sixtieth Congress, first session.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the Senate will indulge me, I desire to speak for a few minutes on a question of personal privilege.

On the 14th of January, 1908, the Senate in executive session, at the instance of the two Senators from Ohio, refused to confirm certain post-office appointments which had been made by the President. Interrogated by our friends of the press as to the reason why we had taken such action, I made a statement about in these words, as nearly as I can recall it: "That the action taken meant that there should not be in Ohio any further prostitution of the public patronage for public purposes without its being resented."

That is all I said about it, but it seems to have been enough. A day or two later I saw it stated in the newspapers that the President would prepare and make a full and detailed answer to all the charges that had been made, in the newspapers and otherwise, as to the use of patronage for any improper purpose by himself.

In the morning paper, I refer to the Washington Post, which I have before me, there appears a correspondence between the President and the Hon. Dudley W. Foulke, of Richmond, Ind., formerly a Civil Service Commissioner, as I am informed, and as I recall. In this letter of the President to Mr. Foulke he takes up all his appointments made since the last Congress and accounts for them in detail. He speaks in detail of the Ohio appointments that were rejected.

I might answer specifically, going into details, but, Mr. President, it seems to me that is unnecessary in view of other things that appear in this letter. I omit therefore to answer in detail, in the first place, because it is not very interesting to the people of this country who holds a particular post-office outside of the community in which it is held, and it is less interesting to the people of this country to know the details of a controversy leading up to such an appointment, if there may have been any controversy.

In all such statements of details it may be assumed that there will be found reasonable ground for differences of opinion and for controversy. It would be a fruitless effort, therefore, to undertake to bandy words as to what happened in any particular case, and as to what the particular details were, or what the particular recommendations were, or what were the particular considerations or influences that brought about the appointment.

There is something else, however, that I think I can address myself to with profit in this letter, and in answering that I will have practically answered, without going into details as to all the specific cases that have been mentioned.

I call attention to two general propositions stated in this letter. The President says, among other things:

> My interference with patronage matters in Ohio has been limited to insisting, as I should insist anywhere else, that opposition to the purposes, policies, and friends of the Administration shall not be considered as a necessary prerequisite to holding the commission of the President.

Evidently there is a misuse of language there. I think that what the President intended to say was that agreement with his policies and his purposes, and with the friends of the Administration, should not be taken as a necessary prerequisite to holding the Presidential commission.

The other general proposition is:

> Not an appointment has been made that would not have been made if there had been no Presidential contest impending, and in no case has there been a deviation from the course that I would have pursued had none of those who actually are candidates for the nomination been candidates; nor has a single officeholder been removed or threatened with removal or coerced in any way to secure his support for any Presidential candidate.

These general propositions are important. While the people of the country generally are not interested in the specific details of any particular appointment, they are all interested, and greatly interested, in the general propositions here enunciated. They are all interested to know that in the distribution of the patronage of this country, in the exercise of the tremendous powers of the Executive, there is no improper consideration of any kind involved; that it is all done with an eye single to the good of the public service, as it should be. By the statement of these propositions the President himself recognizes the great importance of their observance, and he also thereby impliedly recognizes the fact that if these propositions have been violated in the distribution of patronage gross wrong has been done to the public service. Therefore it is that I need not dwell upon the elemental propositions. They are all stated or implied by what the President himself has said. The question, therefore, to which I want to address myself is whether or not there has been this observance of these general propositions or a violation of them by the President in the distribution of the patronage in Ohio.

It is difficult, Mr. President, to prove cases of that character. Ordinarily transactions of that nature rest in parol; they are not reduced to writing; they are not in the form of letters; they are not in evidence that can not be contradicted, that is unimpeachable, that is conclusive when it is produced. But, fortunately, we have one case in Ohio where there is some written testimony, and I propose to offer that. I do not intend to comment upon it, except only to say that it speaks for itself. I do not intend to try to add to it, for it is not necessary to add to it. Either I misapprehend what the President means in the statement I have quoted or I misapprehend the force and intent and purpose of the action he took in the case to which I shall call attention.

I did not charge any responsibility upon the President personally for any misuse of patronage in Ohio. I had in mind what others have been doing. I have supposed all the while that the President was acting upon representations and recommendations made to him without knowledge of the basic facts upon which those recommendations and representations rested.

Now, I come to the case to which I have referred. In October last a recess appointment was made of Charles H. Bryson for postmaster at Athens, Ohio. Mr. Bryson had not sought the appointment. He is the owner and editor of the Athens Gazette. He has been active as a Republican leader in that county for many years. He is a man of the highest character and the very best standing in his county in every respect. Without solicitation on his part, his Representative in Congress, Hon. ALBERT DOUGLAS, recommended him to the President for appointment to be postmaster at Athens. The appointment was made; he gave bond and entered upon the discharge of the duties of his office. In the month of November he had occasion, in connection with the duties of his office, to come to Washington. While he was here, he was, unfortunately for him, interviewed—perhaps not unfortunately, either; I will recall that, and simply say that he was interviewed. In the Washington Post of November 22 appeared the following:

C. H. Bryson, the new postmaster at Athens, Ohio, came to Washington last evening, and in the course of a conversation on political affairs made some frank and extremely interesting observations upon the Ohio situation. Mr. Bryson attended the meeting of the executive and advisory committees of the League of Republican Clubs in Columbus Wednesday, which indorsed Senator FORAKER both for reelection to the Senate and for the Presidential nomination.

"That meeting was enthusiastic, and the dual indorsement of the Senator was a sincere expression of the sentiments of those present," said the postmaster. "The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

"It is now incumbent upon Mr. FORAKER to recognize them by some kind of a declaration or statement of his attitude on the Presidential question, and this is anticipated in a few days. Personally I do not know what the Senator intends to do in regard to making a fight for the nomination, but I think we shall soon know.

"There is no doubt he could secure some of the Ohio delegates to a national convention if he entered upon a canvass. The Senator is much stronger in the State to-day than he was six months ago. Secretary Taft, on the other hand, has lost strength, and could not get a solid delegation. The feeling against FORAKER was due to an emotional state of the public mind, aroused by the fact that he has opposed a few of the President's legislative recommendations and administrative acts.

"But that emotion has subsided, and the people of Ohio, after mature consideration, have come to realize that they were hasty in their judgment. In the place of condemnation there is now an appreciation of his courage in standing out for what he regarded as his conception of his public duty. The speeches he made during the summer and fall did much to dispel the hostile sentiment.

"The situation in Ohio, from a Republican standpoint, is worse to-day than it was when Secretary Taft's Presidential boom was launched. Then the State seemed to be almost unanimous for him; but now there is a sharp cleavage between the two factions which, if not closed up, may throw the State into the Democratic column next fall.

"There should be a compromise, such as was suggested many months ago; this provided for the indorsement of Taft for President and FORAKER for reelection to the Senate.

"Unless harmony is restored the contest will continue until next year, and then Secretary Taft, even though nominated by the national convention, would probably lose the State."

It will be observed that there is nothing said in this interview about the policies of the President; that the most that can be said of it is that the postmaster had indicated a preference for me over Secretary Taft for the support of the Ohio Republicans. There is no word of disparagement of Secretary Taft; there is no word of hostility to him; there is no reference to the Administration; no condemnation of it, direct or by inference.

The postmaster got through with his business here and returned to his home, unconscious of having given offense to anyone. He was very much surprised, therefore, when he received a letter written to him December 5, 1907, from his Representative in Congress, Hon. ALBERT DOUGLAS. I now read this letter:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 5, 1907.

C. H. BRYSON, Athens, Ohio.

MY DEAR BRYSON: Yesterday afternoon when I called at the office of Postmaster-General Meyer and was having a talk with him he informed me that the President had sent him a message directing him not to send your name to the Senate as postmaster at Athens.

You can imagine my surprise and regret. Mr. Meyer was very nice and kind about it, but knew nothing more about it.

I went from there directly to the White House and saw Mr. Loeb about it, and found that someone had laid before the President what purported to be an interview with you or remarks made by you published in the newspaper.

Mr. Loeb said to me that of course the President had no disposition whatever to criticise your views, but that he saw no reason for appointing men entirely out of sympathy with his policies to public office, or something to that effect.

Now, my judgment is that you had better come to Washington to see me at once, and let us disabuse the President's mind of any such idea.

I hope to see the President to-day or to-morrow and will be very glad to have you, on receipt of this, wire me whether you will come on immediately.

We can talk over the Glouster matter at the same time; and it will be a pleasure to see you.

Very cordially, yours, ALBERT DOUGLAS.

On receipt of that letter Mr. Bryson telegraphed Mr. DOUGLAS that he would come here a few days later. Thereupon, on receiving the telegram, Mr. DOUGLAS wrote to Mr. Bryson as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, December 7, 1907.

C. H. BRYSON, Esq., Athens, Ohio.

MY DEAR BRYSON: Your telegram came last night at midnight, saying, "Shall be there Sunday or Monday," and I will write a line in the event of its reaching you before you leave Athens; but I will probably wire you this morning asking you to come and see me directly when you are here.

I saw the President yesterday morning and he bluntly told me that I would have to recommend some one else. I begged him not to take any such position until I could talk with him further about it, but he spoke somewhat bitterly.

Meanwhile I have not been able to get hold of the interview and the newspaper clippings which seem to have made the trouble, but doubtless you can help me out when you get here.

Very sincerely, yours, ALBERT DOUGLAS.

On receipt of that letter Mr. Bryson wrote a letter which I shall read in justice to him, and then I want to add, in justice to the President and to everybody else concerned, that Mr. Bryson was, on the 7th day of January, a month after this correspondence, appointed by the President and promptly confirmed by the Senate, and is now holding the office of postmaster at Athens, Ohio. I do not present this to show that any man has been turned out of office, but only to show what pressure was brought to bear upon this man because he had expressed his individual opinion about a matter concerning which he had a right to have an opinion, and to express it anywhere and everywhere, with a view to find fault with him, or to estop him, or to coerce him, to use the language employed in the President's letter, into a different position from that which he felt he had a right to take.

ATHENS, OHIO, December 7, 1907.

Hon. ALBERT DOUGLAS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DOUGLAS: I have your letter of to-day, in which you say the President has instructed Postmaster-General Meyer not to send my name to the Senate and that the President has said that he "can see no reason for appointing men to public office entirely out of sympathy with his policies."

You say also that he draws these conclusions from certain interviews of mine published in Washington.

There was only one interview, Mr. President, but the plural word has crept in here by some means without being warranted.

In the interview I said that in my judgment Taft was losing and FORAKER was gaining in Ohio; that a compromise should be reached in the interest of the Republican party; that Taft probably could not carry the State if nominated with present complications, and, finally, that I favored the return of Senator FORAKER to the Senate. All of which is true.

Now, this language constitutes, according to the President's statement, my being out of sympathy with his policies.

In a statement sent to the Commercial Tribune, at Cincinnati, recently, in reply to a question, I stated, without qualification, that I favored "a continuance of the policies of President Roosevelt and a candidate who favored them," but neither my first, second, nor third choice (not a personal choice, nor one made on a basis of State pride, but one made with a view to the very best interests of the Republican party) at that time was Taft. My reason was that I thought he could not be elected and that another could be elected. I have written and have published much in commendation of the policies of President Roosevelt, but not one disparaging statement as to his policies has appeared in my paper with my knowledge, and I think none at all have appeared.

I said when in Washington recently to some of the party leaders anxious as to the success of the party that at that time it looked as though the only chance of party success lay in the hope that Roosevelt would accept a renomination; that if there were another candidate who could be elected future developments must demonstrate the fact; that personally I had so far taken a neutral attitude with only this thought in mind; that I had said to Mr. Vorys that a compromise in Ohio was necessary and that he had agreed with me on the point, and that I still hoped that some harmonious arrangement might be reached.

I have lived through a Democratic Administration in the mining regions here. I know well the suffering and want that go hand in hand with such an administration, and we should be willing to forego both some of the President's policies and anybody's personal wishes in order to keep in power the Republican party, whose time-tried virtues are the foundation of our prosperity. I have further said that, in my judgment, the President has so broken up the Republican party as to make the election of another so improbable that he is now in honor and fairness duty bound to accept a renomination to prevent the election of a Democrat. He has eliminated from the party, especially with Taft as the candidate, many laborers, many of the business men of the country, and practically all of the colored voters. While he himself has sufficient Democratic following to overcome this, yet he can not transfer this Democratic following to another, even though he be able to nominate him, and his nominee, if he compels a nomination, will lose on his account the three elements above mentioned.

Now, I was indorsed for this appointment, entirely unsolicited, as you know, by many of the leading men of my county and district, and was nominated by you. I ran the gauntlet of a malicious demand for inspection, and was exonerated of all charges. Postmaster-General Meyer and First Assistant Hitchcock approved and recommended my appointment after having gone over the entire matter carefully, and the President appointed me. When I accepted the office I was informed by the Department that all official conduct under the Roosevelt régime is based on merit, and that my standing at Washington would be based entirely on the merit of my official conduct. I have acted accordingly.

Now, the President, because I am disinclined to subscribe to his personal wishes, because I refuse to take up his personal quarrel with Senator FORAKER—whom I have known and respected almost since childhood, in whose capacity and ability as a statesman I have great confidence—orders that my name be not sent to the Senate.

* * * * * * *

I am one of those whom the President can not compel.

* * * * * * * *

Omitting some parts of the letter, I read the concluding part:

That the President's statement, as made to you by Mr. Loeb, is absolutely without foundation there is not the slightest question. Kindly say to the President for me that he is mistaken in point of fact; that I favor his policies, but not his candidate, and shall not so long as I think Bryan can defeat him at the polls; that I shall support for President that candidate whose election seems most probable by the party at the time the matter is determined; that as an individual I shall vote and act, in a political way, according to my own best judgment, with a view always to the best interests of the Republican party, whether my name be sent to the Senate for confirmation or not; that while I continue in an official capacity I shall comply with the general rulings of the Department or tender my resignation; that in my judgment the nomination of his candidate, as I understand the matter, unless much better judgment be displayed in the management in the future, means the party's defeat; that while the salary of this office, which I have held one month, will afford comforts which my family and myself have not heretofore enjoyed, and I regret, principally on their account, to lose; yet we shall sacrifice those comforts rather than that political freedom, now generally conceded to be—and which my life's study, at least, and all of my environment since childhood have taught me to be—not only a privilege, but its absolutely independent exercise a duty also, which unperformed is not consistent with good citizenship or the most elementary principles of patriotism.

The President may have the office for some one who will carry out his personal wishes, but he can not, by hint, or specific instructions, or by general understanding, direct what I shall do in an unofficial capacity.

I trust that you will convey to the President my feelings in the matter, and with assurances of my appreciation of your efforts in my behalf, I remain,

Yours, very truly, C. H. BRYSON.

That is a long letter, but it is certainly a very able letter. It is a very frank letter, very candid—no beating about the bush, but a plain, straightforward statement of his opinion in the exercise of what he conceives to be his right as an American citizen.

I assume that Mr. DOUGLAS laid the matter before the President, and I assume that after full and careful consideration the President concluded that he should make this appointment, as he undoubtedly should have concluded, and for that reason the name was sent here. But this is conclusive testimony in writing that certain actions were taken, certain statements were made, certain influences—menaces, if you please—were brought to bear which did impress those to whom they were directed as an effort to coerce opinion with respect to political matters.

Now, Mr. President, as I said, I do not want to add to that. I can not add to it. It speaks for itself. But I do want to say that with hundreds of letters and with newspaper article after newspaper article I could establish to the satisfaction of any unbiased mind that this case does not stand alone, but is only one of a hundred in the State of Ohio—a hundred is no exaggeration.

Mr. President, I do not care to prolong my remarks unnecessarily. I have said all that I think it necessary for me to say. When I made the statement that the post-office appointments referred to had been rejected for the reason I gave I spoke in good faith. I believed I was stating the exact truth, and I cite this record to show that I am not alone, and I make the statement that I could satisfy any unbiased mind that there are a hundred such cases in Ohio; not that the President has had to do with—I do not mean that—but cases where those representing or claiming to represent the Administration have sought to influence, direct, and control appointments without consultation with, but in direct hostility to, the two Senators who represent that State and whose constitutional duty it is to advise and consent.

We, Mr. President, have a duty in regard to this matter. I wish we did not have. From the day I came into public life public patronage has been a trouble and annoyance; something I would have been glad to have been rid of, something I have taken no pleasure in attending to. But we can not escape it. It is our duty to examine appointments, to consent and advise, and it is our duty, knowing the different communities, knowing the different candidates, knowing those who make the recommendations, to choose between those who are candidates. Every Senator knows that is his duty. Every Senator knows that so long as present usage continues he is compelled to do these things. I have sought since I have been here to do that duty as conscientiously as any other duty I have had to discharge. I have in no instance, so far as I am aware, sought to do otherwise than promote as much as I could the good of the public service by any recommendations I have made. I have never had any complaint from the President or anybody else of any appointment made on my recommendation. I do not mean by that that all are perfect. I am subject to the same infirmities as other men are. I may sometimes be imposed on by the men whom I may recommend, but I have not been consciously imposed on. I think in the main the President seeks to select good men, but for the President to say that there has been no attempt in Ohio to use public patronage to promote political interests is to fly in the face of what is, I may say, the universal belief in our State and almost the universal knowledge in our State. I have not claimed that the President himself was participating in it, but the record I have read speaks for itself and shows that in at least one instance he seems to have had a good deal of the same kind of spirit that has been manifested in the practice to which others have openly resorted.

URGENT DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President I submit a report of the conference committee on the urgent deficiency appropriation bill. I will state that it is only a partial report, there being three amendments still in disagreement.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The report will be read.

The Secretary read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 4, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, and 70, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "one hundred and twelve thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

After the word "That," in line 1 of said amendment, insert the words:

"Not exceeding the sum of five thousand dollars of;"

And the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 11, and 26.

W. B. ALLISON,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

J. A. TAWNEY,
EDWARD B. VREELAND,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and ask for a further conference with the House on those amendments, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice-President appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER as conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENLARGEMENT OF FREE LIST.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. GORE on the 6th instant, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this body that the following articles should be placed on the free list by Congress at the present session without awaiting the advice or delay of a tariff commission, to wit: Printing paper and wood pulp; farming implements and barbed wire; mechanics and miners' tools and powder used in mining coal; and petroleum, crude and refined.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire that the resolution go over, retaining its place.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will go over at the request of the Senator from Oklahoma, retaining its place.

ACTION OF NEW YORK CITY BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution coming over from a previous day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution submitted by Mr. CULBERSON on the 3d instant, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate if any national banks outside the city of New York complained by telegrams or letters to the Treasury Department, the Secretary of the Treasury, the Treasurer of the United States, or the Comptroller of the Currency, between October 1, 1907, and November 15, 1907, of the refusal of national banks of New York City to pay in cash New York exchange or to respond to calls for reserves; and if so, the Secretary is directed to send to the Senate copies of all such telegrams and letters.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, at the last session of the Senate on Thursday the Senator from Texas delivered an able and thoughtful address in an effort to prove two very serious charges; one that during the recent panic the Secretary of the Treasury had repeatedly violated the law, and the other that the banks of New York City had utilized the help which they had received from Government deposits to encourage stock speculation. These are very grave accusations to come from the distinguished leader of the minority. On examining the subject I have come to the conclusion that he is in error. The adage that figures will not lie has been proven to be false by the text-books of the great political parties. Each of them uses the same tables of the financial officers of the Government, and the one proves that we never enjoyed such phenomenal prosperity, while the other satisfies its readers that our present conditions were never so bad nor the future so hopeless.

Not only the New York bankers, but those of the whole country, were facing a crisis unequaled in our history. It came suddenly and at a time when the Government in its resources, the banks in their condition, and business in its activities were never so sound and strong. It is not difficult to account for the peril or the means by which it was averted. I will say at the outset that the business and financial conditions were saved by the courage, wisdom, and patriotic action of the Secretary of the Treasury and the phenomenal genius of Mr. Pierpont Morgan in associating with him the strongest financiers and bankers and devising the methods to save the situation.

There are 6,600 national banks in the United States and some 11,000 State banks and trust companies. The national banks in the central reserve and reserve cities have a reserve for the security of depositors of 25 per cent, while those in the country have 15 per cent. These national banks had on deposit in round numbers $4,322,000,000. The State banks, savings banks, and trust companies had on deposit about $9,000,000,000. The average reserve in State banks and trust companies against this enormous sum was only about 5 per cent, and that not in gold but in bills. There were in all these institutions about $13,000,000,000 of deposits, payable on demand, while the currency of all kinds in these institutions combined was not much over $1,000,000,000. It will thus be seen that if the millions of depositors who owned these $13,000,000,000 become frightened and want their money at once in cash the machinery of business and commerce stops. It has been found by experience that under our credit system, by which 95 per cent of our commercial transactions are carried on, little cash comparatively is required, except in the fall of the year, when nearly $300,000,000 have to be shipped by the central reserve and reserve cities to the West, Northwest, and South to move the crops. But our banking system is so defective that a shock paralyzes it. The only help available in a crisis must come from the Government, and the resources of the Government are very limited compared with the demand. Confidence must be restored so that the normal relations between the banks and their creditors are established and maintained or our whole fabric goes to pieces. It is here the Government plays a most important part in restoration of confidence, and here the Secretary of the Treasury fills a position of awful responsibility.

A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and the weak link in the recent situation was the trust companies, with their enormous deposits and limited reserves. There is no question about their soundness and their possession of a large surplus beyond all their obligations to their stockholders and depositors. Nevertheless, while doing a banking business, they were not equipped for a banking emergency. A run was started on the Knickerbocker Trust Company, whose stock was selling at twelve hundred dollars for a hundred-dollar share. The spectacle of millionaires jostling clerks and bank messengers in the rush to get to the window for their money before the cash was exhausted was illuminating. It showed that in a panic human nature works the same with rich and poor. After paying out $8,000,000 the trust company closed its doors. Rumor, nobody can tell from where, within twenty-four hours had precipitated a run upon two other trust companies and some banks. was a question not of weeks, but of hours, when there would be universal suspension of all cash and credit agencies and of all exchanges and business operations. It is idle to say that New York City alone would have been affected. Texas would have been proportionately involved, and so would every State and city in the Union. The crisis was appalling. The bankers met in Mr. Morgan's library, raised and contributed for the threatened trust companies and banks about seventy millions of cash, which was paid out in three days; most of it was hoarded. There disappeared from the banks during this period two hundred and fifty millions in cash, which went into the boxes of safe-deposit companies. In other words, one-tenth of the total circulating medium of the country was locked up within three days. Then Mr. Cortelyou came to the rescue and deposited available money in the national banks until the balance in the Treasury was down to about five millions.

He says in his report that one of the reasons for making deposits in such large amounts in the national banks of New York and other important cities, in addition to the effectiveness of such deposits in financial centers where they would find their way to the points where the need was greatest, was the fact that these banks were able more promptly to obtain the bonds required as security. The emergency was too acute to assign deposits to banks which were not in possession of bonds or could not obtain them promptly, either by purchase or by borrowing from large financial institutions not engaged directly in the business of note issue or the demand of deposits. This action of the Secretary was accompanied by one of the President's characteristic letters, which are read by everyone and understood by all. In this letter the President approves of the issue of fifty millions of Panama bonds immediately available for additional currency. He also approves of the immediate issue of one hundred millions of 3 per cent Government notes running for a year. He then in emphatic language assured the people "that they should stop hoarding money and attend to business." He continued:

There is practically no risk involved in letting business take its own course, and the people can help themselves and the country most by putting back into active circulation the money they are hoarding. The banks and trust companies are solvent. There is more currency in the country to-day than there was a month ago, when the supply was ample. Fifty-five millions of dollars in gold has been imported, and the Government has deposited another sixty millions. These are the facts, and I appeal to the public to cooperate with us in restoring normal business conditions. The Government will see that the people do not suffer if only the people themselves will act in a normal way. Crops are good and business conditions are sound, and we should put the money we have into circulation in order to meet the needs of our prosperity.

The action of the Government in placing $240,000,000 with the banks, and this letter of the President, ringing like a clarion note of confidence in every office, workshop, store, farmhouse, and dwelling of the country, together with the courageous action of the New York bankers and banks in importing gold and helping institutions assailed, stopped the panic and saved the country.

The issue of these securities was lawful and within a fair interpretation of the statute. The Panama bonds must be sold from time to time according to the needs of the canal. Money had been spent on the canal beyond the appropriation and it had to be replaced in the Treasury from funds derived from these bonds. This disposes of the charge on that account. Under the law of 1898 the President is authorized to sell one-year notes for Treasury necessities. The Secretary, it is said, could have drawn this from the banks. Such action would at the time have frightfully increased the panic, and in the financial chaos which would have followed internal revenue and customs receipts would have correspondingly fallen off. So the Secretary strained the interpretation of the law, if you please, but with confidence regained by his action little over fifteen of the one hundred millions were required. Both the bonds and notes were immediately used by the banks for more currency.

The Senator complains that the Secretary in the deposit of Government money neglected Texas, so that his great State received only 4 per cent, but the report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that on December 3 the banks of Texas were hoarding the reserve money and required no help. The reserve in the Galveston banks was nearly double the reserve required by law. The Fort Worth banks had nearly 34 per cent, the Dallas banks 27 per cent, the San Antonio banks 38 per cent of reserve currency, while New York banks in their effort to relieve the situation and in their shipment of currency had drawn their reserves down to 22 per cent. Similar conditions to those in Texas prevailed in Indianapolis, Minneapolis, and St. Paul; Wichita, Kans; Omaha, Nebr.; San Francisco, Cal., and Portland, Oreg. I received these figures this morning from the Comptroller of the Currency. The effective relief afforded the whole country by deposits of Government funds in the New York banks at the crisis is illustrated by a statement of the amount of grain and cotton bills bought by a single bank in New York. I use this illustration because the National City Bank is the largest, though others did their full share. During the months of November and December the National City Bank bought for cash over $100,000,000 of bills drawn by country banks against shipment of grain, provisions, and cotton to Europe. This vast sum was furnished to the people in the country at the most critical period of the panic, when to have stopped such shipments would have meant the spread of the panic everywhere and general disaster. The prosperity of the country in its production was such that there was an unusual amount of grain and cotton ready for shipment and a good foreign demand at remunerative prices. The movement was checked and would have been stopped except for the cash and credit to handle it furnished by the National City and other New York banks. These banks of New York had the facilities and the connections which put them in touch with the banks through the whole country, and from long experience and practice in transacting business with these institutions of all the States the New York banks knew how and when and where the business could and should be done. In putting the Government money in what might be called the distributing reservoir of the Republic the Secretary showed statesmanship and financial wisdom.

We are now called upon to criticise and condemn the alleged errors and the tactics of the generals who won the victory. Under our banking laws the country banks are permitted to send three-fifths of their reserves to the reserve and central reserve banks for deposit. If the reserve is fifteen thousand, the bank can send ten thousand of it to New York, keeping only five thousand in its vaults. The central reserve banks can also deposit with the reserve bank one-half of their reserves, so that if it is one hundred thousand there is fifty thousand of it in New York. This money goes to New York for deposit instead of other cities because, as every banker in the most remote community knows, a draft on New York goes anywhere and is as good as currency. The New York banks treat these deposits no differently from other moneys which are left with them. Of course they are loaned. In a crisis like that through which we have just passed, the country banks get in their demand for the return of their deposits in currency after the people on the spot have presented theirs. To respond is impossible, as everyone knows. No bank can transact business and liquidate in a day.

The Senator in his analysis of the mass of figures contained in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury comes to the conclusion that only $10,000,000 went from the New York banks to the banks of the interior. Surely the Secretary of the Treasury is an authority upon whom we must rely, and who, if his reports can be impeached, is unworthy of his office. He certified in his report to the Senate that between October 19 and December 7 the shipment of currency by the New York clearing-house banks, chiefly to the national banks of the interior, was $106,921,700.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from New York unintentionally, of course, has misstated my position. I did not state that the report of the Secretary showed that the national banks of New York had sent only $10,820,511 to other national banks, but I did say that the report showed that between August 22 and December 3 the net amount which the New York banks owed national banks everywhere was reduced only the amount stated.

I said, in addition, Mr. President, and presented the letters of the chairmen of clearing houses to show it, that the New York City banks did ship money to other national banks, and charged them a premium on it, ranging from $10 per thousand to $40 per thousand, but that they had only sent this amount of ten million and odd dollars to the banks to which they owed money and in liquidation of their indebtedness to those banks.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, the minutia of this statement of the Secretary of the Treasury down to the dollar shows the care and accuracy with which the statement was made.

In regard to the New York banks charging for the currency which they sent, from 3½ to 5 per cent, my own impression is, and I think that will be established when the examination is made, that the money which was sold in New York for a premium of from 3½ to 4 and 5 and I believe at one time 10 per cent, did not come from the banks. There was $240,000,000 in currency locked up in the safe deposits of New York by frightened depositors, and when those depositors thought that the banks were saved, they made money by selling the currency and depositing in banks the checks received therefor.

The Secretary also states that the increase in national-bank deposits, by which the Senator thus refutes this claim of shipments to the interior, represented the transfer of loans and deposits from the trust companies. The Senator attempts to prove the unfair distribution of the Treasury money to the banks of the country by percentages, and charges the Secretary of the Treasury with undue favoritism to New York City. Percentages are always illusive, and yet the Secretary's report is directly the reverse of the conclusions at which the distinguished Senator arrives in his laborious analysis. The Secretary shows that instead of calculating upon action in taking individual States, if you take the New England, Eastern, and Middle West States, including New York, which are directly tributary to New York, that the percentage of deposits from the Treasury to the capital and surplus of the national banks was about 15 per cent; that the banks of the Southern, Western, and Pacific States had a proportion of nearly 18 per cent, while, eliminating New York from the Eastern group, the percentage of the remaining Eastern and Middle Western States was only about 12 per cent, so that in this distribution the Southern, Western, and Pacific States were, on the basis of percentages, 3 per cent better off than New York and its tributary territory and 7 per cent better off than the Eastern and Middle Western States standing by themselves. This passage from the Secretary's report is illuminating:

> In New England, where business is carried on less with borrowed capital than in some other sections of the Union, the average per cent deposited in the national banks of the entire section was only 8 per cent and in Connecticut as low as 3⅞ per cent.

In other words, the great manufacturing State of Connecticut was lower in its averages than the agricultural State of Texas. Again, while Texas had only 4 per cent, the State of Louisiana has 27.4 per cent in deposits in proportion to its national-bank capital and surplus. The financing of the cotton crop is not done at Austin or at Houston, Galveston, or Fort Worth, but at New Orleans. It is an emphatic demonstration of the suddenness with which by heroic measures the panic was stopped that while this currency crisis was so acute in centers great and small all over the country, the little remote villages were not affected. Many of them had from 28 to 36 per cent of reserve money on hand for which they had no use. The farmers had sold their crops at a profit; the storekeepers' bills were promptly paid, and there was little use or demand for money; but in a week, if the panic had continued, they would all have been involved and cut off from the markets of the world.

As to the charge that these Government deposits were used to permit gambling in the stock exchange, these figures are instructive: Business of the stock exchange in 1901 was in bonds, $981,781,000; in stocks, 250,000,000 shares. In 1905, at the height of our prosperity, it was $1,000,000,000 in bonds and 260,220,000 shares of stock. In 1907 it was $540,000,000 in bonds and 196,000,000 shares of stock. In other words, the transactions on the New York Stock Exchange in 1907, including both stock and bonds, were about one-third less than they were in 1905. There was one hundred millions less loaned on collateral or stock-exchange securities than there was in 1901.

The Senator asks what became of this vast amount of deposits from individuals and from country banks and from the Government, and the one hundred millions of gold brought from Europe which was in the possession of the New York banks. The necessities of the railroads, the prosperity of which had outgrown their facilities and equipment, was so great that they required a thousand six hundred millions of dollars. This money was to meet obligations which had already been incurred in terminals, equipment, and extensions for which contracts were out. During the preceding years the credit of these great lines had been such that they found no difficulty in floating their bonds to meet requirements for long periods at 3½ per cent interest. Called upon now to meet their contract obligations, they had to offer short-term notes, bearing interest from 6½ to 8 per cent. They could not afford to put out long-term notes at such figures, because the net returns upon their business would not justify it. The banks financed something over a thousand millions of these notes and then stopped. The industrial corporations had grown so rapidly that the expansion of their business required six hundred millions of money, and the banks financed about one-half of that at high rates of interest. The city of New York found in these tight times that it could not sell bonds at any legitimate figure and so they were borrowers on time loans of millions of money. It is a fact, and a most creditable one, that notwithstanding the abnormal rates of interest upon call loans from day to day, and notwithstanding the securities offered by powerful and solvent corporations at high rates, the banks of New York stood by their commercial customers, and the solvency during the crisis of the merchants and the manufacturers shows that commercial paper received proper consideration.

Bankers do not claim that they are in business for philanthropy or their health. They do not deny that they desire to make all the money they legitimately can, to pay good dividends to their stockholders, and strengthen their institutions by adding to their surplus. But no student of finance can rise from a study of what the bankers, not only of New York but of Chicago and other large cities, did in this crisis without feeling that the banks of the country are officered and managed by wise, level-headed, exceptionally able, and patriotic men. No better public service can be rendered by bank officers and directors than to keep the machinery of commerce going and to maintain strong and solvent the institutions upon which the credit, the business, the employment, and the living of the people depend.

The criticism made by the Senator upon there being more public moneys deposited in the banks of the District of Columbia than there are in the State of Texas is a just indictment, not, as he makes it, of the Secretary of the Treasury, but of the financial system under which we have been living for forty years. Congress is the board of aldermen; the President, the mayor; and the Secretary of the Treasury, the fiscal officer for the District of Columbia. In every State, county, city, village, and town in the country the tax collector deposits the money in the bank the day of its receipt. In this way the people's money is not hoarded, but is continuously at the service of the people. At the same time the tax money is where the public authorities can draw on it as they require it during the year, because taxes, as a rule, are paid that much in advance. The Government, therefore, treats the District of Columbia precisely as municipal authorities everywhere treat their communities. There is no shock to the business of the District by taking out of circulation even for a short time the millions required for taxes.

If, instead of the subtreasury system, the same methods should be adopted by the Government, much of our financial difficulty would be remedied and many of our financial problems would be solved. So long as our laws connect the Treasury so closely with the banks, so long as we make the Secretary of the Treasury legally and morally responsible in a large measure for the condition, not only of the finances of the Government but of the country, we must allow to him much discretion and judge him by the results of his action. He might have followed the strict letter of the law, which the Senator has quoted, and put the $240,000,000 of Government bonds proportionately in each one of the 6,600 banks of the country. The effect would have been, so far as relief was concerned, like meeting a great fire in a great city, where property is likely to be consumed of such value as to impair the business of the whole country, not by concentrating all the resources of the fire department upon the fire and blowing up with dynamite adjoining blocks to prevent its spreading, as they did in San Francisco, but by distributing the fire engines all over the city and demanding them to divide the water equitably among the different wards. The Secretary fearlessly and wisely says he deposited the money where it would be most effective, and the result demonstrated the wisdom of his action.

I was told once by a distinguished Army officer who was in charge of a department that he had in the harbor several large vessels loaded with winter supplies for the soldiers at the posts under his command. A fire broke out on one of the largest vessels. He hired a number of tugs, placed engines on them, and saved the ship and its cargo. When the requisition came to Washington to pay the tugs and firemen it was returned to the general with this indorsement by the Auditor of the Treasury, "Disallowed because, in accordance with the law and the regulations of the Treasury, an estimate had not first been submitted and approved." That Auditor was all right from his standpoint and position and the general was all right from his. One was a cheese parer and the other an empire builder. Congress reimbursed the general.

The disastrous panic in 1866 in England was instantly stopped by the chancellor of the exchequer authorizing the Bank of England to disregard the banking law and issue currency to any extent necessary to meet the emergency.

The offer by the Government of ten millions of Panama bonds and ten millions of 3 per cent notes would have created no impression, but the offer of a hundred and fifty millions meant that the boundless resources of the Government were behind the solvency of the country, and the people thanked God and took courage.

I was reading a few days since a little book called "Human Bullets," in which a lieutenant in the Japanese army describes his own experience at the siege of Port Arthur. It is easy to see from his description that companies, regiments, and brigades were murderously sacrificed in a way which if the siege had failed would have justly condemned the Japanese general as the most merciless and incompetent of commanders, but this bloody struggle won victory for Japan. On the other hand, General Stoessel, the Russian commander, who temporized, saved his troops and his ammunition, and finally surrendered, is on trial before a court-martial for his life. The prosecuting officer of the Government demands upon the testimony that his sword be broken and that he be degraded and shot in the presence of the troops.

The living of 25,000,000 of industrious men and women was at stake. The solvency of every national bank, State bank, trust company, and savings bank was at stake. Twenty-five billions of internal commerce dependent for its free movement not upon the small percentage of cash, but upon credit, was at stake. The panic was stayed. The fire was put out with a minimum of loss. The country has resumed its normal condition. Production is proceeding apace to a market which is growing in eagerness to buy. The Senator cries eloquently, "Let the ten millions only which was sent to the interior ring in the ears of the American people." But it is the action of the Secretary of the Treasury and the New York banks in saving the situation which is ringing in the ears of the American people. One of the best chapters in the financial history of this country will be that the thousand billions of national wealth of the United States remain almost imperceptibly impaired, and that the country is springing like a young giant to larger endeavors and greater triumphs because of confidence restored and hope renewed largely through the wisdom and courage of the Secretary of the Treasury.

BUSINESS METHOD OF POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. PENROSE. I submit a preliminary report of the Joint Commission on the Business Method of the Post-Office Department and Postal Service under the act of Congress approved March 2, 1907. I move that the report, together with the accompanying documents, statements, evidence, and illustrations be printed and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The motion was agreed to.

PORTS OF ENTRY IN CONNECTICUT.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 9218) amending an act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to the immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes."

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It extends the privileges of the seventh section of the act approved June 10, 1880, entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," to the ports of Norwalk, Stamford, and Greenwich, in the State of Connecticut.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL CONGRESS ON HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Acting Secretary of State covering a note from the Imperial German Ambassador by which is communicated the acceptance by the International Congress on Hygiene and Demography of the invitation extended to it in pursuance of the joint resolution of Congress approved February 26, 1907, to hold its next session at the City of Washington in 1910.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 10, 1908.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 2915. An act for the relief of John P. Hunter;

H. R. 3388. An act for the relief of L. B. Wyatt;

H. R. 6902. An act for the relief of Henry Rustan;

H. R. 8947. An act for the relief of the Herman Andrae Electrical Company, of Milwaukee, Wis.;

H. R. 10075. An act for the relief of Copiah County, Miss.;

H. R. 13875. An act for the relief of John V. Johnson;

H. R. 14446. An act for the relief of A. J., C. C., and T. W. Hodges;

H. R. 15070. An act for the relief of J. Edmund Strong; and

H. R. 15372. An act for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and the Tucker acts.

H. R. 4763. An act transferring Commander William Wilmot White from the retired to the active list of the Navy was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The following bill and joint resolution were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 12398. An act to authorize the War Department to transfer to the State of Kansas certain lands now a part of the Fort Riley Military Reservation; and

H. J. Res. 102. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to furnish three condemned cannon to the mayor of the the city of Detroit, Mich., to be placed on the base of a statue of the late Maj. Gen. Alexander Macomb, United States Army.

H. R. 6515. An act for the relief of J. A. Gallaher, administrator of the estate of Joseph H. Gallaher, deceased, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

H. R. 15247. An act to authorize the Idaho and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Spokane River near the city of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; and

H. R. 16050. An act to authorize the Interstate Transfer Railway Company to construct a bridge across the St. Louis River between the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota.

H. J. Res. 130. Joint resolution providing for salaries of the Resident Commissioners from the Philippine Islands was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Philippines.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

Mr. ALDRICH. I call up the bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. ALDRICH. Mr President, the financial crisis from which the country has just emerged, which culminated in a serious panic in October, was the most acute and destructive in its immediate consequences of any which has occurred in the history of the country. Nothing but the heroic measures taken by the representatives of the great business and financial interests of the country, acting in cooperation with the Secretary of the Treasury, prevented a total collapse of private credit and a disastrous destruction of all values. It is impossible to conceive, much less to measure, the losses which would have resulted from such a calamity. The country was saved, by the narrowest possible margin, from an overwhelming catastrophe whose blighting effect would have been felt in every household.

A total collapse was avoided, but the shrinkage in values of securities and property and the losses from injury to business, resulting from and incidental to the crisis, amounted to thousands of millions of dollars.

It is not my purpose to consider the panic of 1907 with a view of indicating the causes which led to the widespread destruction of confidence which characterized it, but I propose to invite your careful attention to some of the lessons of the panic in their relation to our monetary and banking systems.

At the time of each of the financial panics from 1837 to 1893 serious distrust existed in the public mind as to the value or the security of the whole or some portion of the currency. On each of these occasions prior to the adoption of the national banking system, the losses upon unredeemed or unpaid bank notes were very great, and in each case complete disorganization of banks resulted in widespread business demoralization.

It must be apparent that if, in the panic through which we have just passed, there had been any distrust of the value of any of the forms of our currency, or if any doubt had existed of their immediate convertibility into gold or its equivalent, or if the redemption of national-bank notes had depended upon the ability of the national banks to pay them on demand, a fatal crash would have been inevitable.

The panic of 1907 was not, however, either in its inception or in its progress, a currency panic, in the sense to which I have alluded. Our currency, in character, was beyond question.

On the 1st of October, 1907, the amount of money in circulation in the United States, outside of the Treasury, was $2,805,854,374, or $32.46 per capita, the largest amount relatively and per capita in the history of the country. The amount of money in actual circulation, that is, in the hands of the people, outside of the banks and the Treasury, was $19.36 per capita, which was a much greater amount per capita than that held by the people of any other commercial country in the world except France, where the business conditions are entirely different from our own.

The aggregate amount of money in the hands of the people had increased from $877,000,000 in 1897 to $1,666,500,000 in 1907, an actual increase of $789,500,000, and a relative increase of from $12.19 to $19.36 per capita. Our currency, prior to the crisis, was adequate in amount to meet all legitimate demands under normal conditions. It is true that the wonderful development and remarkable industrial growth of the country in the last ten years seemed to render a large and constant increase in the volume of our circulating medium necessary. The character and rapidity of this development and growth can be indicated by a statement of the increase of deposits in our national banks, State banks, savings banks and trust companies, say from $5,111,126,229 in 1897 to $13,099,600,000 in 1907.

The actual increase of the business of the country during this period can also be shown by a comparison of the New York clearing-house transactions, which increased from $13,337,760,947 in 1897 to $95,315,421,237 in 1907. The enormous increase in bank deposits, to which I have alluded, led to a corresponding increase of the lawful money necessary to be held in the reserves of banking institutions of from $628,200,000 in 1897 to $1,106,500,000 in 1907.

Under ordinary conditions, perhaps, the volume of our currency could have been fairly criticised as excessive. It certainly could not be claimed that our system had failed to provide a currency that was satisfactory in quality and adequate in amount to meet all normal or usual demands. But no provision had been made for a class of emergencies which occur with more or less frequency in every country and which we can now see must be provided for. An annually recurring need for additional currency to move crops occasionally creates a demand in excess of the available supply, but the serious defect of our monetary system, as disclosed by our recent bitter experience, is the fact that we have no means whatever for providing the additional issues necessary to meet or to prevent panic conditions. Events having brought this defect to the attention of Congress in the most forcible manner, we can not wisely or prudently fail to give it serious consideration. It is perhaps true that the most complete monetary system will not prevent at times the hoarding of money by frightened bank managers or individuals.

Neither the strength of our monetary system nor the extraordinary efforts which were made to avoid this serious result prevented a general suspension of payments by national banks, with most deplorable and far-reaching results. This suspension commenced in New York on the 26th of October and was followed promptly by a suspension of the banks in Chicago and other localities. The issue of clearing-house certificates followed in most of the principal cities.

A complete disruption of the exchanges between cities and communities throughout the country took place. It is impossible to estimate the losses which were inflicted by this suspension of payments by the banks and the resultant interruption of exchanges. There was financial embarrassment on every hand, and an impossibility of securing the proper funds to move crops or to carry on the ordinary business of the country. The suspension or disarrangement of business operations threw thousands of men out of employment and reduced the wages of the employed.

During the progress of the crisis, in its more or less acute stages, the following extraordinary steps were taken to avoid final disaster:

First, the Secretary of the Treasury added to bank reserves by increasing the deposits of public moneys in New York and other banks between September 30 and December 7 to the extent of $70,000,000;

Second, clearing-house certificates were issued by the various clearing houses of the country to the extent of about $190,000,000;

Third, checks were issued by clearing houses, banks, and private individuals, intended to be used as currency, and which were so used, to the amount of at least $75,000,000;

Fourth, an enforced enlargement of the bank-note circulation took place, through an exchange of bonds and by other means, from October 1 to January 1 to the amount of $94,759,115;

Fifth, importations of gold were secured amounting, during the period last named, to $107,000,000 and resulting in an enlarged issue of gold certificates in the same period of $66,000,000.

From this it appears that from time to time during the crisis there was an enforced increase in the amount of currency and currency substitutes, not including additional deposits of public moneys in the banks, to the extent of about $467,000,000.

Of the expedients adopted, the use of clearing-house certificates was unquestionably the most effective. I need hardly say that the clearing houses by which these certificates are issued are voluntary associations of banks formed for mutual convenience, assistance, and protection. In many ways the usefulness of these associations has been shown from a public point of view.

The employment of clearing-house certificates for relief in time of financial disturbance commenced in 1860, and has since been repeated from time to time on eight different occasions, ending in 1907.

These certificates, it should be remembered, are only available for settlement of balances between banks in the localities in which they are issued. They are issued upon a deposit of bonds and other securities, the best assets of the bank, made satisfactory in character to the loaning committee of the clearing house. Certificates are issued to the amount of 75 per cent of the value of the securities deposited. Interest is charged by the clearing house to the depositing bank at varying rates from 6 to 9 per cent. They take the place of currency in settlements at the clearing house, increasing, by this means, the amount of money available for other purposes. Their employment has been beneficial at times in preventing a serious disaster, but it has sometimes resulted, as in 1907, in such a derangement of exchanges as to make it doubtful whether, from the standpoint of the public interest, the disadvantages were not greater than the benefits derived from their issue.

The conservative bank officers of New York, for fear of the effect their issue would have upon the credit of that great commercial center, resisted their use, until it became apparent that there was no other means available to prevent general bankruptcy. The scrip issued by clearing houses and by banks and private individuals, in the form of circulating notes, and used as currency, were issued to meet local necessities for payrolls, for moving crops, etc. In the spirit, if not by the letter of our currency laws, these notes should have been taxed 10 per cent on the amount issued.

The great losses which the people of the country suffered from the partial breakdown of our credit system through bank suspensions, and which the abnormal increase in the volume of money and its substitutes—legal and illegal—failed to avert, should lead Congress to seriously consider the question whether it is possible to provide such a legislative remedy as shall prevent the recurrence of these conditions in the future.

If the experience of last year should be repeated—and who can say that this is impossible—the methods of relief that were employed in 1907 will not be available—certainly not to the same extent.

First, it is not at all likely that the Treasury will be in condition to make increased deposits of public moneys in national banks. With the strong probabilities of a considerable deficit, and as a matter of wise policy, Government deposits in national banks must, and I am quite willing to say should be, largely diminished.

Second, the fact that a very large proportion of United States bonds are now held by the national banks, an amount which can not be materially increased, makes it probable that there will be a diminution rather than an increase of national-bank notes based upon United States bonds. In fact, it would be almost, if not quite impossible, to further increase the volume of such notes in case of an emergency.

Third, it is quite possible that we may not be able to command large importations of gold. The very large increase in the exportation of products, with reduced importations, which took place in the last four months of 1907, produced an unusual balance of trade of more than $300,000,000 in our favor, and this fact was of great assistance in making large gold importations possible in the months of November and December. These favorable conditions may not exist again, and it may be much more difficult to induce the foreign banks to acquiesce in gold shipments in our favor. In any event imports of gold can never be made in time to relieve an acute condition of panic.

Fourth, men may not be found in another emergency with the patriotism, courage and capacity of those who, in this crisis, rendered such conspicuous and invaluable service to the financial interests of the country.

Fifth, the suspension of bank payments with its resulting strain upon the credit of the country and its resources will not be tolerated again.

I am quite well aware that financial conditions have vastly improved over what they were six weeks ago, and I think we may feel quite confident that the prolonged period of depression which followed the panic of 1893 may be avoided. It is also quite certain that in all the financial centers within a very short time there will be a great excess of currency, and probably a surplus of loanable capital.

While the general conditions have improved and are improving there are still many causes for disquiet in industrial and financial circles. It is quite probable that there will be considerable additions to the army of the unemployed, and it is quite impossible for any man to predict, with any degree of confidence, what the industrial and financial condition of the country will be next autumn. In any event, if the business interests of the country are left defenseless through the inaction of Congress, the most serious consequences may follow. Under these circumstances I believe it to be the imperative duty of Congress, in their wisdom, to provide some means of escape from another calamitous crisis. The expedients which the responsible officers of the Government and of the great financial institutions were obliged to adopt in the panic of 1907 point the way to effective curative legislation.

There seems to be but one way in which this can be accomplished, namely, by some provision for the authorization of additional notes to be used only in emergencies. The Committee on Finance, with practical unanimity, arrived at the conclusion that it would not be possible to secure this relief by the adoption at this session of any measure which should provide for the thorough revision or reconstruction of our monetary system, however advisable such a course might be from a scientific or practical standpoint. Bankers and students of economics are divided in opinion as to what should take the place of the existing system, if it is to be condemned and superseded, and if a new, comprehensive system, based on scientific principles, is to replace it.

Two plans for general legislation which are prominent in public discussion were considered by the committee.

First, that advocated by many thoughtful students of economic history and teachings, who are led by the experience and practice of other commercial nations to favor some plan for a central bank of issue, which would be in effect a central clearing house with very limited banking functions, under Government control. Personally, I believe that in time this country is likely to adopt such a system, but I agree with other members of the committee that its adoption at this time, or in the near future, is out of the question.

Second, that supported by a large number of bankers and students who maintain that our monetary system will never be placed on the proper basis until the sole power of issuing notes is lodged in the banks, the security for such notes to be based upon a general pledge of the assets of the banks, their convertibility to be undertaken by the banks and to depend upon an insurance fund. This plan involves an entire change in the character of our currency and the ultimate retirement of outstanding United States notes and gold and silver certificates. The committee were unanimous in the opinion that this plan would not be likely to receive the favorable consideration of Congress at this session.

The minority members of the committee, while agreeing with the majority that it was not possible at this time to enter upon a comprehensive plan of legislation, and agreeing further that there was a demand which could not be ignored for an issue of emergency notes, believed that the authorized issue should be in United States notes instead of national-bank notes. The majority of the committee were of the opinion that the further issue of United States notes at this time would establish a dangerous precedent, and that the approval of their issue, even for temporary and limited purposes, would lead ultimately to a popular demand for a continual enlargement of the issue whenever a reasonable pretext could be found. They further believed that as national-bank notes with convertibility guaranteed by the Government have properly a place in the confidence of the American people from which they can not be dislodged, it would be the part of prudence to use this form of currency.

Those who believe that all issues of currency should be made free from governmental sanction or restriction urge that the Government of the United States should go out of the banking business. While the Government is not and should not be in the banking business the United States Treasury is, and must be for some time to come, by law and custom, a great national bank of issue. All the money in circulation is either issued by the Government directly or under its express authority and regulation, and the Government is and should be equally bound to maintain the parity of all. Bank notes are essentially Government money, the banks being merely the instrumentalities of issue. The widespread diversity of opinion as to the character of general legislation to be enacted, and the further and more significant fact that there is no considerable consensus of opinion on any general or special plan, led the committee therefore to the conclusion that it is not possible, at this time, to enter upon a thorough reform of our entire currency legislation.

The committee, after full consideration, felt that it was safer to follow, in the form of legislation they should recommend, the experience of the great commercial nations, who have found it necessary to provide means to meet or prevent panic conditions by the extension of note issues under different restrictions and conditions from those imposed on ordinary issues.

The German Government gives the Imperial Bank of Germany, which is under the direct control of the Imperial Government, the practical monopoly of the bank-note issues in that country. The Imperial Bank has authority to issue an arbitrary amount, $119,000,000, of notes not covered by specie. A further issue is authorized equal to the amount of specie held. A still further amount may be issued subject to a tax of 5 per cent per annum, the average interest charge in Germany being less than this rate of taxation. Against these additional notes, specie must be held to the extent of one-third of the amount and good bills of exchange against the remaining two-thirds. In recent years and especially during the past year the privilege of increased issues under the 5 per cent provision has been freely used.

The plan for additional notes which the committee recommends for your adoption is substantially the plan of the Imperial Bank of Germany, with a change in class of securities required and a change in the rate of taxation. In its general features the plan of note issues adopted by the German law of 1875 followed the English bank act of 1844, but amending and improving that act, however, by adding the provisions for note expansion that I have explained.

The Imperial Bank of Austria-Hungary, which is also strictly a government bank, has an uncovered issue of $83,000,000, and above that a right to issue to any extent against specie, with a further provision for excessive or supplemental issues subject to a 5 per cent tax. The legislation in this case follows the German plan.

The Bank of England has a right to issue uncovered notes equal to the amount of government securities held by it—$92,250,000—and beyond this authorized limit no notes can be issued unless an equivalent amount of gold coin or bullion is held in the issue department of the bank. The Government of Great Britain has on three occasions in times of stress—in 1847, 1857, and 1866—authorized the suspension of the provisions of the bank act which forbid the further issue of uncovered notes and permitted the bank to issue notes without limit. On these occasions the mere announcement of the fact that the Government had authorized the suspension of the bank act had the immediate effect of relieving the strain and of restoring confidence.

In the severe crisis of 1890, however, the bank act was not suspended. The Bank of England borrowed from the Bank of France and the Bank of Russia large sums in gold, and through the courageous and wise cooperation between the Bank of England and the great joint stock banks and private bankers in London a disaster was averted and British credit was sustained.

In recent years the great foreign banks have usually been able to maintain their reserves and to prevent unfavorable movement of gold and acute financial disturbance, by advances in the rate of interest. While this advance in the rate of discount has proved very efficacious in Great Britain and on the Continent, where the transportation of gold from one country to another is the question of a few hours, and where the business relations of the various countries are very intimate through exchanges, the same remedy could not be made effective here.

In France the conditions are unique. The Bank of France, which has the sole right of issue, held, during the ten years ending 1905, an average reserve of 86 per cent of its outstanding circulation in gold and silver. The average deposits of the bank in recent years have been only a little more than $95,000,000, the average Government deposits $50,000,000, and the amount of notes outstanding at the last available report of the bank, October, 1907, $977,500,000.

When we consider the insignificant amount of deposits and the immense reserves of the bank, it is easy to see that the Bank of France is not likely to be affected by a run either on the part of its depositors or its note holders. The bank has practically a right of unlimited issue, and in times of disturbance this right is freely exercised.

The Committee on Finance believed that the example of Germany was the safest precedent for them to follow, and the one most likely to successfully answer our requirement for a temporary emergency note issue, for a currency which would not be permanent in its character and which would add no new elements to our somewhat complicated currency scheme.

The committee are of the opinion that the bill which they have reported answers these requirements.

It provides for a possible issue in emergencies of $500,000,000 of national-bank notes, redeemable by the United States in lawful money upon presentation at the Treasury. The notes will be identical in character and tenor with the national-bank notes secured by the deposit of United States bonds. They are to be issued to any applying association if, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Treasury, business conditions in the particular locality of the bank demand additional circulation. For the security of the Government the banks are required to deposit in the Treasury State, municipal, or first-class railroad bonds, of a character and in amount satisfactory to the Secretary of the Treasury. Upon State and municipal bonds the bank is entitled to receive notes to the extent of 90 per cent of their value, and upon authorized railroad bonds, 75 per cent of their value.

Notes for the entire amount of the issue are to be prepared at once and deposited in the Treasury or in subtreasuries nearest the places of business of the different banks. It is made the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to make without delay an examination of the securities which might be available for deposit and to notify the banks of such as would be acceptable to the Government for this purpose. The notes are to be distributed by the Secretary equitably among the banking associations in the several States, upon the basis of the proportion which the unimpaired banking capital and surplus of each State bears to the total capital and surplus of all the banking associations of the United States. These notes are to be taxed one-half per cent monthly, or 6 per cent per annum and can be retired at any time upon the deposit of lawful money or national-bank notes.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to receive any legally authorized bonds issued by any city, town, county, or other legally constituted municipality or district in the United States which has been in existence for a period of ten years, and which for a period of ten years previous to such deposit has not defaulted in the payment of any part of either principal or interest of any funded debt authorized to be contracted by it and whose net funded indebtedness does not exceed 10 per cent of the valuation of its taxable property, to be ascertained by the last preceding valuation of property for the assessment of taxes.

The problem before the committee was to find some simple method of remedy and prevention that was merely an extension or supplement to the existing system and that could be provided through the use of existing machinery. The system of issue and redemption, which has existed for forty years, is continued by the terms of this bill. The currency is intended for temporary use only and not to be retained in general circulation, and we have made the most careful provisions for its enforced retirement when not needed. The notes to be issued are nominally national-bank notes, but they are in substance national currency of the United States, issued through the agency of the national banks.

The remedy we provide is simple, prompt, and efficient. At any time within forty-eight hours, if an emergency requires it, $500,000,000 of new money can be put into the channels of trade to allay public excitement and to meet extraordinary demands.

The committee believe that this great fund, placed by the Government at the disposition of the bankers and business men of the country, will have a strong tendency to prevent financial crises and to preserve public and private credit at home and abroad.

In periods of distrust large numbers of people are controlled by sentiment. Experience has shown that at such a time the strongest element in allaying excitement and creating confidence is the knowledge that a remedy exists which can and will be promptly and effectively applied. The existence of this great fund is like the creation of an ample water supply with effective apparatus to check conflagrations.

The emergency issue we propose should enable the solvent banks of the country to meet at all times their demand obligations and to respond to all unusual but legitimate business demands. It will save bankers and the public alike from further humiliating confessions of general insolvency. It will be used in time of trouble to take the place heretofore filled by clearing-house certificates, and it will render the use of illegal or questionable substitutes for money unnecessary.

The obligation of the Government to redeem the notes of national banks is strengthened and more clearly defined. A definite pledge of convertibility by the Government is required by this act to be printed upon the face of every note. The value of the national-bank notes has always been fixed in the minds of our people by the certainty of Government redemption. No one stops to inquire whether a national bank is located in Maine or Texas, whether its capital is great or small, or whether its financial condition is such as to give credit to its notes.

A new form of notes if issued purely for emergencies and less carefully secured than existing notes, would be discredited at once and their appearance would invite distrust.

There should be no misunderstanding as to the sole controlling purpose of this bill. It proposes by its provisions to prevent panics and furnish the means of relieving panic conditions. We do not claim that it is a universal panacea for all financial ills. It is to give the national banks the means of accomplishing by legal methods that which, in this crisis, they felt compelled to accomplish by illegal and destructive methods, to the great loss of the country. It makes no pretense of providing a new monetary system and tries no new experiment with our currency. It surrounds notes to be issued by safeguards for ultimate payment similar to those now in use.

The measure we offer can be supported without a violation of convictions by those who believe in a central bank of issue, or by the advocates of an asset currency. It will not interfere with the adoption of any general plan of revision in the future.

It recognizes existing conditions and the limitations which an enlightened public opinion has placed upon Congressional action.

I will now ask your attention to certain specific objections which have been made to the bill, criticisms more or less serious in their character, but of such a nature that they should receive our careful attention. The first of these is that the issue of notes proposed would be unprofitable for the banks, and therefore that the rate of taxation fixed in the bill is prohibitive, and consequently that no use will be made of the authority to issue additional notes in times of financial stress. A series of elaborate calculations have been submitted to the committee showing the manner in which the earnings of national banks would be affected by an issue of notes under the provisions of this bill. The criticisms and the computations are based upon a complete misconception of the purposes of the measure, and an erroneous idea of its effect on bank profits.

Public discussion of the bill has turned largely upon the question whether the measure proposed was satisfactory to bank managers, ignoring the fact that the question of the soundness, character, and volume of currency is one in which the public is vitally interested. I must confess that, in considering relief measures, it did not occur to the committee that their first duty was to provide additional profits to the banks. The banks are not applicants for charitable relief. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that the dividends paid by the national banks for the sixteen months prior to June 30, 1907, were at the rate of 13 per cent per annum on their capital and surplus. In the ten years prior to 1901 the average annual rate of dividend was but little over 5 per cent.

The committee were well aware that if the issue of the additional notes provided for should be made a constant source of profit to the banks, the notes would be issued immediately and would become a permanent addition to our currency, and would leave no margin for an increased circulation when the usual flow of currency was interrupted and a new supply demanded. To make proper provisions in emergencies for this supply, and to answer the reasonable expectations of the people of the country when their interests are imperiled, should not involve the necessity of increasing the profits of the national banks.

I have every reason to believe that the overwhelming majority of the national banks, which have been accorded valuable privileges, recognizing their obligations as fiscal agents of the United States, will cheerfully cooperate in carrying out any measure adopted by Congress as a means of relief, without reference to whether their action in this regard would add greatly to their profits. In times of public peril, when great interests were at stake, these banks have given the strongest possible evidence of their patriotism and unselfishness. I decline to believe that the criticisims under consideration reflect the views of thoughtful bank managers. They too keenly appreciate the value of public confidence.

In the recent panic, as I have already stated, there was a general suspension of cash payments by the national banks. The failure of a bank to meet its demand obligations is a violation of every law governing its conduct and existence. The extraordinary forbearance of the people of the country and of the officers of the Government in the face of this violation was perhaps justified from the condition in which the banks found themselves. Bank managers should realize, however, that a repetition of these violations will not be permitted. It would be difficult to exaggerate the injury which would come to the credit of the country and the prestige of our great financial centers, and the losses which would be entailed upon people and industries alike, if the banks of the country should again suspend payments in a period of financial disturbance. There certainly could be no possible justification of a suspension brought about through a refusal on the part of the banks to accept a method of relief adopted by Congress, on the ground that an acceptance would involve a loss of profits to the banks. Our recollections of the happenings of the past three months are too definite to lead us to listen with patience to a discussion by officers of banks in the large cities of the question whether the use of the remedies proposed by Congress would result in large additions to their dividends. We do not intend to place a premium upon that kind of bank management which proposes to make financial disturbance and disaster a source of profit.

As a matter of fact, the effective operation of the bill reported by the committee would not result in a loss to the banks in time of stress or at any other time. We have a right to assume that every well-managed bank will hold a portion of its invested reserves in a class of securities readily convertible into cash. If a bank holds the bonds designated in the bill, there could be no loss on the note issues authorized unless the rate of interest charged by the bank to its customers was less than 6 per cent. If the bank rate was less than 6 per cent no additional notes would be required or issued. To illustrate, we will suppose that a bank with aggregate loans and other investments amounting to $1,200,000 holds $100,000 in the municipal securities which are described in the bill. These bonds would probably pay the bank 5 per cent. These securities would form a part of the bank's best assets, and would constitute from every banking standpoint a judicious investment. Upon a demand for additional notes in times of stress, the bank would deposit in a subtreasury this $100,000 of securities and receive $90,000 in notes. If this addition to the bank's funds should be loaned at 6 per cent there would be neither profit nor loss by the transaction. If they were loaned at a higher rate a profit to the bank would accrue.

The practical effect of the operation of note issue is that the Government loans a bank, taking a portion of its investment securities as collateral, a sum of money, for which it charges, in the form of taxes, one-half per cent per month until the loan is repaid. Under panic conditions it probably would not be possible for a bank to obtain this additional circulation in any other way. It is true that banks in a clearing-house district might secure clearing-house certificates on a similar pledge of securities, but these certificates, as I have already stated, have a very limited use, while the circulating notes we propose are practically, for every purpose except for use as reserves, lawful money.

The second objection urged is that banks generally do not have, and would not purchase and hold, securities of the class which the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to accept under the provisions of the bill. The committee were of the opinion that they would deserve general condemnation if they did not require, as a basis of the note issue contemplated, the very best available securities.

The plan of the bill restricts the securities to be accepted under its provisions to Government issues and the bonds of railroads that are, by recent legislation, under Government regulation. I think I am justified in designating the bonds of States and communities as Government securities. To sustain the credit and facilitate the borrowing power under proper condition of the various political divisions throughout the country is quite as important to the general welfare as it is to take steps to maintain the credit of the National Government.

In large portions of the country considerable sums are constantly needed for local improvements, and nothing would bring the benefits of the national banking system more closely to the attention of the great masses of the people than would the willingness on the part of the banks to give value and stability to local securities by their purchase as a basis for security of note circulation.

The committee recommend the use of first-class railroad bonds because they are the only securities, outside of State and municipal bonds, issued by corporations whose public records, showing condition and earnings, as now provided by law, would enable the Secretary of the Treasury to definitely ascertain the value and the safety of the security. In theory and by existing legislation railroad companies are quasi public corporations and under strict governmental control and regulation. Immense amounts of money will be required in the near future in the development of railroads in various parts of the country, especially in the South and West. Anything which the Government can do, within the limits of absolute safety and without any cost to itself, to give a better standing to the railroad securities which must be issued to provide transportation facilities in sections of the country that existing roads do not reach should be done without hesitation.

The securities named find universal acceptance in settlement of obligations. No securities except United States bonds have a better credit and standing in all financial circles. They have a definite value, readily ascertained, on all the great exchanges of the country, and they are always salable under normal conditions at full market price.

These, in brief, are some of the reasons which led the committee to restrict the operations of the bill to the two classes of securities I have named. The objection under consideration in its final analysis rests upon the question whether it is prudent or desirable for what is known as a commercial bank to invest a portion of its own and its depositors' money in this class of securities as a part of their invested reserves. Would it be a hardship to the national banks to require them, if they desire to avail themselves of the privileges conferred by this bill, to hold to a limited extent this class of securities as a part of their assets?

The Congress, in my judgment, might properly, in the wise exercise of its supervisory control over the investments of national banks, require these institutions to invest a portion of their assets in this class of securities, and this without reference to their use as security for possible note issues or United States deposits. This requirement would be in the interest alike of the public and of stockholders.

There is no rule of sound banking that is more inexorable in its character, the violation of which is productive of more disastrous results than that which requires a bank to hold a portion of its assets in first-class convertible securities which will pay a reasonable income, but which can be readily converted into money in time of need without disturbing reserves or commercial loans. Money can usually be had on this class of securities either by sale or hypothecation. Nearly all the destructive bank failures in our own and other countries can be traced directly to a violation of this rule.

The securities required by the bill are of the same class as those required by the Treasury Department as security for the deposit of public money, and a bank having these securities on hand at any time could use them for either purpose, as occasion required.

If all the national banks of the country should hold the entire amount of bonds that would be acceptable for security for note issues to the amount of $500,000,000, it would mean the investment of little more than 6 per cent of the total resources of such banks in this class of securities.

To allege that a relatively small amount of cash is the only reserve necessary for sound banking is to assert a dangerous fallacy. The national banks of the country hold reserves of specie and legal-tender money equal to little more than 10 per cent of their demand obligations.

Common prudence requires that this should be supplemented by a substantial invested reserve in first-class securities. In order to show that the banks themselves recognize this obligation, I will say that the bank statement of the 3d of December, 1907, shows that the national banks held at that time $705,000,000 of bonds and other securities, a large portion of which are of the same general class of securities we have named. They also held bonds, other than United States bonds, to secure the deposit of public moneys, to the value of $185,000,000. They also had a large sum on deposit in other banks, trust companies, etc., presumably at a low rate of interest. The securities covered by the terms of the bill could readily be purchased to-day on a 4 to 6 per cent basis, while the rates on deposits in banks as a general rule are not in excess of 2 per cent.

It is evident that the banks of the country might wisely and without difficulty or loss invest $500,000,000 in first-class State, municipal, or railroad bonds. This investment would be an exercise of that care in management which should characterize institutions which have and expect to retain the confidence of the American people. The wisdom of this course finds ample confirmation in the example of the banks in every commercial nation.

The Imperial Bank of Germany, with a capital of $43,500,000, has an investment of $73,100,000 in Government bonds. The Bank of England, with a capital of $70,500,000, has in its banking department Government securities amounting to $79,000,000, and other securities amounting to $130,000,000. The Bank of France, with a capital of $35,300,000, has Government securities amounting to $65,750,000. The Canadian banks, with a capital of $96,000,000, held, on November 30, 1907, municipal securities to the amount of $20,000,000, Dominion securities to the amount of $9,000,000, and railway bonds to the amount of $41,500,000, making a total of these securities held of $70,000,000. The Canadian banks are also required by law to hold 40 per cent of their reserves in Dominion notes. On the date named they had on hand of these notes $49,200,000.

The evidence is overwhelming that prudent bank managers everywhere invest a considerable portion of their assets in securities of the class which we designate in this bill for the security of note circulation.

There is another fact that should not be lost sight of in this connection. A considerable portion of the national banks of the country have relations, more or less intimate, with trust companies, savings banks, and other financial institutions, that hold very large amounts in securities of this kind. The experience of the banks in the last four months with reference to obtaining bonds to secure deposits of public money shows that it is very easy for the banks who do not choose to hold these securities for investment purposes, to borrow them on reasonable terms if occasion demands. If any bank for any reason peculiar to itself does not desire either to buy or to borrow, as I have already stated, they are not required either to take out the notes or to deposit bonds.

Another objection which is urged is that the taxes imposed by the bill will result in an increased rate of interest on loans, which would necessarily be paid by the borrower, and that this increase in rate would apply not only to loans made possible by the additional issue of notes, but would also apply to the entire amount of loans and discounts made by all the banks. It is further claimed in this connection that the increased rate would lower the prices of products marketed at the time. I think this remarkable claim will disappear upon very slight examination.

The rate of interest in any country or community is fixed by the demand for and general supply of loanable capital. It can not be raised or lowered arbitrarily on a small portion of loans or in one locality without reference to rates on other loans or in surrounding communities. If the banks can recoup from borrowers the sums paid for taxes, to the extent of the new notes issued, and add to their income by a similar increase of rates along the entire line of loans, it is easy to see that the banks, instead of losing by the operations of this bill, would secure inordinate profits. But nothing of the kind would or could happen. Whatever the rate of interest in any community or State may be at the time the notes are issued, there could be no change of rates growing out of the issue of the notes, unless a reduction should take place, following the law of supply and demand, to which I have alluded. That the general law I have stated is the correct one which must apply to this class of transactions, is shown by the experience of Germany and Austria-Hungary, these two countries being the only ones that issue taxed emergency notes, the taxes in each case being 5 per cent, a rate higher than the average rate of discount in those countries.

I quote, in this connection, authorities whose statements will not be questioned:

[Quotation from a letter of Herr Arthur Gwinner, managing director Bank of Germany.]

The overissue, however, did not necessarily cause a rise in the official discount rate, inasmuch as more weight was given to the cause and the manner of the money requirements than to the amount that was used, in deciding upon the policy of the bank, and furthermore, in consideration of an early return to normal conditions the administration of the bank very often, notwithstanding that the overissue was quite important, suffered the lower discount rate to stand and preferred to sacrifice its own profits in paying the tax out of its own pockets.

[Quotation from a letter of Herr Arthur Gwinner, managing director of the Deutsche Bank, Berlin.]

It must not be presumed that whenever the bank has to pay the tax it would raise its rate of discount to the full extent of the tax incurred.

[Quotation from Dr. Leon Ritter von Bilinski, governor of the Austro-Hungarian Bank.]

And also on several occasions when its limitations were reached it maintained a discount rate lower than the legal 5 per cent rate. Thus the cost of the tax was not borne by its clients, but by the bank itself.

It is asserted by objectors that the Government should not exact from the banks a pledge of definite securities, but that it is perfectly safe to accept the general credit and assets of the banks as security. I think it is sufficient answer to this to say that the banks do not follow this rule in their dealings with each other. The various clearing house associations do not accept the credit of individual banks, or a claim against their general assets, as security for advances in the issue of clearing house certificates. They require a pledge of carefully selected securities upon which they advance 75 per cent of their value, and they follow the most rigid rules in enforcing payments. I do not see why the banks should expect the Government of the United States to accept from them different and less valuable securities than those that they require in similar transactions between themselves.

The general assets of a bank, outside of its specie reserves, are composed almost entirely of the debts of individuals, corporations, or governments. It certainly can not be claimed that the definite pledge of the securities representing debts of governments and railroads, which we propose, is not as good security as an indefinite claim upon the mass of individual and corporate evidences of indebtedness which are held by the banks. We can find a good illustration of the difference there would be between a general and a special pledge of securities and of government and bank redemptions in considering the recent bank failures. The notes of these banks are secured by a deposit of United States bonds, and redemption will be made under our law without delay by the Government and without loss to note holders or the Government. If the United States was a general creditor of these banks, the result, as to time or security, would be, to say the least, very questionable. If the convertibility depended on the failed banks discredit would at once attach to the entire issue of notes. Those who propose to base circulation upon general assets claim great advantage for their plan, as they propose to give the note holder a prior lien upon all bank assets, apparently forgetting that the Government now has, and will have by the provisions of this bill, not only a lien upon specific securities, but in addition a prior lien upon the general assets of the bank to secure itself from ultimate loss, if any, growing out of the redemption of notes.

It is also claimed that the holding of the prescribed securities will reduce the loaning power of the banks to the extent to which securities are held. This claim presupposes that there is a fixed sum available for loans to borrowers, and that this amount is equal to the entire loanable resources of the banks. I assume that no bank officer would consider it prudent to invest the entire amount of the capital and deposits of his bank in loans upon one kind of commercial paper. Banks known to have this character of investments would not have the confidence of the public. That every bank should have varied investments, with a certain proportion of liquid assets, is a rule of universal application. If a certain amount of convertible securities reduced the loaning capacity of a bank, that capacity is reduced to a greater extent by its reserves and by the amount of its deposits in banks and other financial institutions. If it involves a loss to invest part of the funds in first-class bonds upon a 4 or 5 per cent basis, it involves a greater loss to continue deposits in other banks at 2 per cent, and a still greater loss in holding a portion of its funds as reserves which pay no interest.

There is another objection which perhaps deserves some attention. It is said that the bill could not be carried into effect as banks would have to take money from their reserves for the purchase of the necessary securities, and that this would involve the use of $100 of reserve money to obtain $75 in notes of an inferior character. This criticism has heretofore been applied, and with equal force, to transactions involving the purchase of United States bonds for a basis of note issue. It is quite certain that no national bank has purchased United States bonds at any time in the last twenty-five years that it has not paid more for the bonds than it has received in notes, and it is also equally certain that none of these purchases were made with money taken from the bank's lawful money reserve. No bank would be permitted, either by law or by the exercise of sound judgment, to invest any part of its cash reserves in any kind of securities in times of panic, or in fact at any other time. When we consider that the average cash reserves form but a small proportion—about 8 per cent—of the resources of the banks, and that the reduction of these reserves below the legal limit would be such an infraction of law as to warrant the Comptroller of the Currency taking possession of the business of the bank, it is easy to see that no such transaction would take place. A conclusive answer to this objection is found in the fact that a large part of the remaining 92 per cent of the bank's resources would be available at all times for use in exchange or for the purchase of these securities.

It has been objected to the provisions of the bill that it would have the effect of unduly and unnaturally increasing the market value of the securities which are to be deposited under its provisions. It was the purpose of the committee to designate classes of securities in volume so large that a criticism of this kind could not be fairly made. There are now outstanding State and municipal bonds which might be deposited under the provisions of the bill to the amount of $2,000,000,000, and judging by our past experience this amount will be rapidly added to by the issue of new securities. Of the class of railroad bonds described, competent authorities estimate that there are at least $2,000,000,000 outstanding. This would make $4,000,000,000 as against a possible maximum purchase of $500,000,000. I do not think that these purchases, even to the full amount, would materially affect the prices of the securities.

Criticism has been made of the notes to be issued that they are "wild cat" and unsound. This criticism may be fairly characterized as absurd. For the safety of the note holder we have, first and most important, a pledge of the credit, resources, and revenues of the United States, which guarantees their convertibility. Second, we have a specific pledge of collaterals of the highest character, with value in excess of the amount of notes issued. Third, we have a prior lien upon all the assets of the bank through which the notes are issued. There is no bank paper money in existence which has more guaranties of safety and soundness than the bank notes provided for by this measure.

The most strenuous objections to the plan of the committee are urged by critics who have elaborate currency schemes of their own to exploit and who see imminent peril to the country and all of its interests if their plans are not adopted immediately. These critics denounce in unmeasured terms our entire monetary system. This system, like that of the other commercial nations, is the result of a process of evolution. It is difficult to conceive of a scheme which would be equally applicable to the needs and demands of the people of every country and at all times. The habits of the people, changes which are made necessary by growth and development, conditions of locality, wealth and population, extent and character of business requirements are some of the elements which must be taken into consideration in determining what monetary system is best adapted to any people. Whenever a monetary system has been adapted or adjusted to meet the business and customs of a people, it should not be changed in haste because theorists disapprove, or bank managers, for selfish interests, declaim against it.

It is true that we have various forms of currency in use, growing out of demands and conditions at different periods of our recent history. United States notes were issued under stress of circumstances at the time of a great war. Our silver dollars and silver certificates are the evidences of a sincere but unsuccessful attempt to restore silver by legislation to its ancient position as a money metal. Our national-bank notes were the creation of men who had fresh in their minds our disastrous national experience with every variety of unsound currency, extending over three-quarters of a century of our history.

It has not been found possible—and I think it is quite as impossible to-day as ever—to provide by legislation for the retirement of any of these forms of currency. Our United States notes hold a position analogous to that of the uncovered national notes of Germany and Canada and the uncovered notes of the government banks of other leading nations. Just as long as the limitation upon their amount is maintained they are not objectionable, and it is difficult to say that they are in any sense a dangerous element in our currency system.

To retire the silver certificates would mean to melt the silver dollars and use the bullion to the extent to which this would be possible, in subsidiary coins, and to sell the remaining silver at its bullion price. I think it is quite safe to say that this step will not be taken. If there were no other interests involved, the position of the United States as the second greatest silver producing country in the world, Mexico being the first, would lead us to refrain from taking a step which would be the disastrous and final blow to the value of silver. Silver certificates have been given a position by different legislative acts which renders them, in my belief, a perfectly safe element in our currency system. By these enactments other paper money issues are restricted in denominations to $5 and above. It was the purpose of this legislation to give to silver certificates the entire field of small notes, with the belief, which is justified by our own experience and that of other countries, that this provision would relieve the Government from troublesome demands for redemption. It is perfectly certain that until our legislation in this regard is modified we have no reason to anticipate danger from this element of our money supply.

In this legislation Congress was governed by the experience of other nations who have adopted similar expedients for the purpose of keeping in constant circulation a certain portion of their currency. In Germany the Imperial Bank issues no notes of less than 20 marks. Imperial treasury notes in small denominations and gold and silver are used for ordinary circulation. The Canadian banks do not issue notes of less denomination than $5. Dominion notes of Canada occupy the field of small issues. The Bank of England issues no note of less than £5. In France the minimum issue is 50 francs. The minimum issue of the Scotch banks is £1. In each of these countries gold and silver currency supply the place of minor issues.

I believe it is equally safe to predict that our system of national-bank notes will not be changed until, by the payment or substantial reduction of the national debt, the plan of issue shall be necessarily modified or abandoned. Their character will be retained unless Congress shall see fit to bestow the issuing function either upon a central bank or upon the various banking institutions of the country.

It was the declared purpose of the act of March 14, 1900, which reaffirmed the gold standard, to make these various unrelated forms of currency vital parts of a living whole and to make all convertible, at the will of the holder, into gold. There has been up to this time not the slightest indication of a failure to carry out this purpose. The act of 1900 made the gold dollar the unit of value, and made it the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to maintain all forms of money issued or coined by the United States at a parity of value with this standard. To carry this pledge into effect a reserve fund of $150,000,000 in gold was created, and the entire resources of the country were solemnly pledged to maintain this reserve and to secure the promised convertibility. The entire revenues of the country, its capacity to purchase gold, its power to borrow money by the unlimited issue of bonds and other securities, and the general fund in the Treasury, were all placed at the disposal of the executive officers of the Government to insure continued redemption. From the time of the passage of the act of 1900 to the present moment there has been no question raised in any part of the world as to the value or security of any form of our currency.

One very important provision of this act greatly strengthened the monetary position of the United States among the commercial nations. I refer to the provision making the issue of gold certificates mandatory upon a deposit of gold. As the result of this legislation we have in the Treasury over $800,000,000 of gold, against which an equal amount of gold certificates are outstanding. There can, of course, be no question as to the security of these notes. The existence of this enormous gold fund, available on demand, makes a run upon the Treasury gold, such as that which occurred in 1894, impossible.

The provisions of the act of 1900, which authorized the refunding of the outstanding 3, 4, and 5 per cent bonds of the United States into 2 per cents, were intended not only to strengthen the public credit, but to give a longer lease of vigorous life to national-bank notes. The increase which has taken place in this portion of our circulation has proven the wisdom of Congressional action in this regard.

While our existing currency system may perhaps be fairly characterized as a piece of patchwork, composed of elements which seem, perhaps, diverse and inharmonious, as a whole it has answered well the purposes of this great nation, and none of its elements are dangerous in character. Changing conditions will undoubtedly in the future, as they have in the past, require modifications from time to time. Possibly these changes may necessitate an entire revolution, alike of notes and of the plan for their issue; but we can not lose sight, so far as the present is concerned, of one central and dominant fact—that this great mass of currency, every dollar of which is equal in theory and in fact to the best money of the world, has not in the least degree checked the rising tide of a great nation's progress and prosperity.

The criticism of our currency system which is most frequently urged is that it does not automatically expand and contract to meet the demands of trade and that it is rigid in volume. The framers of the act of 1900 believed, that with a circulating medium of gold and notes equivalent to gold, our currency would respond to the demands and requirements of the business of the country and that we should thus secure the required element of elasticity. If there is no interference, through excessive paper issues, with the well-known law governing the movement and distribution, between nations and communities, of gold and paper currency, limited in amount and convertible into gold, we have a right to expect a natural and normal elasticity in the volume of our currency. Under these conditions we should expect money to flow freely to points where there is the greatest legitimate demand and where it would best perform its work as a medium of exchange.

I think it may be said that an examination of the statistics of the supply and movement of gold will, to a considerable extent at least, be found to justify these anticipations. From these statistics it appears that an average of one hundred millions has been added annually to our stock of gold, and that in the months of greatest demand for currency, namely, the last five months of the year, there was an average excess in each year of imports of gold over exports, from 1900 to 1907, inclusive, of $33,476,415, while during the five months next preceding, when the normal demand for currency was less, there was in each year an average excess of exports over imports during the same period, of $3,712,946.

The discussion of our monetary system usually proceeds upon the theory that national-bank note issues form its most important element. This is by no means the fact. Thirty years ago bank notes formed 41 per cent of our total money. This proportion greatly decreased until it was less than 10 per cent in 1891, 1892, and 1893. The recent rapid increase of note issues has brought the percentage up to about 20, where it now stands. In considering the question of the elasticity of our currency this fact should be remembered, as the fluctuation of this comparatively unimportant portion would have no considerable effect upon general conditions.

In a general way it is undoubtedly important that the volume of money should respond to great industrial and commercial movements, to the great swing of national progress or retrogression, and I believe that our existing system has been found by experience to be as responsive to these changes as any in existence, but I also believe that the value, in so far as it relates to the public interests, of constant changes in volume of note issues is greatly overestimated. In modern times, with the business and bank methods now in use, there is little, if any, connection between the amount of notes outstanding from time to time in a country and the accommodations which banks extend to their customers. Most of the business demands of a community are met by the granting of bank credits, which do not involve in the great majority of cases, at any stage of the transaction, the use of actual currency. It is an elasticity in bank credits responsive to business demands that is usually in the minds of those who demand elasticity. There is a variable demand in every community, for actual notes largely for use in pay rolls and for moving the crops, but the fluctuations in demand for this purpose are not sufficient to require considerable changes in the necessary volume of money.

In antebellum days, when the bank-note issues of the country were not limited by any central authority, elasticity formed the element of greatest danger to the interests of the people. The contraction and expansion of note issues, made arbitrarily to answer the selfish purposes of the banks, was a source of constant annoyance, uncertainty, and loss.

In the early history of banks of discount loans were made upon condition that customers accepted therefor notes of the bank. Except in very rare cases, in communities far away from business centers, this practice has entirely disappeared. In bank practice in commercial and industrial countries a practical but complete separation has taken place between a right of note issue and a general banking business. The function of issuing notes has been directly or indirectly assumed by governments, while banking institutions which do not have the power of note issue have been rapidly absorbing the legitimate business of banking. The line of cleavage between issuing banks and those of discount and deposit is becoming more clearly marked. The separation of functions is the established rule, approved alike by experience and the judgment of economists and practical men of affairs. In France, Germany, and Great Britain private bankers and incorporated banks, who have no power of note issue, do a large part of the banking business of those countries. In the United States the relative proportion of banking business done by the national banks, whose power of note issue is only nominal, has been constantly diminishing, so that at this time a large portion of the actual banking business of the country is done by State banks of various kinds, and by trust companies, who are not permitted to issue notes. There is no evidence that these institutions are restricted, either in the volume or the profit of their business, by this deprivation, and no attempt is being made by them to have the right which such institutions originally enjoyed restored.

There is much popular misapprehension as to the extent of the actual fluctuations which take place in the volume of a currency in countries where there is no limitation upon note issue.

There is practically no restriction on bank-note issues in France, yet a statement of the average amount of notes outstanding for each month for a series of ten years shows no substantial variation from month to month. In Great Britain, although the business of the country might increase a hundredfold, the volume of actual currency in use might remain unchanged.

I have before me a monthly statement of the outstanding notes of the banks of Canada for a period of ten years. This shows but slight variation from month to month and from time to time. There are no statistics available to show similar variations in the United States. It is impossible to ascertain the actual fluctuation of bank-note currency in the hands of the people from month to month or what relative amount of bank notes are actually in circulation. For instance, a bank might have nominally outstanding $5,000,000 in notes and this amount would appear in the published statement of note circulation; yet there might be times when $4,000,000 of these notes would be in the vaults of the bank and at other times not more than $1,000,000. There is no way of ascertaining what proportion of national-bank notes may be at any time in the hands of the issuing banks.

It may be fairly assumed that the actual fluctuations in the United States, if they could be accurately measured, would be practically along the same lines as those of France and Canada.

In the case of each of these countries, although there have been occasional slight reductions, there has been, for many years, a steady increase in volume of currency.

Elasticity, in our own experience and that of France and Canada, means continuous but irregular expansion. Banks can not be depended upon to contract their issues in the public interests, when competition and their selfish interests lead to an expansion. We should constantly bear in mind the danger of unrestricted expansion. It leads to inflation, and inflation must end ultimately in disaster. Elasticity in monetary volume seems to have a different meaning for each individual critic.

If elasticity in volume of currency is necessary in times of financial distrust, as we believe it is, the bill reported by the Finance Committee answers this demand. The fact that it has the oppositon of a certain class of bank managers is an evidence to my mind that these officers do not really desire elasticity, but a continual and unlimited expansion with the expectation of constantly increasing gains.

A survey of the entire field from the standpoint of experience and results must lead us to the conclusion that while there is no necessity for the immediate reconstruction of our monetary system, there is an imperative demand for some provision for additional notes to be used in emergencies.

Currency legislation can, however, furnish but a partial remedy for existing financial evils. A general demand for a reform in banking methods is quite as insistent in the public mind as that for a modification of our monetary system. The great mass of the men who control the national banks of the country are strong and liberal minded. Their influence and that of the institutions they represent has been helpful in the great work of national development. But these men, intrusted with the management of great financial institutions, which can do so much to make or to mar the prosperity of our country, should realize that they have serious responsibilities with reference to existing conditions and the necessity for reform in banking methods.

I have already alluded to the inadequacy of bank reserves. When we compare the reserves of our banks with the reserves of similar European institutions this inadequacy becomes painfully apparent. But this is not the only—perhaps not the most important—element of weakness in the banking situation. The change which has taken place in the relation of capital to liabilities and to credit expansion naturally causes apprehension in the public mind. It is, of course, true that the great financial centers of the world have all felt the influence of a speculative spirit which has resulted in a general and dangerous overexpansion of bank credits, but this fact only emphasizes and increases our sense of the dangers existing in our own country.

An examination of the changes which have taken place in the relation between the capital of national banks and their loans and discounts in twenty years will furnish evidence of the extent to which an expansion of bank credits has taken place. In 1887 the relation between capital and loans and discounts was as 1 to 2.61; in 1897 it was as 1 to 3.27; in 1907 it was as 1 to 5.22. In twenty years the capital of our national banks increased $318,025,000, and in the same time their loans and discounts increased $3,098,538,000.

There is another disquieting element of quite as serious a nature. It is the discovery that many national banks have been directly or indirectly furnishing capital for speculative ventures. Some of them have been largely engaged in promoting or underwriting questionable business schemes. All of these operations are clearly outside of the scope of legitimate banking and serve to bring discredit upon all of our banking institutions.

The habit of banks in the large cities of paying a high rate of interest upon the deposits of other banks has led to large accumulations of loanable funds in the great commercial centers at times when the demand for trade purposes throughout the country was less than normal. This dangerous accumulation has naturally led many times to speculative and improvident loans.

Our experience in the recent crisis shows that a necessity exists for a closer cooperation between the banks in different parts of the country. I can see no reason why these banks should not establish a central clearing house, a voluntary organization of clearing-house associations which should in a way represent the banking interests of the entire country, which would exert beneficial influence in facilitating and regulating both domestic and foreign exchanges.

But these are matters which must be left largely to the discretion and judgment of bank managers, while the whole question of currency issues is committed to the control of Congress, and we are clearly answerable for any defects or omissions which we have in our power to remedy. If we should fail to take some effective action to provide against crises such as that through which we have just passed, we should assume a grave responsibility, which I feel that we can not afford to take. It is difficult to overestimate the magnitude of this responsibility.

We can not forget that we have to deal with the business and future prosperity of a continent. Our country has a banking power and wealth of resources and a volume of commerce and industry equal to all the commercial world besides. We can not afford to make a mistake that will injuriously affect the credit or the soundness of our circulating medium.

The enactment of the pending bill will furnish evidence that Congress is not unmindful of its serious responsibilities in this regard. There can be no reasonable doubt of the effectiveness of the measure. The committee firmly believe that through its enactment an atmosphere of confidence and feeling of security will be created which will be invaluable in improving business conditions and in giving a new impetus to the work of national development.

SURVEY OF WASHITA RIVER, OKLAHOMA.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to call up the Senate concurrent resolution reported from the Committee on Commerce last Thursday providing for a survey of Washita River, Oklahoma.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the Washita River, Oklahoma, from the point of its confluence with the Red River to the town of Mountain View, in Kiowa County, Okla., with a view of dredging, cleaning out, and widening the channel, and to submit a plan and estimate for such improvements.

REVISION OF THE PENAL LAWS.

Mr. CLAPP. Unless there is some other business pending, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of general orders under Rule VIII.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho demands the regular order, which is the unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2982) to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next section of the bill passed over will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 51. [Whoever shall cut, or cause or procure to be cut, or shall wantonly destroy, or cause to be wantonly destroyed, any timber growing on the public lands of the United States; or whoever shall remove, or cause to be removed, any timber from said public lands, with intent to export or to dispose of the same; or whoever, being the owner, master, or consignee of any vessel, or the owner, director, or agent of any railroad, shall knowingly transport any timber so cut or removed from said lands, or lumber manufactured therefrom, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both. Nothing in this section shall prevent any miner or agriculturist from clearing his land in the ordinary working of his mining claim, or in the preparation of his farm for tillage, or from taking the timber necessary to support his improvements, or the taking of timber for the use of the United States.]

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I inquire of the Senator in charge of the bill if this section will operate to repeal the law of 1878, allowing miners to cut necessary timber upon the mineral lands of the United States for the development of their mines?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, in response to the question of the Senator from Montana, I would say that there is an amendment now pending, which is acceptable to the committee, covering the proposition about which he makes inquiry, providing that this section shall not repeal the provisions of the act allowing the cutting of timber. That amendment was pending at the time of the adjournment on the last legislative day.

Mr. CARTER. The committee evidently, therefore, thought that by inference or implication this section might be held to repeal the act of 1878.

Mr. HEYBURN. The committee were of opinion that it would not repeal the act of 1878, but in the abundance of caution the committee are inclined to accept the amendment suggested by the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], if I am right in my recollection, so that no possible controversy may arise hereafter as to the interpretation to be placed upon the section.

Mr. CARTER. I desire, then, to inquire of the Senator if it would inconvenience his management of the bill to permit the section to go over for action at the time the amendment of the Senator from Colorado is taken up? I am free to say that if the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado is rejected, I shall insist upon an amendment to this section which will negative any possible implication of repeal.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no objection whatever to the section going over for further consideration. We will mark it passed over and proceed to section 62.

Mr. McLAURIN. Mr. President, I have an engagement that will take me out of the Chamber when a section is reached that I desire to have amended and upon which I have agreed, I believe, with the Senator in charge of the bill. It is section 95, and was not reserved. I will read the section——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say if it has not been reserved it will not come up until after we have disposed of all the reserved sections. So the Senator from Mississippi is entirely safe in leaving it until we recur to those sections.

Mr. McLAURIN. With that understanding, then, I will ask that it be taken up hereafter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The next section passed over will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 62. [Whoever shall willfully or maliciously injure or destroy any of the works, property, or material of any telegraph, telephone, or cable line, or system, operated or controlled by the United States, whether constructed or in process of construction, or shall willfully or maliciously interfere in any way with the working or use of any such line, or system, or shall willfully or maliciously obstruct, hinder, or delay the transmission of any communication over any such line, or system, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than three years, or both.]

Mr. HEYBURN. When section 62 was read on a former occasion an inquiry was made by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] as to whether it was sufficiently comprehensive to include the wireless methods of telegraphing. It was the opinion of the committee at that time, and is now the opinion of the committee, that the words "or system" in line 8 are sufficiently comprehensive to include any method or the machinery for carrying into effect any method of communication by either wireless or other telegraphy.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will resume the reading.

The Secretary read the next section passed over, as follows:

SEC. 72. [Whoever, being a consul, or vice-consul, or other person employed in the consular service of the United States, shall knowingly certify falsely to any invoice, or other paper, to which his certificate is by law authorized or required, shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than three years.]

Mr. HEYBURN. The offices of commercial agent and vice-commercial agent have been abolished by law. They are referred to in existing law as within the prohibitions of this section. Having been abolished, they are omitted from the section as reported by the committee, and in lieu thereof certain other words have been inserted which are comprehensive to cover the existing officers and their designation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will continue the reading.

The Secretary read the next section passed over, as follows:

SEC. 107. Whoever, being an officer or other person authorized by any law of the United States to record a conveyance of real property or any other instrument which by such law may be recorded, shall knowingly certify falsely that such conveyance or instrument has or has not been recorded, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than seven years, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. This is a section of new law reported for the purpose of meeting new conditions that have arisen out of the administration of existing law. The section was recommended by the committee because it was necessary to perfect the method for administering the existing law. It brings no new principle of law into the code.

The Secretary read the next section passed over, as follows:

SEC. 108. Whoever, being a public officer or other person authorized by any law of the United States to make or give a certificate or other writing, shall knowingly make and deliver as true such a certificate or writing, containing any statement which he knows to be false, in a case where the punishment thereof is not elsewhere expressly provided by law, shall be fined not more than $500, or imprisoned not more than one year, or both.

Mr. HEYBURN. The same as was stated of the preceding section, section 107, is applicable to section 108. It brings no new principle of law into the code, but it provides for a method of carrying into effect existing law and cures certain defects discovered in the administration of existing law.

The Secretary proceeded to read section 112.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think we may, without reading them, pass over sections 112 to 118, inclusive. They are the sections in which is incorporated a provision covering the interval of time between the election and the qualification of a Member of Congress, and I think should not be considered with so light an attendance of the members of this body.

Mr. BACON. Has the Senator any hope that at any time during the consideration of this bill he will have any such attendance as will enable a general consideration of these sections?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do not know of any past experience upon which such a hope might be well founded, and I am perfectly willing at this time or at any time to take up the consideration of the sections.

They involve a simple proposition, Shall the period during which Members of Congress are prohibited from doing certain things be enlarged so as to include the period between their election and the time they take the oath of office? I have not at any time been in any doubt as to my own conclusion upon that subject. I do not know what the sentiment of the Senate would be if it were called upon to express it after a consideration. I do know that so far as I am concerned I am not in favor of widening the scope of existing law.

It is new legislation of a class that I have before had occasion to designate as not being reflective of a very high degree of confidence in the personal conscience of the men who are elected as Members of Congress.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I am inclined to agree with most the Senator says in regard to the labors of the Commission and as to his views thereon, but in this particular instance I differ from him very radically.

The Senator, I presume, recalls the instance in the very recent past which doubtless suggested to the revisionists the necessity for this enlargement of the law. What he says about the distrust which is necessarily implied in this class of legislation may, of course, be said with reference to the existing law. It does indicate that there is a necessity for a law which shall restrain Members of Congress, either of the Senate or of the House, from doing certain things which the law now condemns.

The necessity for that law grew out of the fact that those things were being done by Members of Congress—Senators and Representatives—and they were grossly improper. I quite agree with the implication in the Senator's remarks that they were so improper that no Senator or Representative ought to be guilty of them, and that they ought not to be presumed to be in a frame of mind which would make them guilty of them. Nevertheless, experience has shown that that presumption can not be relied upon.

We know the fact, I think since the Senator has been in the Senate, of a Senator who did what the law said he should not do, but who was exonerated both by the courts and by a committee of this body, if I understood it correctly, upon the ground that, while he had been elected and had received his commission and was drawing the salary attached to the office, he had not been sworn in, and therefore that the law did not apply to him.

I think, Mr. President, that whenever a Senator accepts the office of Senator and receives his commission and begins to draw his salary, there certainly devolves upon him the high obligation to conform in every way not only to the letter but to the spirit of the law, and if, as we have seen, there is an instance where he has not conformed to the spirit of it, we ought to make the letter of it apply to him and compel him to comply with it.

I am very frank to say, Mr. President, that so far as agreeing with the Senator as to the unwisdom of this enlargement of the law, I think the enlargement which is proposed is one of the very wisest things that I have seen come from that committee. I trust the Senator will stand up with his committee on that subject.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that the language of this section and the others of the same character is much broader than he seems to have noticed. The language as reported is:

Whoever, being elected.

I agree with the Senator that, after a Member of Congress is upon the pay roll, he is to all intents and purposes an officer of Congress; that is to say, he is a Member of Congress. But there is a period more or less extended between the election and the time when he begins to draw his pay and is upon the pay roll. That is the period that is attempted to be covered by these sections. The language I call the Senator's attention to is, "Whoever, being elected."

Mr. BACON. If I understand correctly, while it may be, and doubtless is, as the Senator says, that the section would antedate the period when he began to draw his salary, it would also cover a period between the time of his beginning to draw the salary and the time when he was sworn in, which was the case I had in mind and to which I have alluded.

But I will go further than I did before, when I said when a Senator or Representative began drawing his salary he ought to consider himself as within the obligations of the law. I will go still further back and say that whenever a Senator receives an election at the hands either of the people or of the legislature he ought to feel bound by the same high moral obligation.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to submit a legal proposition to the consideration of the Senate, and it is this: What jurisdiction has Congress over a private citizen to say that he shall not, for instance, as in the case referred to by the Senator from Georgia, make a contract to rent a building to the Government for use as a post-office? Where do we get our jurisdiction to distinguish a man who is yet in private life from his fellow-citizens and say that he is not capable of making a contract without being guilty of a crime? That is the question that has always presented itself to my mind.

Up to the time he assumes duty as a public officer he is a private citizen; he has the same right to contract as any other private citizen; and I doubt the power of Congress to make the making of a contract by him the basis of a criminal charge.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I think in regard to that that so far as practicing before the Departments is concerned—and that is what this provision relates to—Congress has absolute power to say who shall or who shall not practice before the Departments of the Government. If for any reason there is a certain class of people who should be debarred from that opportunity or that privilege, so long as there is no distinction between individuals, I think Congress has the power. Congress could not say that John Jones should not do so or that Robert Smith should not do so; but it can classify certain portions of the community who, by reason of a particular relationship to the Government or to the Departments, shall be debarred.

Now, it is true that we have no more control over a man who has been elected than we have over a man who has not been elected, so far as his individuality is concerned; but we have a right, when we are prescribing what shall be done before the Departments, to classify the people of the country and to say whether or not they shall be permitted to practice in those Departments. We have a right to say who shall practice in the Pension Bureau or before the Interior Department. I think the ...ht of classification—and I am sure the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] is quite familiar with all the decisions of the Supreme Court on that subject—is one that is very generally recognized, not with reference to this particular class of legislation, but as to all legislation. So long as that legislation confines itself to classes, there is no violation of the general principle that requires uniformity. I think that when we consider the reason of the law—and I call the Senator's attention to it—that such a man has violated it as much—not as much; possibly there is a difference in degree—but he has as certainly violated it in one case as in the other. The purpose is—that is, one purpose at least is—that no man should appear before a Department in the effort to secure certain action by that Department who, by reason of his position as a legislator, is supposed to have more influence with that Department than he would have if he were not a legislator. When a man has been elected a condition of affairs has arisen where he is clothed with an influence which, as a private citizen, he did not before have.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am in entire sympathy with the moral principle expressed in this proposed legislation. I do not believe any man who has been elected a Member of Congress in either House should do any of the things that are forbidden by these sections or any one of them. It is only a question as to the propriety of enlarging by legislation the scope of prohibition that I desired to meet the consideration of the members of this body before it was passed. I have nothing further to suggest.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, if there was any probability that we were going to have at any time any such attention on the part of the Senate to this proposed legislation as its gravity demands, I should certainly agree with the Senator from Idaho; but I think it must impress everybody—there are very few of us who are here and who are taking part in the proceedings of the Senate in this matter—it must impress everyone as an extremely remarkable thing that in the consideration of a bill which is a part of a series of bills which are to cover the entire statute law of the United Sttaes, the large majority—I will say that in order that those of the minority who are not within the criticism may not apply it to themselves—the large majority of the Senate, and of both sides of the Senate, are paying no more attention to the question of what shall be done or what shall not be done in this important matter than if we were enacting a body of laws for Japan or Kamchatka.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is represented that such confidence is entertained for the conclusions of the committee that it is not deemed necessary by members of the Senate to exercise such close supervision over their work as would be indicated by a larger attendance and a more extended participation in debate. If such is the case, the committee can only feel complimented and the country can take its chances.

Now, I would say, yielding to the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], that sections 112, 113, and 114 having been read, we can pass them under the rule, and it will not be necessary to reread them unless there is some desire that they should be again read. As I have stated, they have been read once before.

Mr. BACON. This afternoon?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; not this afternoon, but on a former occasion. If, however, the Senator desires to have them read, we can proceed with the reading.

Mr. CLAY. Do I understand the Senator from Idaho to say that certain of these sections to which he refers are those we are passing on without considering now?

Mr. HEYBURN. We have just been considering the principle that is involved in those three sections, and it is hardly necessary that they should again be read and considered separately.

Mr. CLAY. But I understand that we are considering these sections now for the last time.

Mr. HEYBURN. We are.

Mr. CLAY. We have not, however, adopted the sections further on, as to which, when they are considered, I desire to be present. They are entirely new matter.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; they are not new matter, except as to some expressions in them.

Mr. CLAY. One of them is practically a new section.

Mr. HEYBURN. We have not yet reached that. I think we are not including the section to which the Senator refers.

Mr. CLAY. Very well.

Mr. BACON. I think that we ought to have every section read. Such Senators as did not happen to be present when the sections were previously read have not had an opportunity to become familiar with their details.

Mr. HEYBURN. Very well. Let the sections to which the Senator from Georgia refers be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The Secretary will read the sections referred to by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON].

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 112. [Whoever, being elected a Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, shall, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, directly or indirectly, ask, accept, receive, or agree to receive, any money, property, or other valuable consideration, or any promise, contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value to him or to any person designated by him, for his attention to, or services, or with the intent to have his action, vote, or decision influenced, on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding, which may at any time be pending in either House of Congress or before any committee thereof, or which by law or under the Constitution may be brought before him in his official capacity, or in his place as such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be fined not more than three times the amount asked, accepted, or received, and imprisoned not more than three years; and shall, moreover, forfeit his office or place, and thereafter be forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust, or profit under the Government of the United States.]

SEC. 113. [Whoever shall promise, offer, or give, or cause to be promised, offered, or given, any money or thing of value, or shall make or tender any contract, undertaking, obligation, gratuity, or security for the payment of money or for the delivery or conveyance of anything of value, to any Member of either House of Congress, or Delegate to Congress, or Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, with intent to influence his action, vote, or decision, on any question, matter, cause, or proceeding, which may at any time be pending in either House of Congress, or before any committee thereof, or which by law or under the Constitution may be brought before him in his official capacity or in his place as such Member, Delegate, or Resident Commissioner, shall be fined not more than three times the amount of money or value of the thing so promised, offered, given, made, or tendered, and imprisoned not more than three years.]

SEC. 114. [Whoever, being elected a Member of or Delegate to Congress, or a Resident Commissioner from any Territory of the United States, shall, after his election and either before or after he has qualified, and during his continuance in office, or being an officer or agent of the United States, shall directly or indirectly take, receive, or agree to receive, from any person, any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever, for procuring, or aiding to procure, any contract, office, or place from the United States or from any officer or Department thereof, for any person whatever, or for giving any such contract, office, or place to any person whomsoever; or whoever, directly or indirectly, shall offer, or agree to give, or shall give, or bestow any money, property, or other valuable consideration whatever, for the procuring, or aiding to procure, any such contract, office, or place, shall be fined not more than $10,000 and imprisoned not more than two years; and shall, moreover, be disqualified from holding any office of honor, profit, or trust under the Government of the United States. Any such contract or agreement may, at the option of the President, be declared void.]

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I now ask that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 10, 1908.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday, February 7, 1908, was read and approved.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BUSINESS.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that next week, Thursday and Friday, February 20 and 21, be set aside for the consideration of District of Columbia bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that Thursday and Friday of next week be set aside for the consideration of District bills. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I understand that this is in lieu of giving up to-day, and you will take no more time of the House than you otherwise would have taken?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think I ought to say that there is some fear that the trackage bill may take more than one day, and I think it would hardly be fair to that legislation, after we had perhaps disposed of eight or ten sections of it, to wait two weeks before the balance of the bill could be disposed of. That is the reason I ask for two days.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no objection. In fact, I think we ought to get through with that trackage legislation.

Mr. MANN. This will virtually give the gentleman three days.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am only asking for two days.

Mr. MANN. It will give the gentleman Thursday and Friday of next week, and the following Monday, which is the next regular District day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

UNITED STATES COURT, JACKSON, KY.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 14382) to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 9 of "An act to divide Kentucky into two judicial districts," approved February 12, 1901, as amended by the act entitled "An act establishing a United States court at Catlettsburg in the eastern district of Kentucky," approved March 10, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read:

"SEC. 9. That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the western district of Kentucky shall be held at the following times and places, namely: At Louisville, beginning on the second Monday in March and the second Monday in October in each year; at Owensboro, beginning on the fourth Monday in November and the first Monday in May in each year; at Paducah, beginning on the third Monday in April and the third Monday in November in each year; at Bowling Green, beginning on the third Monday in May and the second Monday in December in each year.

"That the regular terms of the circuit and district courts of the United States for the eastern district of Kentucky shall be held at the following times and places, namely: At Jackson, beginning on the first Monday in March and the third Monday in September in each year; at Frankfort, beginning on the second Monday in March and the fourth Monday in September in each year; at Covington, beginning on the first Monday in April and the third Monday in October in each year; at Richmond, beginning on the fourth Monday in April and the second Monday in November in each year; at London, beginning on the second Monday in May and the fourth Monday in November in each year; at Catlettsburg, beginning on the fourth Monday in May and the second Monday in December in each year, and at such other times and places as may hereafter be provided by law."

SEC. 2. That suitable rooms and accommodations are to be furnished for holding the courts at Jackson, free of expense to the Government of the United States, until such time as a Federal building shall be erected there.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky at how many additional places does this give terms of the United States court?

Mr. LANGLEY. Only one.

Mr. PAYNE. And that is at Jackson?

Mr. LANGLEY. That is at Jackson, Breathitt County, Ky.

Mr. PAYNE. I see provision is made that they must furnish a place for holding the court.

Mr. LANGLEY. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose until the United States builds a court-house there?

Mr. LANGLEY. We should be very glad to have that done sooner or later.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose that is one of the objects of the bill?

Mr. LANGLEY. That is not the primary object; certainly not. On the contrary——

Mr. PAYNE. What is the object of the bill? It seems to me that six places in one district is putting them in pretty thick. I am not acquainted with the geography of the eastern district of Kentucky.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am.

Mr. PAYNE. That is the reason I am asking the gentleman. Does the gentleman believe it is necessary for the accommodation of the litigants in eastern Kentucky to have this additional place established?

Mr. LANGLEY. I most assuredly do. The letter of the Attorney-General, which is embodied in the report of the committee, concedes that fact. If that were not so, I would not ask for the passage of the bill.

Mr. PAYNE. How far is it from the nearest court that is now held?

Mr. LANGLEY. My recollection is that it is about 50 miles, air line.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, by railroad? People do not fly there when they go to attend court.

Mr. LANGLEY. If they did, they would get a bird's-eye view of as beautiful a specimen of God's handiwork as this country affords and of as noble a people as the world affords. I have forgotten the exact distance by rail, but it is something more than 50 miles, I think. It will accommodate the people of a great many counties in the mountain section of the State, where there are very few railroad facilities, and I believe it would result in a decided saving to the Government in the matter of the transportation of witnesses, prisoners, and others connected with the business of the court. In addition, it would be a great advantage to civil litigants, especially those whose cases are transferred from the State to the Federal court, such as suits over land titles and matters of that kind, which, in some instances, involve hundreds of thousands of dollars. There is much litigation of this character there now and more in prospect.

Mr. PAYNE. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed, that I shall not object to this bill, largely for the same reason that I did not object to the bill for an additional court or division in Texas the other day; but I want to give notice that I shall examine into these matters more closely hereafter, so far as I am concerned, as an individual Member of the House. I know that there are some places for holding court, even in the State of New York, where they have not had more than one day of court at the terms appointed for several years, and I want to be sure that we are not giving additional places and additional terms of court that are not necessary, and which will only burden the Treasury with expense and will not at all facilitate the administration of justice.

Mr. JENKINS. If the gentleman from Kentucky will yield, I would like to say that this bill was carefully considered by the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted to the Federal judge, submitted to the Attorney-General, and they all approved it and said that it was a practical necessity. That is why the Committee on the Judiciary reported the bill.

Mr. LANGLEY. I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee that reported this bill for furnishing the House with the information that I was just proceeding to give. I can assure the gentleman from New York that the situation which he describes as existing in his own State will not prevail at this court. There will be abundance of business there—much more than at some of the courts now held at other points in the State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. PERKINS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, from time to time as he may deem necessary, to detail clerks from his office to make special investigations in the field: Provided, That while thus absent from Washington under such detail they shall receive a per diem of $3 to cover all expenses, exclusive of transportation and sleeping-car fares, $3,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. I would like to inquire of the gentleman in charge of the bill the reason for this appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that the item is not subject to a point of order, as it is what is often called here "current law." It is in the appropriation bill covering the present fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order. I am willing to discuss it, but it is so clearly subject to a point of order that I am sure the gentleman from New York will concede it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly not. It often occurs that investigations of some matter at some agency or some school is called for on a subject with which some clerk in his office is especially cognizant, and this makes it possible for him to detail that clerk to make an examination into that matter. The same provision was in the last year's bill, and of the $3,000 appropriated $2,100 have been expended, and it has been found of considerable advantage, and it may be a matter of considerable economy, because it might be that no inspector would be where he could be immediately detailed, and it might be necessary to send one from Arizona to Michigan, whereas a clerk could be detailed from the office and make the trip to Michigan and end the whole matter.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman's explanation seems to be perfect. I understand the Commissioner has a plan in mind, if not in practice, transferring clerks from the Department in Washington to various Indian agencies and other points throughout the country, so as to keep up an endless chain of movement of employees, bringing them into Washington a part of the time and away from Washington a part of the time, about which I express no opinion at present. Has this anything to do with that plan?.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there is any such plan, I did not know it. I think the gentleman's information is not correct.

Mr. MANN. My information is derived from the report of the Commissioner.

Mr. SHERMAN. If there be such a plan, this has no connection with it.

Mr. MANN. It is the proviso that makes the paragraph subject to a point of order; can the gentleman tell us what would be the allowance made to one of these clerks while traveling if there was no such proviso in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not to exceed $3 a day.

Mr. MANN. That is the proviso, that is the law. What would it be if there was no proviso in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. There would not be any. There would be no authority to send the man away; and if he did, he would have to go without any allowance for subsistence.

Mr. MANN. Of course the amount appropriated in this item is not large and there can be no gross abuse of it. I am sure the gentleman is aware of the fact that with some Departments of the Government, with some officials of the Government, it is the custom to avail themselves of a similar provision so that a man receives his full salary, is detailed away from Washington, and all the time receives his $3 a day—the cost of his living in addition to his salary, and never supports himself at all out of his salary.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know of a case quite as broad as the gentleman states, but of course I am aware that there are officials who have a per diem allowance when absent from Washington, who are away the greater part of the year, and the per diem allowance more than maintains them.

Mr. MANN. I know of cases where people are detailed away from Washington by the year who receive the full salary that they did while in Washington and, in addition, more than the cost of their living as an allowance while they are away by the year. Of course that would not apply to this case.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Illinois state what Department that is in?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in the Indian Department, and let us not get into a discussion about that.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the gentleman's statement I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LEAKE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of that paragraph for the purpose of asking the indulgence of the House a few moments only that they may listen to some of the impressions which a new Member gathers from this body. I have been surprised at the usurpation by some of the Members on this side of the House of the prerogatives of the delegates to the Denver convention. I had not supposed that this was the place to nominate a candidate for the Democratic Presidential office, but there are some men who evidently think that this is the time and the place——

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is not discussing the Indian appropriation bill, and we are now under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I wish the gentleman from New York would withdraw his point of order for a moment.

Mr. LEAKE. Let me have three minutes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, we have spent ten days in general debate discussing every question under the sun from the Presidency down, and now I do crave the indulgence and time of this committee for part of this day in which to consider this bill. I must insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The gentleman is out of order; he is not speaking to the bill.

Mr. LEAKE. Will the gentleman reserve his objection at the present time and allow me, by unanimous consent, to proceed for three minutes?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will give me the assurance that his three minutes will not open up the whole subject so that twenty-five other gentlemen will ask the same indulgence, I am entirely willing to do it.

Mr. LEAKE. Of course I can not assure the gentleman of that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I will do this. I will withdraw my objection on the statement that it will be made and not withdrawn with reference to anybody else during the consideration of this bill under the five-minute rule.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman may proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. LEAKE. Mr. Chairman, as I stated, I have been surprised at the usurpation of the prerogatives of the delegates to the Denver convention, but there are some men who believe that this is the time and the place to nominate the candidate on the Democratic ticket, and lest my silence might be construed as an indorsement of the nomination of Mr. William J. Bryan and his policies, I rise for the purpose of making this protest. If I adopted the example of the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, I would vehemently condemn him as he did the distinguished Democrat, the Hon. Grover Cleveland, but I shall content myself with admitting that the gentleman is honest, is consistent, and is sincere, a great patriot and moral leader, entitled to the confidence and respect of the American people, but that his familiarity with the decalogue better qualifies him for the pulpit than for the Presidency. [Laughter and applause.] He has taken the big stick from the President of these United States, and, to use his own simile, he is now crucifying the policies of Democracy and American individuality and American ambition on the cross of socialism. [Applause and hisses.] The President himself, being deprived of his big stick, has resorted to the big slipper. I do not think that the American people need a spanking from the President nor a scolding from the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska. I think the condition of the health of the American community is such that we need a doctor, and I hope that one of the two great political parties will get one and that in his prescription of remedies for the cure of our many ills he will not forget, when men condemn the American railroads, that the American railroad system is one of the greatest systems in the world, and that the American business man and that American enterprise are the best on the face of this earth.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. LEAKE. When I finish I will. I hope and I believe that one of the great political parties in this country will nominate a specialist in statesmanship, and if that be done this aisle will no longer mark the difference between Republicans and Democrats, but the difference between radicals and conservatives.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman name a doctor? He seems to think that we need one.

Mr. LEAKE. I do not propose to name the doctor. I think that is the privilege of the delegates to the Chicago and the Denver conventions.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SHACKLEFORD. When the gentleman talks about the railroads and the good things they have done for the country, did he have in mind Mr. Harriman?

Mr. LEAKE. No; but I refer to the fact that American railroads have given cheaper and better service than the railroads of any other country on the face of the earth.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I would like to know in whose time the gentleman is now speaking.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to conduct experiments on Indian school or agency farms, in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture, designed to test the possibilities of soil, climate, and so forth, in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits not hitherto raised in those neighborhoods, using Indian labor in the process, $5,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman, I presume, reserves the point of order to ascertain for what purpose this item is incorporated in the bill. It is the wish of the Commissioner to have this authority so that he may have an investigation made at certain school plants as to what product can be best produced at different sections where the Indians expect to follow agricultural pursuits. There is now at one of the schools in Arizona, one of the schools which are supported under the general appropriation, on a small scale work of this character now carried on, and the Commissioner's desire is to extend that field of experimental work.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can not the Commissioner do that without tying up to the Agricultural Department? I think the experience of Members has been that once the Department of Agriculture gets any start in some new field it never gets out, but the appropriation grows. Why can not the Commissioner of Indian Affairs do this and if necessary get any advice he needs without fixing in the law a provision that this Department shall have a hold on this work?

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will simply move to strike out the language "in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture," I will not oppose the motion.

Mr. MANN. Would it not be better to have the Department of Agriculture to do the entire work? Is it the proposition of the gentleman to start a new series of experimental stations? Every State now maintains an experimental station for this work, supported in full or largely by the United States Government, so that for a few years we will have spent about $50,000 a year for each State. Now, that is one experimental station. Now, does the gentleman propose to incorporate a lot of other experimental stations? The gentleman will know that $5,000 will not conduct one experimental station, much less conduct the number that would be assumed from the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, the thought was to conduct merely experimental stations at the schools for the benefit of the Indians at that locality, for the benefit of Indians who would not be therefore benefited by an experimental station in the State now conducted under the Department of Agriculture, and for the benefit of reservation Indians as well as for non-reservation Indians.

Mr. MANN. Yes; but do not these schools now do more or less farm work?

Mr. SHERMAN. They do, some of them; many of them. Riverside has a large farm; Haskell has a large farm; many of them have farms where work is conducted now and where the Indians are instructed. One of the points of the Indian school is to give practical instruction. I will say to the gentleman, a while ago, instead of doing all the laundry work at the various schools by machinery, by which process it could be done for less money, we have provided part should be done by hand, so as to teach the girls in the arts of the laundry. It is the attempt at the Indian schools to give a practical, not a theoretical education.

Mr. MANN. Do they not in these schools now engage in the cultivation of trees, grain, vegetables, and fruit?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not, I think, in trees——

Mr. MANN. They certainly plant trees around their reservation?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; but not in an experimental way.

Mr. MANN. But the planting of anything is an experimental proposition. It is just as easy to experiment without as with a school. I do not see why these schools can not make experiments under the present appropriation instead of starting in an experimental school at each Indian reservation, because that is all this means if it means anything. For instance, in experimental work that they have in Oklahoma——

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the Commissioner's thought here was to extend that work by showing the measure of work done by the Department in Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. I would be perfectly willing to see the Department of Agriculture have this work in the agricultural bill as far as I am concerned, provided that experiment was in some particular place, in Oklahoma or Indian Territory, for instance, as to what you can do there where they have not at present, may be, the sufficient means or facilities, but this inaugurates a policy which spreads all over the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, certainly; why confine it to Oklahoma or Indian Territory? Why not take in Kansas or Nebraska or anywhere else?

Mr. MANN. Because the Indians can not raise any different trees or grains or vegetables than the white man can, and we now have in each of these States a large experimental station conducted at great expense by the Government for the purpose of doing the identical thing. It is not pretended that the Indians will be able to accomplish that which the white people can not accomplish.

Mr. SHERMAN. But it is pretended that the young Indians in schools can be instructed more readily in the arts that it is desired they should be instructed in, in the schools, than it would be to take advantage of the United States agricultural experiment station at some other point within that State.

Mr. MANN. But we now have that power in the schools to conduct these experiments, and the Agricultural Department at all times will be willing to give them the advice that is necessary.

Mr. SHERMAN. Maybe they will and maybe they will not. I do not know about that. I do not know whether that has been tried or not, or whether the request has been made that the Department have cooperation or not.

Mr. MANN. The Department of Agriculture is perfectly willing to give a private citizen good advice. It is perfectly willing to give a municipality or a State advice. I do not think they draw the line on the Indian.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think they do, either. I have not found the Department of Agriculture unwilling to give information to an individual.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The object of this provision, it appears to me, is to permit the Department of Agriculture to fasten itself upon this work. At all of these schools there are farmers whose duty it is to instruct the Indian pupils in practical farming. It seems to me that with the outfit they have at each of these places they could very easily utilize some part of the land that is used to cultivate the crops that are known to be successful in the locality, in endeavoring to ascertain whether other crops could be raised. I have no objection to giving the Department whatever money is needed to do that work in connection with the schools, but I have a very strong objection to permitting this other Department, once it gets started, to disregard the law, and getting a hold on the work of the Indian Department.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] yield for one question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is the reason for this the fact that the farmers, who are political appointees instead of civil-service appointees, are incompetent, and therefore they need another Department to really make the experiments?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think it is, and I am glad the gentleman raised that question. I was in error the other day in saying that the farmers were outside of the classified civil service. They are not outside of the classified civil service, although an educational examination or test is not required. A practical test is required, not an educational one. It really is not an examination at all. The gentleman understands——

Mr. MANN. They are outside of the civil service under the provisions of this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Civil Service Commission have what they call examinations for farmers in the Indian Service, which are not actual examinations requiring educational tests at all. They are simply a submission of a list of questions showing experience and practicability and all that sort of thing.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is new legislation. There is no authority in law for the service.

The CHAIRMAN. To what portion does the gentleman object?

Mr. FITZGERALD. From line 22, page 5, to line 4 on page 6.

Mr. SHERMAN. On that question, this is to extend the work of Indian schools. Indian schools are in operation now. I take it the gentleman does not contend that we can not in a certain measure extend the scope of a work which is now being carried on at a particular or all of the Indian schools which have been conducted by the Government for decades.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, this authorizes a new service. There is no law that authorizes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture, to undertake any work in Indian schools or at Indian agencies; and as the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] stated, the purpose of this particular paragraph was to enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to obtain the cooperation of a Department, which at present has no authority to conduct this work or to engage in it, in connection with the Indian Bureau.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Let me suggest to the gentleman that he can accomplish what he desires by striking out the words "in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture," in lines 23 and 24.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, Mr. Chairman, if it is designed to have these farms, that are conducted as part of the schools, conduct experimental tests, there is ample authority for it to-day. They can plant any crop they see fit at the schools of instruction; but they can not utilize the money or obtain the cooperation of the Agricultural Department, except so far as that may be given voluntarily under any existing law. Now, it is designed to enable the Agricultural Department to cooperate with this experimental work at Indian schools and at Indian agencies. There is no authority for that to-day. This is an authority, and therefore it is new legislation.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I take it the point of order is not well taken. I know of no inhibition in any law against the Agricultural Department doing its work anywhere in the United States. I believe it is a good plan to have the cooperation of the Department of Agriculture in this kind of work. It is very vital work to determine what is best adapted to the soil and what can be best raised in a given country. A very important work is now being carried on by the Department of Agriculture, and I would like to broaden it and invite the cooperation of these two Departments to carry on that work on the Indian land. An appropriation of $5,000 is made for that express purpose. It will be much more economical to the Government to have it done with the conjunction of the two Departments than to be carried on by one alone. For instance, suppose they want some soil experiments or soil analyses. It ought to be competent for the Indian Commissioner to have that work done in Washington by the Agricultural Department, as it could be done much more cheaply that way than in any other way. If they wanted to make any investigation in connection with plant life, it could be done by the two Departments much more economically than by the Indian Commissioner acting singly and alone. It is perfectly competent to provide in this bill where we make an appropriation for that purpose any matter of detail that may affect any agencies of the Government. It is competent in the Indian appropriation bill to say that we have this work on Indian lands go on under the supervision of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and authorize him to invoke all the other governmental agencies in his assistance. Therefore it is not new legislation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall address myself to the point of order only. It seems to me that the paragraph is subject to the point of order for other reasons than the mere fact that the work is to be done in cooperation with the Agricultural Department. The Indian Office is not now authorized by law to conduct experiments "designed to test the possibilities of soil, climate, and so forth, in the cultivation of trees, grains, vegetables, and fruits, etc." It is authorized by law to conduct schools. It is authorized by law to conduct agencies, to conduct farms, but it is not authorized by law to conduct experiments. It is true that experiments may be made in the conduct of the usual method of transacting that business. But it will not do to say that no new authority would be granted as proposed in this bill. It seems to me to be subject to the point of order. If there were a proposition on the agricultural appropriation bill itself, giving to the Agricultural Department, without regard to any specific provision of law, the right to conduct experiments, it would be subject to the point of order. If an item were proposed upon the sundry civil or other bill making an appropriation in aid of experiments or for a new experimental work in addition to the sum provided by law that should be granted to them, it would be subject to the point of order. We maintain agricultural colleges by appropriations made from the General Treasury to a certain extent, and I believe that they should have a certain amount of money for experimental work, and to an extent it is provided by law; but if we undertake to give them more money, without regard to specific law, that would be subject to a point of order, I take it.

Mr. HACKNEY. I will ask the gentleman if he does not concede that under existing law we have the power and the right to appropriate money to teach the Indians agriculture?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly.

Mr. HACKNEY. Then, if that be true, why should we not be able to advance a few steps in agriculture as well as in other things, if we should have an opportunity to make experiments?

Mr. MANN. Ah, but the gentleman concedes the point when he says if we can advance a few steps. That goes to the merits of the proposition. When you advance a few steps you make new law, and from that very fact it is subject to the point of order, because it provides for new law; it provides a change of existing conditions in the law.

Mr. HACKNEY. Would you tie down the hands of the men you put in charge of that work by old methods which were in vogue twenty-five years ago, or would you allow these instructors to teach new methods and apply new machinery?

Mr. MANN. There is nothing in this item that relates to the question of the gentleman.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is not to introduce new methods. It is to conduct experiments as to what the soil will produce.

Mr. MANN. This is a specific instruction, to require, or to permit, under the approved idea of experiment stations, that the planting shall be by plats and not in fields—that is, that the whole system of farming shall be different from what it now is; and while it is possible that under their jurisdiction and discretion they might do that, here is a change of authority. It is conferring a new authority upon the Indian Office.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that there are different conditions, that this country where the Indians are is an irrigation country, and it requires experiments to ascertain what kind of products can be used to raise crops successfully in that kind of country? I know that in my own district we are expending money for the purpose of ascertaining what benefits can be derived from irrigation, and certainly the Indians should have the same opportunity as the whites have secured. And if the point is made by the gentleman from Missouri that we have the right to teach farming, then the best methods of farming follow, and this only enlarges the scope of the appropriations.

Mr. MANN. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that I did not make the point of order. He is discussing the merits of the proposition.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I was endeavoring to meet you on the point of order by discussing the merits.

Mr. MANN. I think that is the difficulty always.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The question is not altogether free from doubt, but it seems to the Chair that while the Department of Agriculture undoubtedly has general authority to carry on experiments in the cultivation of trees, etc., the Chair understands that no such authority is now given by law to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It was suggested that we have power to carry on schools. That is undoubtedly so; but under the guise of carrying on schools it would be impossible, it seems to the Chair, at least it would be illegal, to give authority to enter into new and altogether different fields of activity. This provision would authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to expend money to test the cultivation of trees, grain, and vegetables in certain portions of the country. As the Chair understands, no such authority is now possessed by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. In view of that he feels, without discussing the merits, constrained to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD]. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On February 6, 1908:

H. R. 7694. An act to provide for the purchase of ground for and the erection of a public building for an immigration station, on a site to be selected for said station, in the city of Philadelphia, Pa.

On February 8, 1908:

H. R. 300. An act providing for second homestead entries.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all expenditures of money herein or hereafter appropriated for school purposes among the Indians shall be at all times under the supervision and direction of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and in all respects in conformity with such conditions, rules, and regulations as to the conduct and methods of instruction and expenditure of money as may be from time to time prescribed by him, subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That, except for pay of superintendents, not more than $167 shall be expended for the annual support and education of any one pupil in any school herein specifically provided for, except when, by reason of epidemic, accident, or other sufficient cause, the attendance is so reduced or cost of maintenance so high that a larger expenditure is absolutely necessary for the efficient operation of the school affected, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, may allow a larger per capita expenditure, such expenditure to continue only so long as the said necessity therefor shall exist: Provided further, That the total amount appropriated for the support of such school shall not be exceeded: Provided further, That the number of pupils in any school entitled to the per capita allowance hereby provided for shall be determined by taking the average enrollment for the entire fiscal year and not any fractional part thereof.

Mr. OLMSTED. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN. I reserve a point of order on this paragraph.

Mr. OLMSTED. I rise merely to obtain from the honored chairman of the committee in charge of the bill——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair on consideration deems that he can not recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania, because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has reserved a point of order, and while a point of order is reserved there can be no amendments to the clause.

Mr. OLMSTED. Without offering any amendment, Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to ask for a little information from the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, which information may have a tendency to induce the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to submit a question. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. OLMSTED. I merely want to ask the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs to what schools this limitation of $167 per capita extends, as he understands it?

Mr. SHERMAN. It extends to all specifically appropriated for schools.

Mr. OLMSTED. Does that mean those appropriated for by name in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. OLMSTED. And not the reservation schools.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose it extends to all schools.

Mr. OLMSTED. Then I wish to ask further whether in his opinion there should not be an amendment in the fourth line on page 7, so that the word "enrollment" should read "attendance?" I find that among the ninety-one reservation schools the attendance is about one-third less than the enrollment; so if we give $167 for the average enrollment we are giving $222 per capita for all pupils who attend.

Mr. SHERMAN. I see the gentleman's point; if the average is taken on the enrollment rather than on the attendance it might make an average of more than $167.

Mr. OLMSTED. Yes; the average attendance of 163 day schools——

Mr. SHERMAN. This does not apply to the day schools.

Mr. OLMSTED. That is what I wanted to find out. The average enrollment of the reservation boarding school was 1,119 and the average attendance was 952. If we took the per capita of the enrollment it would give them something over $200 per capita for pupils actually attending. The same would also apply to the nonreservation schools.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not object to changing the word "enrollment" to "attendance."

Mr. OLMSTED. If the point of order is not pressed, or after it is disposed of, I may offer the amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that the average cost is about $140, and this limitation is fixed to cover the extraordinary emergency.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; there is another provision covering the extraordinary emergency. The average cost in all the schools, when you take those appropriated for and those sustained by general appropriations, is considerably less than $140.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection is that this language has always been used.

Mr. SHERMAN. It has in relation to specific appropriations for schools, but the point the gentleman from Pennsylvania makes is that he discovers a considerably discrepancy between enrollment and attendance, and therefore he asks that the word "enrollment" be changed to "attendance;" so that the $167 per capita shall apply to the average attendance.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think you will find that the total enrollment would be better than the average attendance.

Mr. LEAKE. I notice in a part of this paragraph it is provided that the expenditures of all money appropriated among the Indians shall be distributed according to the rule of the Indian Commissioner. Now, there are some appropriations for the acquisitions of buildings and sites; is it the intention that this act shall allow the Indian Commissioner to use such moneys in accordance with the rules that he makes and prescribes?

Mr. SHERMAN. That is already done. The Indian Office has its architectural bureau for the construction of buildings.

Mr. LEAKE. And the acquisition of land is the same?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the words "or hereafter," page 6, line 5.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman insists, the point of order is well taken. This is the idea we had in inserting those words. This provision has been carried in every bill for more than a decade, ever since I can remember, and I presume it will be continued, and therefore, it seemed to us wise to make this permanent rather than to lumber up the bill with this provision every year.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman if that provision was left in so as to make a permanent law, would not the paragraph appear in the bill next year?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly not.

Mr. OLMSTED. It would not do any harm if it did.

Mr. SHERMAN. It would not appear in the next bill. There are several paragraphs that were changed in that way last year and that are not in this bill.

Mr. MANN. I think there are some that were made permanent last year that are in this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is an error if there are any. I know in the Book of Estimates there were some put in that way, but there should not be, and in framing the bill we struck them out.

Mr. MANN. I fully agree with the gentleman from New York about shortening up the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is the only theory of it; this provision has been in the bill year after year, and nobody seemed to question it; and if it is put in in this way, another year we can leave out the provision and with that and in other ways we have already shortened up the bill 30 per cent within the last four or five years.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the gentleman's explanation I will withdraw the point or order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out, in line 4, page 7, the word "average" and inserting the word "total," so that it will read "taking the total enrollment for the entire fiscal year."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 7, strike out the word "average" and insert the word "total," so that it will read "taking the total enrollment for the entire fiscal year."

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the gentleman's theory about that? I should like to hear from him.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, my theory is that instead of taking the average enrollment for this $167, the ultimate that the figures would amount to, you should have the total enrollment. As I understand the provision of the bill it is that the education per capita on any one scholar should not exceed $167. Then if you have the total enrollment, you have it exactly. In other words, we should take the total enrollment for the cost per capita.

Mr. SHERMAN. The total enrollment may be 300 and the average enrollment may be 210.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But if you are going to limit it to $167 to each pupil who is taught during the year, you must have it limited to the total enrollment and not to the average. If you limit it to the average enrollment and one-third of the ordinary number is in attendance at any one time, you exceed that $167 obviously.

Mr. SHERMAN. If you take the average for the year, I think it is proper. Heretofore this has been gotten out by taking the average enrollment for a quarter, and it was found that some quarters were much heavier than others of course in enrollment. If you take the average for the year, rather than for any particular quarter, you get at the average enrollment for the year, which is what you want to base your expenditure on and not the total. You want to base it upon the average attendance.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It does not seem so to me. However, I only make the amendment in the form of a suggestion to the chairman, and I withdraw it if he does not agree with me.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to negotiate with the various States in which they are situated for the disposal of any of the nonreservation Indian schools which in his judgment are no longer of value to the Indian Service, and to report the result of his negotiations to the next session of the Congress.

Mr. DARRAGH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the paragraph commencing in line 6, page 7, and ending on line 12, inclusive. I make the point that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DARRAGH. Mr. Chairman, I scarcely think it necessary to go further than to refer the Chair to Rule XXI, paragraph 2, which reads as follows:

Nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

I would call the Chair's attention further to the fact stated in the report of the committee on page 6, which states that this legislation is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I will contend that this is not a legislative provision, but I shall ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order for a minute.

Mr. DARRAGH. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we discussed this question of nonreservation schools pretty thoroughly the other day, and I do not propose to reopen that discussion now. Here is a provision which simply authorizes the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary, to negotiate with the several States wherein Indian schools are now located, which the Commissioner or the Secretary deems are not necessary for the Service, for the disposal of those schools to the States. There is nothing compulsory about it so far as the State is concerned. If a school located at a given point is not doing good work, is not of benefit to the Service, it ought not to be continued. If the school is bettering the service, if they are furnishing education which is desired, if those in charge of the administration of Indian affairs believe that the school ought to be maintained, why, then, no negotiation will be attempted. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that to invoke the rule to strike from the bill this provision is a confession of weakness on the part of the case of the gentleman who raises the point.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is there anything in the existing law to compel the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to maintain these nonreservation schools?

Mr. SHERMAN. Why, certainly; we specifically appropriate for their maintenance.

Mr. STAFFORD. But there is nothing to compel the Commissioner to maintain a nonreservation school in case there are no Indians to attend that school. It is left to the discretion of the Commissioner, is it not?

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course, if there are no pupils, the Commissioner must close the school.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then we will be confronted with the proposition that the Commissioner could not negotiate for their disposal, when there was no further need for them, unless authority is conferred as by this section.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; but there is now no authority for him to negotiate for the disposal, and this provision vests him with authority to dispose of a school when its usefulness to the Service is no longer apparent.

Mr. OLMSTED. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he understands or intends that the term "negotiate," which is susceptible of a double meaning, will give the Commissioner the absolute right to dispose of a school?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly not; the provision expressly states that the Commissioner shall negotiate and report to Congress. It gives the Commissioner no authority whatever except to negotiate, and if he can reach any tentative agreement he shall report to Congress for the future action of that body.

Mr. OLMSTED. The term "negotiate" might be construed to mean to consummate a complete transaction—the sale of the property. I presume the gentleman, to have that point plainly settled, would have no objection to an amendment so phrased as not possibly to be open to that meaning.

Mr. SHERMAN. We say he must report the result of his negotiations to the next Congress.

Mr. OLMSTED. He might report the terms on which he had sold the property.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is not intended at all, and as far as I am concerned, I am entirely willing to have any wording so as to make that absolutely clear, so that no human being can raise any question.

Mr. OLMSTED. My understanding was that of the gentleman, but I asked whether he would be willing to accept an amendment to make it plainer on that point if anyone might deem it necessary.

Mr. DARRAGH. In regard to the merits of the proposition I will say that the term "negotiation" is ambiguous. It means various things. It means a transfer for a valuable consideration, in accordance with Webster's Dictionary upon the desk, to transfer or to sell for a valuable consideration. Now, one could negotiate a sale and report that sale, which was an absolute sale and transfer.

Mr. STAFFORD. Negotiate does not include the idea of consummation. It intends naturally that something must remain before it is completed.

Mr. DARRAGH. Yes; you negotiate a note and you sell that note, do you not?

Mr. STAFFORD. You negotiate a sale, but that does not mean you consummate a sale.

Mr. DARRAGH. The definition given by the dictionary, which I take is full as any authority we have——

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from Michigan yield for a moment? So far as I am concerned, I am entirely willing to have any wording inserted here so as to make it absolutely clear that it is not intended to give the Commissioner authority to consummate a sale, but simply to make a tentative arrangement and report that arrangement to Congress for its approval or disapproval.

Mr. DARRAGH. My object in making the point of order was to bring out that fact, and I notice in the report of the committee that the understanding was had by the committee at the time the bill was reported—giving to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs authority to consult with officials of the various States in which nonreservation schools are located for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the said States will take over these institutions from the Government free of charge and thereafter conduct them with the proviso that the Indians shall be educated on the same basis as white children.

Now, if authority to negotiate the sale is not given to the Commissioner, I would very cheerfully withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will be good enough to let me see the provision he is reading from?

Mr. DARRAGH. I have just read from your report.

Mr. HAMMOND. Will the gentleman yield to me for the purpose of offering an amendment to this section? I move to amend this section by——

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not yield to the gentleman to offer an amendment, because we have a point of order pending. I supposed he simply wanted to ask a question.

Mr. OLMSTED. I suggest the gentleman might read his amendment for information.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to suggest to the chairman of the committee that if we make the paragraph read like this there will not be any trouble:

The Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain whether and upon what terms it may be possible to dispose of any nonreservation Indian schools which, in his judgment, are no longer of value to the Indian Service, and to report the result of his investigation to the next session of Congress.

I guess that might obviate the objection of these Members of Congress.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] be good enough to let me have that? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DARRAGH] is willing to withdraw his point of order on the understanding that that shall be offered as an amendment to this section, or rather as a substitute for the provision.

Mr. DARRAGH. With the understanding that that is to be adopted as read, as a substitute, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me offer the amendment first. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, then, to strike out, on lines 7, 8, and 9, "to negotiate with the various States in which they are situated for the disposal" and insert in lieu thereof "to ascertain whether and upon what terms it may be possible to dispose;" and then, on line 11, to strike out "negotiations" and insert "investigations."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 7, line 7, strike out the words "to negotiate with the various States in which they are situated for the disposal" and insert in lieu thereof the words "to ascertain whether and upon what terms it may be possible to dispose;" and in line 11 strike out "negotiations" and insert in lieu thereof "investigations."

Mr. YOUNG. If the gentleman from New York will permit, as I understand the present bill provides for the closing of the Mount Pleasant school in Michigan and several others. I wish to ask him if he does not think before such drastic action as that is taken that some provision similar to the one now offered ought to be placed in the bill, so that the matter could have some consideration and examination before those schools are stricken out?

Mr. SHERMAN. I can not answer that in a word. The estimate from the Department reached the committee asking for the appropriations for the continuance of the schools supported as they were last year. After the receipt of these estimates, after the preparation of the bill for presentation to the committee, the Commissioner's report was made to Congress. Then for the first time after the bill had first been printed the committee saw the report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, submitted to Congress at its assembling, recommending the discontinuance of nonreservation schools. We had framed a bill, as we always do, based upon the estimates submitted from the Department, so far as appropriations are concerned. Then, on the hearing before the committee, when the Commissioner was present, this matter was discussed, and as we passed from item to item in the bill the Commissioner stated that certain of these schools should be done away with now, and one of them was Mount Pleasant. The Commissioner stated that there were no reservation Indians in Michigan, that these were Indians who had received their allotments and were well advanced in civilization, and were Indians, in the main, of partial blood, and, if I recollect his words, they were to the effect that any visitor looking in upon this school would have difficulty in differentiating it from an ordinary white children's school.

Mr. YOUNG. I should differ very largely from the Commissioner on that statement.

Mr. SHERMAN. I never have seen the school. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. YOUNG. Very many of those Indians come from my own district; and while it is true that they have received their lands in allotment, it is not true that they have advanced to anything like the white man's standard of civilization, and I do not believe that they could be properly educated in the ordinary schools of the State.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

Telegraphing, telephoning, and purchase of Indian supplies: To pay the expense of purchasing goods and supplies for the Indian Service, including inspection, pay of necessary employees, and all other expenses connected therewith; advertising, at rates not exceeding regular commercial rates; telegraphing and telephoning; and transporting Indian goods and supplies, including expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, $315,000: Provided, That hereafter warehouses for the receipt, storage, and shipment of goods for the Indian Service shall be maintained at the following places: New York, Chicago, Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco: Provided further, That hereafter payment for transportation of Indian goods and supplies shall include all Indian transportation lawfully due such land-grant railroads as have not received aid in Government bonds (to be adjusted in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court in cases decided under such land-grant acts), but in no case shall more than 50 per cent of full amount of service be paid to said land-grant roads: Provided, That such compensation shall be computed upon the basis of the tariff or lower special rates for like transportation performed for the public at large, and shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service: Provided further, That hereafter in expending money appropriated for this purpose a railroad company which has not received aid in bonds of the United States, and which obtained a grant of public lands to aid in the construction of its railroad on condition that such railroad should be a post route and military road, subject to the use of the United States for postal, military, naval, and other Government services, and also subject to such regulations as Congress may impose, restricting the charge for such Government transportation, having claims against the United States for transportation of Indian goods and supplies over such aided railroads, shall be paid out of the moneys appropriated for such purpose only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such Indian goods and supplies as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem just and reasonable under the provisions set forth herein, such rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation for such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties to any such company for like and similar transportation; and the amount so fixed to be paid shall be accepted as in full for all demands for such service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph. This is a new provision. I would like to have the gentleman explain it and tell us what it means.

Mr. SHERMAN. It means to give the Interior Department the advantage which the War Department now enjoys, of having a lower rate for the transportation of its goods on the land-grant and bond-aided railroads of the country. That is, in a word, what is intended by these various provisos.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. To reduce expenses.

Mr. SHERMAN. In other words, to reduce expenditures.

Mr. MANN. To reduce expenses?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; to reduce the cost of transportation.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The gentleman will see that it is only 50 per cent of the ordinary charge.

Mr. MANN. It is not even 50 per cent. I have read this over half a dozen times and I have not been able to ascertain just exactly what it does mean, and so I do not know whether any railroad official would ever determine that fact. Now, in reference to the statement that the payment "shall be out of the moneys appropriated for such purposes only on the basis of such rate for the transportation of such Indian goods and supplies as the Secretary of the Interior shall deem just and reasonable under the provisions set forth herein, said rate not to exceed 50 per cent of the compensation of such Government transportation as shall at that time be charged to and paid by private parties," which means to say that the Government, having passed a rate bill providing that everybody shall enjoy equal privileges, we were not willing to take the privilege of transporting Government freight and paying for it the regular rate, but we confer absolutely upon the Secretary of the Interior the power to say it shall be only 10 per cent of the rate. Of course that means that somebody else has to make it up on that line of road, and the question is whether the Government in transporting freight to the West over land-grant roads shall transport the freight at no expense to the General Government and make the citizens of the towns along the line of the road support the road, or whether it shall reduce the rates through the rate commission so that they shall be the same to all parties.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Permit me to remind you that there was an agreement made between the railroads and the Government at the time they received these benefits.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And that is only carrying out that agreement.

Mr. SHERMAN. There was an agreement, as the gentleman from Texas has said, giving to the General Government the power to do what we are doing now in these premises.

Mr. MANN. There was an agreement of that sort, of course, or this provision would amount to nothing. But there was no Interstate Commerce Commission to regulate freight rates upon railroads at that time, and they could charge private customers what they pleased. Now, we have a Commission which is supposed to fix the rates of compensation to the railroad, and yet you propose to say that the Government can not pay more than half of that rate and may pay only 10 per cent.

Mr. SHERMAN. And may pay nothing.

Mr. MANN. Practically.

Mr. SHERMAN. And does pay nothing on some lines in this country. On that railroad running north from San Francisco to Portland, Oreg.—that portion of the Northern Pacific—all that is transported by the War Department is transported without charge under the agreement made with the railroad, in which the Government aid was in a bond issue.

Mr. MANN. It may be perfectly proper that they ought not in that case, but that is not this case.

Mr. SHERMAN. The proposition here is to extend this great benefit to the Indians, and provide that they shall have the full benefit of the act the same as the War Department.

Mr. MANN. Why, these land-grant acts are old; the acts under which they are incorporated are old. We have been shipping Indians freight over the railroads for many years, and this is the first time this provision has appeared in an appropriation bill or anywhere else. What is this proposition?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a proposition to extend to the Indian Service precisely the same regulations and the same rates that are in operation as far as the War Department is concerned, and gives them the advantage of the contract that was made with the various roads. They are divided into different classes—those that received aid in the way of bonds and those that received aid in the way of land grants. It was thought at the time to be of sufficient consequence to the promoters of the enterprise to make this agreement with the Government. It was believed then, and it is believed to-day, and I believe the gentleman from Illinois believes, that the benefits these roads received from the Government were so great that this perpetual advantage to the United States would not be too great compensation to pay.

Mr. MANN. Why has it not been taken advantage of before? Why does it require an act of Congress for it now?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been taken advantage of, and we are incorporating the special authority of the law to take advantage of it in all roads with which the United States Government has made an agreement.

Mr. MANN. Now, I am not familiar with the facts of this particular case, but I am familiar enough with the proposition to know this, that after we passed the last rate legislation the Government then was like other people and had to pay the rate that other people had to pay; that the railroads could not bid to change their schedule of rates as they had been doing for the Government. In other words, that since the act of 1887, creating the Interstate Commerce Commission, it has been the policy of the Government to require the railroads to publish their freight rates, and during all that time the Government was an exception and never did pay the freight rates in accordance with the schedule. Now, the Government can not get the railroads to depart from their schedule. The Government advertised for bids expecting that they would get a rate lower than the regular advertised rates, but of course the railroads could not vary from their regular rates. Now, just how far that affects this situation I do not know, but I can see no reason why under ordinary circumstances the Government should require the railroad company, in order to deal justly with the patrons of these lines and treat everybody alike—should insist upon having preferential rates for itself at the expense of the other patrons of the road.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does not the gentleman recall that in the Hepburn bill, with the framing of which he had much to do, he expressly provided that the Government had the right to do this very thing? I have before me the exact language of section 22:

That nothing in this act shall prevent the carriage, storage, or handling of property thereon at reduced rates for the United States.

And so forth. So that in that act of 1906 we expressly gave authority for this sort of thing, and the contracts made with these roads, which were of wonderful and enormous value to them, without which these roads never could have been originally projected or constructed, expressly gave the United States this preference. I see no reason under the law or in justice why we should not avail ourselves of the rights which we derived for a full and valuable consideration given to these corporations.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. I propose to insist on my point of order against a portion of it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I first insist on the point of order against the word "hereafter" in line 1, page 8, and against the same word, line 12 on the same page, so that if this experiment be made, it shall at least be only for the year.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course——

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I make the point of order against the word "hereafter" in line 22, page 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois has not yet finished his statement.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order on the word "hereafter" in line 1 and line 12.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course I concede that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I make the point of order against the word "hereafter" in line 22, page 7.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not think the last point of order lies, in the first place, and in the second place I do not think the gentleman from New York wants to insist on it, even if it does. This is for the continuance of work now in progress. These warehouses are there now and have been for years.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman mean to say we can not continue that?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; but I mean to say that the word "hereafter" changes the law, and makes permanent what is now maintained only in the appropriation acts. I make the point of order on that word, not against the provision continuing the warehouses.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is that that was in the law of last year.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am sorry to say it was not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. My recollection, refreshed by the act of the present year, is that it was not in the law of last year.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the gentleman will reserve his point of order for a moment, let me ask what is his theory in denying the continuance of these warehouses which are already in existence? They are all found useful and necessary.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York remembers, as I do, that at least one of these warehouses was not continued because it was necessary for the service. It was continued because the man who happened to be at the head of the Department of the Interior came from St. Louis, and insisted on keeping that warehouse where it was unnecessary.

Mr. MANN. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. And I shall not consent to a permanent provision of law being made to maintain a warehouse that, as far as I recall, is utterly unnecessary, and which was retained simply for the convenience of a high official of the Government. The reports show that the amount of business done there did not justify its being there. It can be carried in this way, of course, from year to year; but it shall not, if I can prevent it, be permanently enforced on the service, particularly as the man for whose benefit it was maintained is no longer connected with the Government. I think it would be a wise thing to send that warehouse after him.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on his point of order?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman in charge of the bill desire to be heard on the point of order any further?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pure vaccine matter and vaccination of Indians, $5,000,

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, after line 12, page 9, I move to insert the following, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For erecting a monument over the graves of Cynthia Ann Parker and her daughter, Prairie Flower (who were the mother and sister of Quannah Parker, now the chief of the Comanche tribe of Indians in Oklahoma), $1,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will have to raise a point of order against that. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that Quanah Parker, chief of the Comanche tribe of Indians, is in the city, and yesterday requested me to ask Congress to make this appropriation of $1,000, to erect a monument over the graves of his mother, Cynthia Ann Parker, and his sister, Prairie Flower, who were buried side by side in the Fosterville graveyard, near Poyner Station, in Henderson County, Tex.

Quanah has been a friend of the people of the Southwest, and in my own State so great is the respect for this chieftain that there is a county seat named for him.

Quanah Parker's father's name was Peta Nocona, who was a Comanche chieftain, and there is a town named Nocona, for this Indian, in Montague County, Tex.

There is no doubt but that this Chief Quanah Parker has saved the lives and property of a great many persons in the Southwest, and he is causing his tribe to leave the "war path" as they call it, and has been an invaluable aid in getting them to take and follow the "white man's road," as he calls it.

He now says that he recently lost a son, over whose grave he has erected a monument, but that he has no money to erect a monument over the grave of his mother, Cynthia Ann Parker, and his sister, Prairie Flower.

Quanah Parker has been chief of the Comanche tribe of Indians for many years; he is the friend of the white man, and has been for many years, and he asks this pittance, as a gratuity from the Government, to enable him to put over his mother's and sister's graves a suitable monument.

When he told me that he had not the money to do it himself he manifested great feeling, and said that he thought that a generous Government, for whom he has done so much, should let him have this money to mark the last resting place of his mother and sister.

His mother was captured by the Comanche Indians at Parkers Fort on May 19, 1836, a few days after the battle of San Jacinto was fought.

Parkers Fort was situated on the headwaters of the Navisota Creek, 60 miles from the nearest white settlement and 2 miles from the present town of Groesbeck, Limestone County, Tex. The fort was occupied by six men and several women and children. The Indians shrewdly presented a white flag and sent some of their number to the fort to say that they were friendly.

One of the inmates, Benjamin Parker (who was the father of Cynthia Ann Parker and grandfather of Chief Quanah Parker), let them enter the fort, believing that they were friendly Indians and wanted to make a treaty with the whites, but when he was within their power they treacherously attacked and killed him and immediately captured the fort.

"It was a stockade fort, occupied by several families who had just returned from the flight before the Mexican army, commanded by Gen. Santa Anna. After effecting an entrance into Parkers Fort by pretending to be friendly, the Indians massacred all the men and some of the women and children, carrying away captive Mrs. Plummer and her son, 2 years old; Mrs. Kellogg; Cynthia Ann Parker, then 9 years old, and her brother, aged 6. After leaving the fort the Comanches and Kiowas traveled together until midnight. They then camped, brought their prisoners together, tied their hands behind them so tightly as to cut the flesh, tied their feet together, and threw them on their faces; then gathered around with the bloody scalps they had taken at the fort and commenced their war dance. They danced, screamed, yelled, and stamped upon the prisoners, beating them with bows until the blood flowed from their bruises, and the rest of the night the women had to listen to the cries and groans of the little children. When the tribes parted each of the bands took a captive."

Cynthia Ann Parker was claimed by the Comanche tribe and became their permanent captive. Nothing was heard from her for many years, but in the meantime her relatives and friends and the Texas authorities did everything in their power to ascertain her fate and secure her release, if she was living.

In the autumn of 1860 the Comanches, in force under their chief, Peta Nocona, the father of Quanah Parker and the Indian husband of Cynthia Ann, raided through Parker and adjoining counties and inflicted great distress upon the white settlements.

But in December he was followed and surprised in his own camp on Pease River by a force of 40 Texas Rangers and 20 dragoons of the Regular Army, in all 60 soldiers, under Captain Ross, of the rangers. His camp was captured and many slain. The chief fled at full speed, with another Indian behind him on the same horse, and his wife, with an infant in her arms, on a fleet pony beside him. The captain of the rangers, with one attendant, pursued. They soon overtook the chief's wife, who held up her child and stopped. Leaving her with his attendant, the captain pursued the two Indians on one horse, and, coming up with them, fired with his heavy revolving pistol, killing the hindmost. The same ball would have also killed the chief, but his shield hanging on his back prevented. The hindmost, in falling, dragged the chief from his horse, but he lit upon his feet and plied his pursuer with arrows, wounding his horse. The wound set the animal to rearing and plunging so violently that the ranger could not aim his weapon. Victory in the single combat seemed on the point of declaring for the savage. His well-directed arrows were sent rapidly; but a random shot from the ranger broke his right arm and disabled him, both hands being indispensable to the use of the bow. The captain's horse becoming quiet, he shot the chief twice through the body, who then walked deliberately to a tree near by and, leaning against it, began to sing a wild, weird song—the death song of his tribe—a custom in many tribes in the presence of certain death.

The captain's men coming up with an interpreter, the chief was summoned to surrender, but he answered by a savage thrust at the captain with his lance held in his left hand. It was plain that he would surrender only to death. The captain directed one of his attendants to "finish him," and the death song ended. The Indian who had been riding behind the chief proved to be a young female, but her sex was not distinguished in the flight, because she was covered with a buffalo robe with only the head visible. The woman taken with the child, the fallen chief's wife, was seen to be a white woman, and she had blue eyes. She wept incessantly and the captain directed the interpreter to tell her that they recognized her as one of their own nation and would not hurt her. She replied that she was not weeping for herself, but for her two boys, who were in the battle, and, she feared, were slain. She was sent to the white settlements, where she was speedily identified as Cynthia Ann Parker, who was captured when 9 years old by the Comanches at Parkers Fort massacre in 1836. She was not reconciled to civilization, and had to be watched to prevent her escape. Her little child, named Prairie Flower, died, and in less than two years she died also and was laid beside her little barbarian. Of her sons, one died on the plains, but the other lived and became the famous chief, Quanah Parker, who now asks, by my amendment to this bill, for $1,000 to erect a monument over his mother's grave.

Captain Ross, the gallant ranger, afterwards became a brigadier-general in the Confederate army, and subsequently governor of the State of Texas, and died a few years ago, universally loved and respected by all Texans. While serving as governor he gave me the above particulars of the capture of Cynthia Ann Parker. This battle ground was but about 20 miles above the town of Vernon, on Pease River, at the mouth of Mule Creek and in Foard County, Tex.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the public service rendered by this Indian chief to the white people on the Texas frontier in causing his tribe to quit the war path and live on their reservation, and the further fact of the suffering of his mother for so many years as a white captive among savages, we should erect a monument to mark the spot of her last resting place. I therefore hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] will not insist further upon his point of order against my amendment making this small sum a part of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on the point of order. The matter has not been considered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of one superintendent of Indian schools, including telegraphing and incidental expenses of inspection and investigation, $1,500: Provided, That he shall be allowed $3 per day for traveling expenses when actually on duty in the field, exclusive of cost of transportation and sleeping-car fare in lieu of all other expenses now allowed by law: And provided further, That he shall perform such other duties as may be imposed upon him by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the last paragraph. I would like to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what limitation there is upon what the superintendent of schools may be directed to do under such a proviso.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no limitation on it. It is a provision that is not often availed of, but I can conceive of a case where a complaint might come in from a section of the country that did not have to do particularly with schools, and the superintendent might be there, and the Commissioner by telegraphing to the superintendent could have that matter promptly and economically investigated and reported on.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me a pretty dangerous power to say that a man shall have such duties to perform as some other officer shall direct, regardless of the scope of his work.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is an authority granted to cover special situations as they arise.

Mr. MANN. It is no more likely to arise in his case than thousands of others.

Mr. SHERMAN. I suppose not. It is a proposition that involves no additional expense and may be a considerable saving to the Government, besides being a provision which would make it possible to get information speedily where otherwise it would not.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman says it would cover no additional expense. He means no additional expense in the way of salary.

Mr. SHERMAN. Nor in the way of expenses.

Mr. MANN. Oh, he might be required to do something for which we had refused to make any appropriation. It is a very unusual provision of law, and unless there is some special reason for it, I do not think it ought to go in. I do not think we ought to fix the duties of an officer by saying that he shall perform such duties as somebody else may impose upon him.

Mr. SHERMAN. The special reason is to make it possible to conduct the affairs of the department with expedition and economy, and it is believed at times it would be desirable under this provision, although I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, that so far as I know, this provision has not been availed of in a good many months at least.

Mr. MANN. I think it ought to go out.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the last proviso, page 10, lines 23, 24, and 25.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, that is what we call "current law." It is the provision precisely that was in last year's bill, and has been in every act for a dozen years or more. Under these circumstances I think the point of order does not lie. It has been held over and over again that so-called "current law" is law so far as this rule is concerned.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, this is law so far as the current appropriation law is concerned until the 30th of June, but when the midnight comes between the 30th of June and the 1st of July this is no longer law, and this bill then takes effect and does not take effect until then.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think that the chairman will find that it has been repeatedly held by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House that what is commonly called "current law" is effective so far as the rule is concerned; that a matter that is carried in an appropriation bill this year may be carried in the bill for the next year without violating the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has such respect for the parliamentary learning of the gentleman from New York that if the views he has just advanced were uttered by him from the chair, he would certainly hesitate to overrule it, but the Chair feels that as the gentleman is in the position of advocating it, he can not sustain him, and must sustain the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I hope the Chair will permit me to express my appreciation of the encomiums passed upon the gentleman from New York by the present occupant of the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For services of officers at $25 per month each, and privates at $20 per month each, of Indian police, to be employed in maintaining order and prohibiting illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations and within the Territory of Alaska, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, for the purchase of equipments, and for the purchase of rations for policemen at nonration agencies, $200,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that clause.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of offering an amendment, and I think the Chair recognized me before the Chair recognized the gentleman to offer his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin rose to a point of order and is therefore entitled to preference.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to know what the gentleman's point of order is.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is new legislation.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, the gentleman is in error. It is not new legislation, in the first place, and in the second place it is a provision for a conduct of the Service during the fiscal year for which all these appropriations are made.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order. I reserve the point of order for a moment. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: This seems to provide for maintaining order and prohibiting the illegal traffic in liquor on the several Indian reservations, and within the Territory of Alaska. This would seem to go to the limit of permitting the Secretary of the Interior to use the entire fund in maintaining order in Alaska. Of course, that is not the purpose of the proposition, as I take it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. MANN. That is the way the language reads. Possibly to that extent it would be subject to a point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that it is the old law, word for word.

Mr. MANN. Well, there have been so many things inserted into this Indian appropriation bill by the body at the other end of the Capitol that many of them are subject to points of order that have been in the law. As I understand, this money is intended to prohibit the illegal traffic in liquor.

Mr. SHERMAN. This money is expended in maintaining the police force on all the reservations in the United States. These police have charge of all minor offenses.

Mr. MANN. How far is it used in Alaska?

Mr. SHERMAN. Very little of it is used in Alaska, a trifling amount. The police have charge of all minor offenses, make arrests, bring the offenders before police judges, which are provided for on all the reservations, and have the cases disposed of. Their duties are to maintain order. That is precisely what they are for. They are used at times in attempting to keep children in the day schools. They are efficient and effective in their service. The better class of Indians, as a rule, are Indian police. We have very few indifferent officials in this service.

Mr. MANN. I notice the salaries are very greatly increased.

Mr. SHERMAN. The salaries were increased a year ago. This continues that increase. The old salaries were $15 per month for the chief, as they call him, and $10 for privates or patrolmen.

The Commissioner found that it was impossible to keep the better class of Indians in the service at this price, and he found the officers who were capable, conscientious, sober, efficient, were resigning all over, and in order to keep the better class of Indians in this service he must increase the pay.

Mr. MANN. Do these Indians at $20 a month give their entire time to this work?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; that is their business. The Government furnishes them a uniform, and in some places furnishes them some small ration.

Mr. MANN. I do not insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws the point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS].

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 14, page 11, add:
"The Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make and preserve a duplicate of the special-tax receipts issued by him to retail liquor dealers and retail dealers in malt liquors, and upon application of the United States district attorney he shall furnish a certified copy thereof, as of a public record, and in all prosecutions for the unlawful sale of intoxicating liquors on the several Indian reservations and within the Territory of Alaska it shall be competent for the Government to prove that the accused has paid such special tax, and such payment when proven shall be prima facie evidence of such unlawful sale."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order against that provision.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the chairman of the committee to reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman will see so clearly it is against the rule it is hardly necessary, but still I will reserve the point of order for a moment.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to extend the provisions of the law which we passed two years ago to prosecutions for the violation of the statute against the sale of intoxicating liquors on the Indian reservations. Now, I take it, Mr. Chairman, we are earnest and honest in the purpose we have in the appropriations we make here to suppress the illegal traffic in liquors on the Indian reservations, and yet we have this anomalous situation: We appropriate $25,000 in one place and so much of this $200,000 as is necessary in another place to ferret out violations of this law upon Indian reservations, while the Internal-Revenue Commissioner is issuing to parties who are engaged as retail liquor dealers in these reservations special-tax receipts, generally known as internal-revenue licenses, and when the Government proceeds to prosecute a man on one of these reservations for the violation of the provisions of this law and the district attorney endeavors to get that proof from the revenue collector—proof which would be competent and is competent in all the courts of the States and in the Federal courts—against a man who is charged with having engaged in the retail-liquor business in those reservations, the Internal-Revenue Commissioner declines to give the information and declines to give any collector of internal revenue permission to give the information that would bring these people to justice. Two years ago, after very considerable controversy over the subject, Congress passed a law requiring the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to furnish this testimony for prosecutions before State courts where a man was charged with the illegal sale of liquor, and that is now the law; but it is not the law that a United States district attorney can call for and require him to give this information in prosecutions in the Federal courts, and so we have the anomalous situation that while the Federal Government is appropriating thousands and tens of thousands of dollars every year to enforce the provisions of this bill and the provisions of the Revised Statutes against the unlawful sale of liquor on the Indian reservations another officer of this Government having the proof in his possession that would surely bring the guilty to justice declines absolutely to produce it.

The amendment, of course, is a change of existing law and is subject to the point of order; but I hope, in the interest of orderly procedure; I hope, in the interest of good government, in the interest of the enforcement of the law, and to the end that this money that we appropriate may not be wasted, that the chairman of the committee will not insist upon the point of order.

Before the Indian Territory was admitted, with Oklahoma, to statehood, the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue showed the number of these licenses issued to parties there. It is not possible now to determine how many there are who now pay this tax there because it is all set down as Oklahoma. But two years ago, I remember, his report showed that more than 150 parties had paid the special tax as retail liquor dealers and retail dealers in malt liquors in the Indian Territory, and yet he declined to divulge their names to the officers of the law. This, I think, is not only anomalous—it is ridiculous; it is scandalous.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter that has been considered by our committee, and I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

MATRONS.

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to employ suitable persons as matrons to teach Indian girls in housekeeping and other household duties, at a rate not to exceed $60 per month, and for furnishing necessary equipments, and renting quarters where necessary, $30,000: Provided, That the amount paid said matrons shall not come within the limit for employees fixed by the act of June 7, 1897.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph and would like to ask the chairman of the committee what this proviso means?

Mr. SHERMAN. That act provides that not more than $10,000 shall be expended for all the purposes at any agency other than a consolidated agency, and at a consolidated agency not more than $15,000 shall be expended, and this proviso simply means that in reaching that total the amount paid to matrons shall not be included. Is that clear?

Mr. MANN. The statement is perfectly clear.

Mr. SHERMAN. The provision in reference to the limitation was one that was made before there were—I was going to say before there were any matrons provided for, but perhaps I may be in error about that—but before there was any considerable sum appropriated for this particular service.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, on the gentleman's statement I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

FARMERS AND STOCKMEN.

To enable the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to employ practical farmers and practical stockmen, subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, in addition to the agency farmers now employed, at wages not exceeding $75 each per month, to superintend and direct farming and stock raising among such Indians as are making effort for self-support, $125,000: Provided, That the amounts paid such farmers and stockmen shall not come within the limit for employees fixed by the act of June 7, 1897: Provided further, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may employ additional farmers at any Indian school at not exceeding $60 per month, subject only to such examination as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, said farmers to be in addition to the school farmers now employed.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order upon the paragraph. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] stated a while ago that these farmers were in the classified service, and I suppose he has his information from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. But in this paragraph is the provision that their appointment shall be subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe. Now, that changes the civil-service law absolutely, and I do not see how it is possible for them to take a civil-service examination under that provision.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not compulsory under that provision, but that provision is the same that we had in last year, and have had in right along. There is an examination prescribed by the Civil Service Commission for a farmer. This of course takes that out from under that.

Mr. MANN. This would make it possible to have these political appointees, and I do not think——

Mr. SHERMAN. It would make it possible—and that is being done—to have as many of them as possible Indians so far as the assistant farmers are concerned. It is the policy of the Bureau, wherever it is possible, to employ Indians in the Service, and as a matter of fact to-day about one-fourth of the employees under this provision are of Indian blood. And the provision makes it possible for the Commissioner to ascertain in such manner as he finds feasible and most convenient whether or not these Indians whom he desires to employ are competent for the employment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Would it be wise to limit this examination only to the Indian employees?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it would be better to leave it as it is. It is under this provision that we have been operating for some years. We have a good class of farmers now. The reports all show that the duties are well performed and that the results attained are very satisfactory.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman of course is aware of the fact that there has been a charge—I may judge from an article I saw in a morning paper—that some employees of the Government had been used for political purposes. And I desire to protect, as far as I can, the President from the suspicion, which I believe to be unfounded, that such could be the case, and to prevent political appointments.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, Mr. Chairman, I agree with the belief of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but I can not concede that it would be possible, even did we have a President who desired to use patronage to accomplish desired political ends, for these Indian farmers to be used to accomplish such a purpose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SHERMAN. And here is a provision under which we have been operating for a decade, found to be practicable, found to work to the advantage of the Service, under which we have been procuring competent men, honest men, efficient men, sober men, who have produced the results which we desire, who have been of real benefit to the Indians in the line of practical instruction in farming, and in the voeations through which the Indians' livelihood could be obtained, and after a decade of experience, Mr. Chairman, it does seem unwise now to change it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] make the point of order against any particular portion of the paragraph?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order, commencing in line 26, on page 11, "subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," and also on line 12, page 12, "subject only to such examination as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, my attention was diverted for a moment, and I do not know what the gentleman raises the point upon.

The CHAIRMAN. It was made against the provision in line 26, on page 11, and line 12, on page 12, "subject only to such examination as to qualifications as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe," in that it changes existing law, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, while this may not be drawn so that, as it is printed, it is a limitation upon this year's appropriation, which is so intended, it is a very simple matter to change the wording a little bit so that we can accomplish the same purpose with a limitation. I am not arguing the point of order now. I trust under those circumstances that the gentleman will not insist on his point of order and put me to the trouble of framing a limitation upon this appropriation. It is only for this year anyway. This is not permanent.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman, with all his capacity, can not frame a limitation that would cover this so that it would come within the rule.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes, I can, and so can you.

Mr. MANN. The law provides how these appointments shall be made. Now it is proposed to change that law. There is no limitation in that.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Does the gentleman suspect this Administration would use these employees for political purposes?

Mr. MANN. I do not; but I want to protect the Administration against such a charge, as comes from that side of the House only, that such things are being done, and I feel sure they are not.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The latest information on that question comes from a source very close to that side of the House. I understand it will be in to-night's papers. From what I have heard, there will be some proof. The impression I have received from this colloquy between the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is that there was perhaps some suspicion of that kind, that men taken into the Service exempt from the civil service rules had been utilized for the political purposes of one particular candidate of the Republicans against the others. I would regret very much if anything like that should happen.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order, and must sustain it as made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I move to amend this, in line 14, page 12, by inserting "Provided no part of the sum herein appropriated shall be expended except only"—I will have to take a little time to prepare the amendment.

Mr. McGUIRE. I would like to say to the gentleman from Illinois that this particular Service is very, very necessary, and in many instances it has been impossible to secure persons who have taken the regular civil-service examination. To my knowledge on many of these reservations where persons have been employed by the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Indian Affairs, they have been immediately superseded upon the presentation of persons who have taken the regular civil-service examination.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. And who have proven incompetent afterwards.

Mr. McGUIRE. And ofttimes proven incompetent. There is no reservation in my State where this Service can well be dispensed with, and I would like to see the gentleman withdraw the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I now offer as an amendment—

Provided, That no part of the sum herein provided shall be expended except only for such farmers as shall have been found to be qualified upon examination prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert: "Provided, That no part of the money herein appropriated shall be expended except only for such farmers as shall have been found to be qualified upon examination prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, that is a limitation upon this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course, if the Chair and the Comptroller of the Treasury should have the same opinion, it is either subject to the point of order or else it amounts to nothing. On the last proposition, of course, the Chair can not pass as to whether it amounts to anything or not. But there are cases where a proposition is in the form of a limitation when it is not any limitation. Now, the proposed amendment would require, as it seems at first blush, the appointment of these farmers in a particular way that would be a limitation, because it is in the form of a limitation, although there is an expenditure of money in this case. It is not the language of limitation, although in the form of a limitation. The effect, if it be a mere limitation, is to say that no part of the money shall be expended because the law now provides how these officials shall be employed; and the test, Mr. Chairman, as to whether it is a limitation is, Will it confer authority upon the Commissioner or Secretary of the Interior to appoint these men at all? If it does confer authority, then it changes existing law. If there is nothing in the amendment which changes existing law, if it gives authority to the Commissioner or the Secretary of the Interior to appoint these farmers at all, then it changes existing law, because it prescribes a method by which they shall be appointed contrary to the provisions of existing law, and the mere fact that it may be in the form of limitation does not affect the question at all. The question is whether it, in fact, changes the law. The law now provides that these officials shall be appointed through civil-service examinations, and certain classes of officials, when they are so directed by the President, are covered into the classified service.

This class of employees, as a matter of fact, are under the provisions of the civil-service law. I presume they are under the terms of the order covering the Indian Service into the classified service. Now, does this amendment change that law?

Does it authorize the appointment of these officials at all in a different manner from the manner now prescribed by law?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the gentleman from Illinois permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Aside from his point of order, what objection has the gentleman from Illinois to the appointment of these farmers in this way, in view of the fact that their qualifications and knowledge must be very different? You select a farmer for Oklahoma, one for Dakota, and another for Arizona. It is not a question of the civil service. It can not be for the good of the Service, because the man on the civil-service lists who might draw the premium would not know any more about irrigation when he was assigned to Arizona than I know about the Sanscrit language. I am trying to draw the gentleman's attention to the desirability of avoiding the civil-service appointments in these particular cases. A man whose life has been spent in irrigation knows exactly when to put on water, how much to put on, and everything connected with the work, and I would not give one such man, nor would the gentleman if he could see the difference between them, for all the civil-service men in the world. The Secretary has been selecting men for the performance of this duty who have been doing it fairly well.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman aware that the Government proposes to expend during the next fiscal year $20,000,000 or $30,000,000 in irrigation plants, all under civil-service employees?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that is an answer to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. It is not an answer by any means, and I will show you why.

Mr. MANN. We are either making a very grave mistake in expending these many millions of dollars that way, or it seems to me that we can safely expend this small amount of money in the same way.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That shows that the gentleman from Illinois, for whom I have the highest possible regard both for his intelligence and his duty-performing service on this floor, can not have and none of us can have a comprehensive view of the whole situation. This country is awfully big. The divergences, even in farming, are as wide apart as the poles. Now, the civil service to which the gentleman refers, in the matter of great irrigation schemes, is a very different matter from teaching a Papago Indian, on a hundred of acres of land, how to raise beans and potatoes.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman was talking about irrigation, and that is the reason I made the suggestion. If he wants to know about this particular case, I may say to him that under the civil-service law all that is necessary to be done, if there be any reason to take these people out of the classified service, is for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs or the Secretary of the Interior to ask the President to take them out, and the President will issue an order taking them out of the civil service. There is nothing hard about it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Here is the difficulty that confronts us there again. The President may not do it.

Mr. MANN. I do not say now that I am right, or that the gentleman is right. I am willing to leave that to the Department. This would leave it to the Department anyhow.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am leaving a much smaller responsibility to the Department, and that is the selection of this little farmer. I would rather leave that to them than the greater question you suggest. Besides, I can not refrain from saying here that I am very much in sympathy with the gentleman, from one viewpoint of this case, and that is that I have been unable to find a single appointee of this Administration in my Territory, which includes hundreds and hundreds of them, from the governor and through the courts down to the lowest post-office, who is not for Taft or Cortelyou, as the President suggests.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I venture to suggest that the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is a limitation, and that it is not in contravention of the rule. If there is any law or any regulation of the President requiring that farmers shall pass a civil-service examination, this amendment does not seem to me to dispense with that. Certainly no civil-service regulation can compel Congress to appropriate for a man simply because he may have passed the civil-service regulations. We may appropriate the money and put an additional qualification or limitation upon its expenditure. Now, it may very well be that a man who may pass a civil-service examination and be a good farmer in the part of the country from which I come, as I myself am, might not be able to work intelligently on one of these irrigated farms in the West, or vice versa. If the law does require these appointees to be taken from the civil-service list, this amendment does not change that or seek to, but it puts on the added qualification that no man shall be appointed until the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that he is a good farmer.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to call attention to one authority, on page 358 of the Digest. In the Fifty-ninth Congress, second session, it was decided that:

The House may not, under guise of limitation on a general appropriation bill, grant the whole appropriation for a general service, on condition that an executive officer shall take a certain course as to a specific service.

I have not had time to run through the authorities, but I recall distinctly that it has been held that a provision under the guise of a limitation, which in effect repeals or modifies an existing law, is not a limitation, but is a change of existing law.

Now, this law at present requires that these farmers be appointed after examination by the Civil Service Commission. The object of this provision is to exempt from the operation of the law the particular persons appointed under this provision, and to that extent it in effect operates as a repeal of the law now existing. I submit if that can be done. I recall a case very well where an effort was made to authorize a lease for post-office purposes for a certain period of time. The law provided that leases for such purposes could not be made for more than a certain number of years—I have not the details fixed in my mind—it may have been ten years. An amendment was offered providing that a lease should be made for fifty years, and the Chair ruled, if I recall correctly, that in effect that was a repeal of the law regulating the leases of buildings for post-office purposes and not a limitation under the rule. It seems to me the provision does evade the effect of the law invoked by the gentleman, and does change existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The doctrine of limitation is an interesting and elusive one. Limitations can be imposed by Congress, but still we must be careful that under the form of limitations we do not have the reality of legislation. Where that is the result, then that principle can not be availed of to evade and escape the rule that no legislation shall be contained in an appropriation bill. In this case, as the Chair understands the law to be, there is a statute by which persons who are to be farmers and stockmen, persons provided for by this paragraph, shall be appointed under the rules of the civil service.

The amendment that is offered provides that no part of this money—in other words, none of the employees who, being employed under the terms of this provision, shall be paid—that no money shall be expended unless they shall be found to be qualified upon an examination prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Now, the result would be, as it seems to the Chair, either that no one could be appointed, or, if appointments were made, they must be made in a way not now authorized by law. If this amendment was adopted, if it was put into effect, the necessary result would be, as it seems to the Chair, that these employees, instead of being appointed as the law now requires they should be appointed, would be appointed by a new process, by qualifications that would be regarded as satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior.

The Chair is unable to see that such a result as that does not amount to a repeal of existing law, and must, therefore, sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LAWRENCE having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore a message from the Senate by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 14766) making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had further insisted upon its amendments, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had asked a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HALE, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Apache and other Indians in Arizona and New Mexico who have been or may be collected on reservations in Arizona and New Mexico, $300,000: Provided, That the unexpended balance for the fiscal year 1908 is hereby appropriated and made available for 1909.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that last year there was an appropriation of $225,000 for this specific purpose, and it appears upon the face of this bill that there is still an unexpended balance. I have arisen for the purpose of inquiring how many Indians are supported, and in what manner they are supported, and in what manner they are civilized, and what reason there is to increase the appropriation by $75,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no increase in the appropriation; that is an error. That is a combination of items. There are in the neighborhood of 40,000 Indians in Arizona. These Indians have no treaty funds whatever, they substantially have no grass money, they substantially have no revenue of their own save what they receive from their labor, and that is not a trifling sum, I will say; there are many of them that are not what my friend from Arizona would call "good-for-nothing Indians." Many of them are industrious; many of them are substantially maintaining themselves upon an arid piece of land where not even a prairie dog can live.

I have driven for miles and miles—30 and 40 miles—through that Territory on an Indian reservation where there was not a spear of grass or drop of water for the entire distance; not a single thing except some few little scrub cedars. It follows, of course, that in a large population of this kind there must of necessity be a greater or less number of old and decrepit, more or less that are sick, and there must be more, not less, who require some aid to sustain themselves. We have for years and years appropriated considerable sums for the general assistance of all these Indians in Arizona. The amount that was unexpended from the appropriation for the year closing July 1 last was $10,057, and the amount appropriated for the present year—$153,000—has already been expended, and substantially the entire balance it has expended and has been provided for——

Mr. OLMSTED. I did not intend to move to decrease the appropriation, but I simply wish to understand it.

But I will call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that I was correct, as appears from page 1021 of Statutes at Large for last year, in my statement that the appropriation for this very specific purpose and in the identical language was $225,000. There may be abundant reason why it should be increased.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to give the reasons given by the Secretary of the Interior? He says that these increases exist for the reason that "our work among those Indians has grown tremendously with the development of the country, and all we need now is to keep the work moving for the next few years, and we shall then have most of these Indians independent and caring for themselves." Permit me to add also that formerly these Indians lived in the mountains by hunting and fishing to a little extent, and that some of them had small farms along the streams, and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] will bear me out in the statement that a great deal of the water in the upper parts of these streams has been diverted from those farms by white men who have taken up the land there.

Mr. OLMSTED. The gentleman thinks that the further appropriation is necessary?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think so.

Mr. OLMSTED. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proviso contained in lines 13 to 16. I wish to inquire first how much unexpended balance of the year 1907——

Mr. SHERMAN. Ten thousand dollars was unexpended at the close of the year 1907. In this year $153,000 had been expended up to the first of January, 1908. The expenditure of practically the entire balance had been provided for. At the end of the year where there is as large a sum as that appropriated there is usually a small balance. We had this up before when the gentleman was a member of the committee, and I am very sorry he is not now on the committee. I have missed him every year since he has left; he was a very useful man there, and is a very useful man everywhere. We have always had this provision in, and it makes it easier in the bookkeeping of the Department to run the same thing along rather than to close it up.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What I desire to call to the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], in spite of his flattering statement, is that if the appropriation is made in this way, it is utterly impossible to keep track of what is expended in any fiscal year. The unexpended balance provided for in this appropriation for one year is to be carried over to the next year, but why should not this service be estimated for by the Indian Office, and the Office compelled, as nearly as possible, to do the service for the amount appropriated? If it is unable to do it, let them come and ask for a deficiency appropriation like every other part of the public service. There would be no trouble, upon a proper showing, in having the necessary money appropriated, but in this way, if a large sum is unnecessary in the present fiscal year, the Department not only has the increased appropriation, which I have no doubt is necessary, given for the next year, but it has in addition a sum of money that the committee and the Congress did not have in contemplation when it was appropriating for this service. It seems to me that this particular service, like all other parts of the Government service, if it is able by economy to save money in any fiscal year, should turn that money back into the Treasury and have the money for special service appropriated directly with the knowledge of the House.

Mr. SHERMAN. That economy is practiced in the Indian Bureau is evident from the fact that in almost every instance, item after item, all through this bill there is a balance turned back into the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year.

Mr. FITZGERALD. That would demonstrate either that there was economy or else that the persuasive powers of the officials were very great.

Mr. SHERMAN. Possibly both. But there has been economy used. The gentleman was a member of the Indian Committee at the time when we went through the Indian bill from page 1 until the close, going into the most minute details about every particular fund, ascertaining how funds even as small as $500 were expended, every detail of it, and every item, and that we pared down at that time to an amount considerably lower than had ever been appropriated for these several items before, and while we did not this year go into details to the extent that we did at the time to which I refer, or to the same extent that we did last year, we asked in a general way in reference to these funds and it was our conviction—the conviction of the committee—that in each instance the fund appropriated was about the minimum that it was safe to appropriate. I do not regard it as a matter of prime consequence whether this proviso is in or out. I believe there will be a small surplus at the end of the fiscal year. I believe it will be smaller than the surplus at the end of the last fiscal year. It was only $10,000, and I do not think it is a matter of great consequence whether the Bureau is permitted to spend that or whether it be turned back into the Treasury, but they have done it heretofore, and I see no special reason for striking it out now.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The appropriation last year was $225,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The item in the bill is $300,000, an increase of $75,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think with the increase there will be sufficient funds if we give that without appropriating the unexpected balance?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman appreciates this fact that it is impossible for the proper officials to endeavor to keep track of the amount of appropriations each year and to keep track of all unexpended balances of appropriations, so that no one can tell how much the appropriations are for the next fiscal year if this becomes the habit.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the gentleman is right about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist upon his amendment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I had hoped, Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee would agree to the amendment, because it is unusual, not only in the bill, but in all bills. The chairman of the committee states truly that there is economy in the Service. The amendment does not in any way strike out the appropriation, but it merely enables those who desire to ascertain the amount of money expended in any particular year for any particular service to obtain it without difficulty. Under this system it is an utter impossibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, in my momentary absence from the Hall I learned that my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] has raised a question as to the expenditure of the appropriation in this bill for education of the Indians in Arizona. When I conceive of how much it means and how appropriately every dollar of it is spent in that country, while the gentleman of Pennsylvania is as ignorant of that as I am of any virtue that emanates from Carlisle as an Indian educational institution, I say it seems quite proper it should have come from that source. Now, there is no education in this country that I know of—I claim to be somewhat familiar with the Indians, and especially "the Indians." I am not talking about the extinct tribe of Fennimore Cooper Indians that never did exist; I am talking about the Indians such as live to-day, the blanket Indian of the reservation—and if you will double the fund you give to Arizona in this bill and cut that much off from Carlisle, you will do something toward the elevation of the Indian in the next hundred years. I do not expect much short of that. I want the $10,000 to remain in this bill, and I congratulate the party having the expenditure of the money in charge on having saved that much, but they can spend $1,000,000 in Arizona upon the education of the Indian in irrigation enterprises alone, and ought to do it and cut off every single one of the foreign schools in order to do it. Now, this ought to remain here, every dollar of it, and in this connection, if the chairman were present at the time, I would ask the amount of the additional appropriation for Arizona——

Mr. HACKNEY. Seventy-five thousand dollars.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Only $75,000——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, there is no effort being made to reduce the appropriation.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know that, but I am trying now to make an effort to call the attention of the committee to the fact that we have not made the appropriation half enough. That is all; I do not expect any accomplishment from what I say now, but in order to give, as far as I can, some little light on a matter upon which I claim to know something more than the men in the eastern part of the country, I say we can take a million dollars and expend it in irrigation for the Indians of the Maricopa tribe alone and do more for Indian education than you will do under the present condition with every dollar expended in this whole bill; and the idea of cutting it down or the suggestion of a reduction in the Arizona appropriation comes from Pennsylvania, when there is not an Indian in his State, nor an Indian of the kind I speak of within 600 miles of his State, for him to question the propriety of the appropriation to Arizona, where I have over thirty thousand under my daily observation.

I have no particular sympathy with the individual Indian. I have no reason to have such sympathy, and I am referring to the blanket tribal Indian. I have a thousand reasons to feel the other way. But I do confess to some sort of sympathy for the elevation of the mass if perchance it ever can be elevated. I hope the $10,000 will be left in the bill, for there may be necessities that will arise in a minute where they could properly expend it in the education of elevation of the Indian on his native heath.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me a little singular that the gentleman from Arizona should be so sensitive. Nobody has moved to cut down the appropriation. He evidently has not read the clause himself. I see nothing about any item of $10,000 in it. It certainly is not singular that a Member of this House, charged with some duty toward his constituents and toward the whole people, when only $225,000 was appropriated last year for the purpose and only $155,000 of it used, should ask an explanation why $300,000 should be appropriated this year. It certainly is quite within reason for any gentleman on the floor to inquire why. I rose for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. When I rose before I supposed that he would explain it, but he has not done so yet. I would like to know why it requires nearly double the amount this year that was expended last year, when last year they did not spend the whole amount appropriated. I have not objected to the appropriation and have not sought to cut it down. I am not attacking any appropriation because it happens to go to the gentleman's Territory instead of to my State. He wants to keep all the appropriation in his Territory. I have heretofore endeavored to explain why a small portion of it can be and is judiciously expended elsewhere. I merely rise here to inquire why it is necessary to appropriate twice as much this year when they could not expend all that they had last year?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED], for whom I have great personal regard——

Mr. OLMSTED. I am sure of that.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the gentleman will permit, I will say that I was informed when I stepped into the Hall that he had attacked the appropriation on this bill by someone probably who had not paid proper attention to the gentleman's remarks. That being the statement made to me, I replied in the manner that the RECORD will show. It was only on the information that I had received that the gentleman had made an attack on the appropriation, and the RECORD will show, as the gentleman's statement shows, that that was not a fact. So it is a closed incident, and if I have said anything in the least that was out of the way or that could possibly have offended the most delicate sensibilities of my friend, I want him to consider it as not having been said.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Chairman, I beg to assure the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] that my most delicate sensibilities are not in the slightest degree offended.

Mr. MANN. I hope the RECORD will show that both of the gentlemen are for the flag and the appropriation. [Laughter.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not want the RECORD to show an error. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] applied the figures to a wrong period. I stated to the gentleman that $153,000 has been expended during the first six months of the present fiscal year out of the $225,000. In other words, during the first six months of this year the expenditure of the appropriation would indicate that the additional appropriation for next year was necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

FORT MOJAVE SCHOOL.

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Fort Mojave, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent of said school, $35,000;
For general repairs and improvements, $3,000;
For repair of water system, $3,000;
For purchase of steam boiler, $2,000;
In all, $43,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I raise a point of order on that. I do not know whether they consider that to be one paragraph or five.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, we generally consider that one paragraph, for the schools, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is one paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MANN. First, the gentleman of course knows that heretofore the law fixed the salary. There is no limitation in this bill upon that salary. A year or two ago the gentleman had a plan for readjusting the salaries of these superintendents which, as far as I am concerned, I am inclined to think is a good one. I would like to inquire of the gentleman, while it seems to me subject probably to a point of order, though not certainly, if that is for the purpose of permitting the Department to readjust the salaries of the superintendents of the schools, and, if this is the intention, to increase these salaries?

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose is to permit a readjustment if it be necessary, but not increase. The maximum in each case which it was possible to heretofore fix is the present salaries. In other words, so far as this school, the Fort Mojave School, is concerned, the total is obtained by multiplying the number of pupils by $167 and adding thereto $1,600, which is the amount that we appropriated last year for the pay of the superintendent.

In practice the Commissioner says this: Here is a school where an appropriation of $1,600 was made for the superintendent. The superintendent has been there, we will say, for seven, eight, or nine years, until he has become one of the most efficient and capable superintendents in the Service. The only possible way for him to receive any advancement is to be transferred to some other school where there is a larger attendance and a greater salary provided. The new superintendent who goes in to take his place may be a man who has not been a superintendent of an Indian school at all. The Commissioner's idea is this, that it is not right and not for the good of the Service to have this new man begin at the salary that the former superintendent had at the end of, say, half a dozen years' service; and under this provision it is possible for the Commissioner to fix the salary of the new incumbent at, we will say, $1,000 or $1,200 and year by year, from time to time, increase the salary until the maximum of $1,600 may be reached; and in that way it offers an inducement to the new superintendent to bring his school up to the highest point of perfection. That is what is sought to be attained by this change of the provision, and not the increase of the salary of any superintendent.

Mr. MANN. How, then, is the maximum salary fixed? Why does the gentleman say there is a maximum salary where there is no salary carried in the law?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no maximum general salary. The salary has heretofore been fixed for each superintendent, and in confirmation of this policy in each instance in every school we have multiplied the number of pupils by $167 and added the amount which has heretofore been appropriated for the superintendent.

Mr. MANN. Then it would not be necessary to multiply by 167 and then provide the compensation, as there is no maximum fixed by law.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no maximum fixed by law, and it would be well to fix it. I think the provision that we brought in here a year or two ago was better than this, but the same end is sought to be attained, and nothing except that is sought to be attained in this provision, and in practice it will be attained. No superintendent will be receiving greater compensation than was provided for him last year.

Mr. MANN. I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. OLMSTED. I move to strike out the last word. If I may, without offending the sensibilities of my friend from Arizona——

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Be very tender with them, for I might get mad.

Mr. OLMSTED. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this is one of those terrible nonreservation schools for the education of the Indians for which there is said to be no authority or reason whatever? I would like to have him explain, in view of his statement recently about the Indians that you must pick them all up and educate them in the mass or leave them all in mass in the mire, why it requires to maintain the Indians an average of $212.50 to educate them in this school, taking all the items, whereas for Carlisle there are something less than $164 appropriated, and that includes the salary of the superintendent and all matters of repairs, and also includes the transportation of pupils, which is furnished to this Arizona school freely. I assume the chairman of the committee and his committee have considered the matter, and it is all right, but I would like to hear what the gentleman from Arizona has to say about it and how he reconciles it with those ideas that he has expressed on the education of the Indians in nonreservation schools.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Inasmuch as the gentleman does not object to it, I have no desire merely to entertain the House or him. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

PHOENIX SCHOOL.

For support and education of 700 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Phoenix, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $119,400;
For general repairs and improvements, $8,000;
In all, $127,400.

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to hear from the gentleman from Arizona with reference to this provision.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make a motion?

Mr. OLMSTED. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. OLMSTED. That slight amendment will not offend my friend from Arizona at all. It merely strikes out the word "dollars." [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I will consent, if you will consent to the same thing at Carlisle.

Mr. OLMSTED. With the exception of Carlisle, this is the largest nonreservation school in the United States. It is located in a State that has nine reservation schools, and I think ten or fifteen—I may not be accurate as to the number—of day schools supported by the Government.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How far is this from a reservation?

Mr. OLMSTED. I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That is what I thought.

Mr. OLMSTED. I do know that after the gentleman from Arizona offered an amendment that no pupil should be transported over a hundred miles, he suddenly got to work on his arithmetic and withdrew his amendment, so I assume that some of his Indians would have to go more than a hundred miles.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; not one at Phoenix has to go over 30 miles.

Mr. OLMSTED. Whatever distance they go, they have their transportation paid by the Government, making an expenditure per capita of $181 and transportation expenses besides, as against something less than $164 at Carlisle, including transportation. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. MANN. How many pupils are there at Carlisle?

Mr. OLMSTED. One thousand and twenty-six pupils enrolled and $164,000 appropriated.

The Clerk read as follows:

TRUXTON CANYON SCHOOL.

For the support and education of 100 pupils at the Indian school at Truxton Canyon, Ariz., and for pay of superintendent, $18,200;
General repairs and improvements, $1,000;
In all, $19,200.
For general incidental expenses of the Indian Service in Arizona, including traveling expenses of agents, $1,500.

Mr. OLMSTED. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to inquire whether this is a reservation or a nonreservation school?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What do you care?

Mr. SHERMAN. All of the schools specifically appropriated for are nonreservation schools.

Mr. OLMSTED. This school is enumerated by the Superintendent of Indian Affairs under the head of "Reservation schools," on page 37 of his report, and is so carried. That is the reason why I make this inquiry.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Do you object to nonreservation schools?

Mr. OLMSTED. No; I am in favor of them.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. What do you object to this for?

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to find out about it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. You are in favor of both kinds.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is a nonreservation school.

Mr. OLMSTED. I want to call attention to it, because it costs $181, exclusive of transportation, to take the Indians to this school, as against something less than $164 per capita at Carlisle, including transportation.

The Clerk read as follows:

COLORADO.

GRAND JUNCTION SCHOOL.

For support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Grand Junction, Colo., and for pay of superintendent, $35,000;
General repairs and improvements, $6,000;
In all, $41,000.
For general incidental expenses of the Indian Service in Colorado, including traveling expenses of agents, $1,000.

Mr. HAGGOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 7, page 16, insert the following:
"Fort Lewis School: For the support and education of 200 Indian pupils at the Indian school at Fort Lewis, Colo., and for pay of superintendent, $35,000;
"For general repairs and improvements, $3,700;
"For gas plant, $5,000;
"In all, $43,800."

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HAGGOTT. This amendment, which I have just offered, is to retain the Fort Lewis School in southwestern Colorado. This school is situated near three Indian reservations, the Southern Ute, the Apache, and the Navajo. It is in close community with all three reservations. We provide for a capacity of 200 pupils. The entire enrollment last year was 242 pupils. The average attendance was 192 pupils. The school is excellently situated to accommodate the reservations named, and is well equipped in every respect. So far as the average cost for the education of these Indian children is concerned, it compares with the cost of the education of Indian pupils in other schools. I move the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the committee has seen fit, or has been good enough, to acquiesce in my suggestion incorporating in the bill a provision under which the Secretary of the Interior can negotiate and dispose of the Indian schools, I think I shall not oppose incorporating in the bill again the items of the three schools that have been stricken out by the committee. [Applause.] I do want to say that in regard to this particular school, as I recall the hearings, the Commissioner states that one of the Senators from Colorado had reported to him that the State of Colorado would be very glad to enter into some arrangement by which they could take over the school. If that be correct, under the provision we have agreed to, in another year the school may be disposed of. Until something further is done, and inasmuch as we are appropriating for all but two or three of the schools which were stricken out, I shall not oppose an insertion in the bill of the items for the support of these three schools. But I propose in this connection to move to strike out the item of $5,000 in this amendment for a gas plant. I do that for the reason that if we are to dispose of this school, we can do it quite as well without the additional expenditure of $5,000 for a gas plant. Whatever light provision there is there now it has been sufficient to carry on the school for some years, and certainly it can go another year without detriment to the Service without the gas plant provided for by that amendment. So I move, as an amendment to the amendment, to strike out the $5,000 provided for the gas plant.

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. OLMSTED]. That can be offered after the point of order is disposed of.

Mr. MANN. Is there any authority of law for the construction of this gas plant?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no specific authority of law, but this is a school that belongs to the Government, and it is possible, I expect, under the rules of the House, to make such provision as we think is necessary for the betterment of the buildings and for their safety and for their care. I assume that the item for an additional gas plant is such an item as could be put in without violating the rule, and therefore I have not raised the point of order, but I do think the item ought to go out.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me that authority must be provided somewhere for the construction of the plant and building. If you could provide for a gas plant, you could provide for an electric plant; if you could provide for a gas plant you could provide for power and heating plant, or any of the things that may go without authority of law.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from Illinois knows that that has been done over and over again—that we can add to a plant which is now in existence.

Mr. MANN. Is there a plant there now?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Then this is an addition to the gas plant?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; perhaps I have misled the gentleman or I do not understand the gentleman. There is no gas plant there, but there is a school plant there. Other means of lighting are now provided. However, I think that can all be avoided.

Mr. MANN. I think the provision for a gas plant is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I wish the gentleman would gratify my curiosity by answering one question. Why is it that the gentleman does not oppose now the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado when it seeks to make provision for this school?

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought I had made myself clear on that subject.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I beg the gentleman's pardon. I always listen to the gentleman with interest, but I did not hear him.

Mr. SHERMAN. I said that inasmuch as provision had already been made in this bill for the disposal of all schools the Department might think unnecessary hereafter, and that inasmuch as that provision required a report to be made thereon at the next session of Congress before anything definite was done, it seemed to be reasonable to continue the schools now in existence, and therefore I would not oppose the insertion in the bill of the provision for the schools that had been stricken out.

Mr. BUTLER. Until some definite plan is made.

Mr. SHERMAN. Until something definite is brought in.

Mr. HAGGOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will accept the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then, Mr. Chairman, as I understand, the gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to amend his amendment by striking out the provision to which I refer.

Mr. HAGGOTT. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to considering the amendment as amended? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois has withdrawn his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I have not withdrawn it as yet; but as I do not wish to embarrass the Chair, especially the present occupant of the chair [Mr. OLMSTED], by having him hold that the Carlisle Indian school is not in order, I withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Indians formerly of Lemhi Agency, Idaho: For the second of twenty installments, as provided in agreement with the Indians of Fort Hall and Lemhi agencies, Idaho, approved February 23, 1889, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the benefit of the Indians removed to Fort Hall Reservation from Lemhi Agency, Idaho, in such manner as the President may direct, $4,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment for Idaho, and it should come in on line 5 on page 17. I ask unanimous consent to return to that page for the purpose of offering an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to return to the preceding page for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 5 on page 17 insert:

"That the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, of Idaho, is hereby authorized to locate, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, an additional station ground, not to exceed 200 feet in width by a length of 3,000 feet, west of Plummer, upon its located line in the Coeur d'Alene Indian Reservation, in the State of Idaho: Provided, That full compensation therefor shall be determined and paid under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior in accordance with the provisions of the act of March 2, 1889 (30 Stat. L., 990)."

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to ask the reason for this.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the law under which rights of way can be procured through Indian reservations provides that stations can not be placed nearer together than 10 miles. There is a station at Plummer, and in order to locate the next station west at the point desirable it comes about a quarter of a mile within the 10-mile limitation, and therefore this authority is asked.

Mr. MANN. This will in no wise injure the Indian reservation?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not at all. It is a benefit to it, and the question of compensation is left entirely with the Interior Department, where the law leaves it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

IOWA.

SAC AND FOX SCHOOL.

For support and education of 80 Indian pupils at the Indian school on the Sac and Fox Reservation, Iowa, and for pay of superintendent, $14,560;

For general repairs and improvements, $600;

In all, $15,160.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I wish to offer there, but which I have not at hand at present. I ask unanimous consent to return to this paragraph later.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the paragraph may be passed for the present and that he may return to it later for the purpose of offering an amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SACS AND FOXES OF THE MISSOURI. (TREATY.)

For support of a school, per fifth article of treaty of March 6, 1861, $200.

Mr. DARRAGH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 4 on page 21 insert:

"MICHIGAN.

"MOUNT PLEASANT SCHOOL.

"For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Mount Pleasant, Mich., and for pay of superintendent, $51,800;

"For general repairs, and improvements, $4,000;

"In all, $55,800."

Mr. DARRAGH. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I send to the Clerk's desk, if inserted in the bill, appears in the exact language in which it appeared in the first print of the bill. It restores the appropriation provided for in the estimates. Notwithstanding the statement that it has been reported that the school was not necessary, an investigation of the facts will show that the school is necessary and that fully one-half of the pupils now in attendance will be unable to attend schools of any character or receive any education to fit them for the exercise of citizenship, except at this school, unless some other provision were made by the State or by some other authority. In view of the statement made by the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], that no objection would be made to the restoration of the item, it is entirely unnecessary to explain further the necessity for the amendment which I offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

To complete the drainage and survey of the ceded Indian lands in Minnesota, $10,000.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the last paragraph. May I ask the gentleman from New York whether this drainage scheme is one that is in operation?

Mr. SHERMAN. Which is the item to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. MANN. Lines 8 and 9, page 21, for the drainage and survey of the ceded Indian lands in Minnesota.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, that is something that is in operation now. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON] desires to be heard upon that, but he does not seem to be here now. It is to continue a work that is now in progress for drainage or reclamation of a large area of land. I can not say from memory just what we have expended—$15,000, I think, already, and this $10,000 will not be sufficient to complete the work, and it is for the purpose of continuing it.

Mr. MANN. Well, it says "to complete."

Mr. SHERMAN. It will not complete the work, in my judgment. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEENERSON], who is the father of this proposition, to explain it.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, the so-called "ceded Chippewa lands" in Minnesota were ceded under the act of 1889, and neither the school-lands grant nor the swamp-lands grant to the State attached to any land in this region. The lands were subject to homestead entry at $1.25 an acre. They have now been open to entry for about eighteen years and only about half of them have been taken because they were low and swampy, and it was thought in 1906 that it would be desirable to have a drainage survey made, and an appropriation of $15,000 was made to have that survey made to determine whether these lands could be made available for settlers by drainage. The $15,000 was spent and the land was surveyed, and last year another $10,000 was appropriated and the survey continued. Elaborate reports were made, and they stated in their last report that they can complete the survey with another $10,000, and that is about all that can be said about it.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman who owns this land?

Mr. STEENERSON. The title is in the United States in trust for the Indians. The proceeds of $1.25 an acre go to the Indian fund.

Mr. MANN. If this appropriation is for the purpose of making this land available so that it can be taken or purchased by people, why should not the Government be reimbursed for the expense?

Mr. STEENERSON. I understand this is a reimbursable appropriation.

Mr. MANN. Not the way it stands; there is no provision in here for reimbursement of this expense. This is a direct appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. STEENERSON. I think the other two appropriations were reimbursable.

Mr. SHERMAN. The original act, as I recall, required that the sums appropriated for carrying out this work should be reimbursable to the Treasury out of the sale of the lands when the sale was made.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think that is correct; that is my understanding of the matter.

Mr. MANN. There was an act outside of the appropriation bill?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. When the first appropriation was made and the work begun this act was passed authorizing it to be reimbursed.

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes; the act of June 21, 1906, authorized the drainage survey to be made to determine the feasibility of draining these lands. The result of the work, if it shall be done, will be that the land will be made valuable for farming and disposed of under the homestead law, but if nothing is done and the lands left as they are they will never be sold, and not only will the Indians get nothing for the land, but they will impede the settlement and development of that whole region of country.

Mr. HINSHAW. If the gentleman will permit, this survey will not result in the sale of these lands unless it is followed up by further appropriations to drain them?

Mr. STEENERSON. No.

Mr. MANN. That is what this is for; to drain them. This is for drainage as well as the survey; that is what it says.

Mr. HINSHAW. Does this contemplate there will be anything further than to complete the survey?

Mr. STEENERSON. That is all—to complete the survey and determine whether or not drainage would be feasible. This paragraph should read "for drainage survey," and not "drainage and survey."

Mr. HINSHAW. So it would have to be followed by further appropriations, which would then be reimbursable, I suppose, to drain these extensive lands so they might be suitable for settlement?

Mr. STEENERSON. Exactly.

Mr. MANN. Well, the item reads—and I leave it to the House to say what it means—"to complete the drainage and survey of the ceded Indian lands in Minnesota." Now, if there is no provision of law already made for the drainage of this land and simply a provision of law for a survey to ascertain whether they can be drained, then it is subject to the point of order. I am not willing to have the House commit itself to a proposition of a drainage scheme unless it knows what it is doing. I beg to ask the gentleman from New York what is the original provision.

Mr. STEENERSON. This drainage survey was authorized in the Indian appropriation bill of 1906, and the present item is only for the completion of that survey, upon which the Government has already spent $25,000, and the Secretary of the Interior has estimated it will cost $10,000 to complete it. That is why the item is here.

Mr. SHERMAN. I haven't it before me at this minute.

Mr. MANN. I thought the gentleman had.

Mr. SHERMAN. If you will pass this informally, we will send for it. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we pass this without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] asks unanimous consent that the paragraph be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. The other day I submitted some remarks on this Indian appropriation bill and inadvertently they were sent to my rooms for revision. I had no idea of that, and I did not see them in time to put the matter in the RECORD at all that night; and I ask unanimous consent of the committee, not only to put the remarks in the RECORD, but to submit some general observations on the Indian question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

For preliminary surveys, plans, and estimates of irrigating systems to irrigate the allotted lands of the Indians of the Flathead Reservation in Montana and the unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of under the act of April 23, 1904, entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment," and to begin the construction of the same, $50,000, the cost of said entire work to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of the lands within said reservation. The purchaser of any lands irrigable by an irrigation system hereunder constructed shall pay, in addition to the payments required by section 9 of said act for perpetual water right, the actual acre cost of such system in fifteen equal annual installments to be paid to the receiver of the local land office. The failure to make any two payments shall work a forfeiture of the rights acquired by the purchaser, and he shall lose the money previously paid and the water right to the land, but it may be purchased by another person, who shall thereafter acquire the land in question at such a price and on such conditions as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, but not less than the cost originally determined. The funds arising hereunder shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and added to the proceeds derived from the sale of the lands. The land susceptible of irrigation under the systems herein provided for and owned by or allotted to Indians in severalty shall be deemed to have a right to so much water as may be required to irrigate said lands, without cost to the Indians, so long as the title, legal or equitable, remains in said Indians, but any such lands leased for a longer term than three years shall bear their pro rata part of the cost of the maintenance of the system that may be constructed, and when the Indian title is extinguished these lands shall also bear their pro rata cost of maintenance. When the payments required by this act are made for the major part of the lands that can be irrigated from a system, the management and operation of such irrigation work shall pass to the owners of the lands irrigated thereby, to be maintained at their expense under such regulations as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior, in accordance with the statutes of the State of Montana. The water rights acquired or provided for herein shall be appurtenant to the lands irrigated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the last paragraph. If the gentleman wishes me to reserve it, I will do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. I wish the gentleman would reserve it.

Mr. MANN. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman. I am not familiar enough with the irrigation law to say whether this conforms with the provisions of the law that we have now, where the land is under the Reclamation Service, but I know that this does not conform with the law that provided for these irrigation plants. Now, is it proposed to have different schemes for different irrigation plants?

Mr. SHERMAN. It is proposed to have this for this irrigation plant. Just wherein it differs from the general irrigation project—the law providing for a general irrigation project—I can not say. The gentleman apparently knows. I have not looked into it. I do not know where the difference exists.

Mr. MANN. We passed an act upon the subject in reference to this particular irrigation plant, as I remember it. They say that that is not sufficient to proceed with the irrigation work. Now, it certainly is not desirable to have a different phase of the law to apply to different irrigation plants as to the rights of the settlers.

Mr. SHERMAN. The act that we passed, to which the gentleman refers, was an act providing for survey and allotment and disposal of the property. The land is largely arid land. Now, it is proposed to provide an irrigation project by which it will make the land productive and to reimburse the Treasury for the cost of providing this irrigation project from the lands when sold, it being believed that the irrigation project will not only make the lands much more valuable for the Indian allotments, but it will make land that is practically of no value now to the Indian allottees valuable, and make it possible for them to maintain themselves on it, and the surplus disposed of to settlers will make those lands enough more valuable so that the Treasury will be reimbursed for the expenditure in providing the irrigation project.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. What part of the bill, if any, has that provision to enable the Secretary of the Interior to organize a corporation by which the Crows shall engage in the cattle business?

Mr. SHERMAN. We have not any such provision in this bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Secretary of the Interior recommends it very forcibly, and I have been trying to locate it and can not do so.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not in the bill.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It is not in the bill?

Mr. SHERMAN. No. Mr. Chairman, I will incorporate in the RECORD the letter of the Secretary of the Interior transmitting this item, and have it read, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] desires.

Mr. MANN. Let us have it read.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Clerk to read this letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 20, 1907.

SIR: The act of April 23, 1904 (33 Stat. L., 302), provides for the survey and allotment of lands embraced within the limits of the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all surplus lands after allotment.

The reservation is situated in a semiarid region, so that irrigation is essential to successful farming. The Indian Office has made several investigations to ascertain the cost of constructing irrigation works on the reservation for the benefit of the Indians, but no definite plans for the irrigation of the entire irrigable area have ever been made.

During the last summer the Director of the Reclamation Service, under my informal authority, made a hasty reconnoissance of the reservation, but the funds available were insufficient to make a thorough investigation.

As the allotments are nearly completed and the surplus lands will be opened in the near future, the preliminary surveys and estimates for an adequate system of irrigation should be made and the work begun at the earliest possible date. I therefore have caused to be prepared the accompanying draft of an item appropriating $50,000 for the preliminary surveys, plans, and estimates of irrigation systems to irrigate the lands of the reservation and to begin the construction of the same, the entire cost of the work to be reimbursed from the proceeds of the sale of the lands.

I recommend that it receive the favorable consideration of the Congress.

Very respectfully, JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] insist on his point of order?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I will have to insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state the point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order commencing with line 15, page 24, with the words "the purchaser," to the end of the paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. I concede the point of order is well taken, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, before we pass from that, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that as this item is now, it provides for preparation of plans and construction of irrigation ditches in the unallotted surplus lands, yet there is no provision that the purchaser of the surplus lands shall pay for the cost of irrigation.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is for preliminary surveys of allotted lands of the Indians and unallotted irrigable lands to be disposed of.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Out of the bill has gone the provision which will require the purchaser of the unallotted lands to pay the cost of irrigation.

Mr. MANN. Well, of course there will have to be legislation before these lands are sold.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is for the preliminary surveys, and the lands will have to be disposed of by legislation which will hereafter be provided, and in this case it will provide that the cost shall be reimbursed to the Treasury.

Mr. MANN. There is no loss to the Government, and there will have to be legislation before the land is sold.

Mr. SHERMAN. No question about that.

The Clerk read as follows:

For interest on $78,340.41, at 5 per cent per annum, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior for the erection of houses, improvement of their allotments of land, purchase of stock, agricultural implements, seeds, and other beneficial objects, $3,917.02.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, or paragraph, to follow line 4, page 28.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 4, page 28:

"For the purpose of rewooding and repiling the present old bridge across the Niobrara River, between the Santee and Ponca reservations, Nebr., supplying the same with new ice breaks, but using the ironwork of the old combination bridge, the sum of $12,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, the work to be done under the direction and supervision of the War Department."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that provision.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this bridge was built by the Government, so that I do not believe the point of order lies. This came with a recommendation from the Secretary of the Interior after this bill was reported. The people at that agency wanted a new bridge built across the Niobrara, between the Santee and Ponca reservations, at an expense of $21,000 to $55,000. The Secretary of the Interior disapproved that, but does approve of the expenditure of $12,000 for the purpose of rewooding and repiling the present old bridge, which has become practically useless, and submitted the estimate in the following letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 30, 1908.

Hon. J. T. BOYD,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Referring to several letters received from Superintendent Meagley of the Santee Agency, Nebr., in relation to the building of a bridge across the Niobrara River, between the Santee and Ponca reservations, and to your letter of the 21st instant on the same subject, I have to say, after careful consideration of this matter, that I do not look with favor on the expenditure of from $21,000 to $55,000 for a new bridge on the plans submitted by Superintendent Meagley. However, besides the project of a new bridge he submits an estimate for "rewooding and repiling of the present old bridge with new ice breaks, but using the ironwork of the old combination bridge, between $11,000 and $12,000," which, it seems to me, would meet the requirements, and I inclose herewith, for your personal use, draft of legislation which would be sufficient, I think, if enacted.

Very respectfully, C. F. LARRABEE,
Acting Commissioner.

This letter, as will be observed, is addressed to my colleague [Mr. BOYD] the Representative of that particular district in this House. In reference to the point of order, if the gentleman insists upon it, which I hope he will not, I think, this bridge having been built by the United States and having been constructed by authority of law, that the rebuilding or remodeling of the same bridge would not be subject to the point of order that it is contrary to law. In any event, I hope the gentleman will not insist on it. I would like the gentleman from that district in Nebraska, who is more familiar with it than I am, to be heard in reference to this matter.

Mr. BOYD. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation asked for by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is for the purpose of rewooding and repiling the bridge which was built by the Government some years ago connecting the Ponca and Santee reservations. The agent first asked that the Government build a new bridge, but this proposition did not meet with the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. He has, however, recommended the appropriation asked for in this amendment for the purpose of rewooding and repiling the present bridge; and it does seem to me that this is a continuation of a present Government undertaking, and is not subject to a point of order. This bridge is on Indian lands; lands that pay no tax for the maintenance of county government. The bridge is about 900 feet in length, and is the only means of crossing the river that the Ponca Indians have. I trust that the House will acquiesce in the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Indians of the Western Shoshone Agency, Nev., including pay of employees, $8,000.

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 28, after line 10, insert the following:

"CARSON SCHOOL.

"For support and education of 300 Indian pupils at Carson City, Nev., and for the pay of superintendent, $51,900;

"For general repairs and improvements, $5,000;

"In all, $56,900."

Mr. HACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the committee that this is one of the schools that were stricken from the roll, which have been described by the chairman of the committee, and we feel now that this ought to be restored along with the other schools. In the amendment I have included the estimates made by the Secretary with one exception. I have eliminated the lighting system. He estimated $1,500 for that purpose, and we thought that it would not be necessary to make an installment of a new lighting system, but simply to appropriate for the general repairs and the support of the school. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted, this being the last of the three schools that were stricken from the bill. I have always opposed, and do not change my opposition now, to the keeping up of these nonreservation schools; but inasmuch as we have in this bill a provision that the Secretary of the Interior shall determine, where situated, etc., which can be dispensed with, and that will enable him to dispose of these schools to the States in which they are situated, I am willing to withdraw my objection to the nonreservation schools at present and to permit all three of these to be put back in the bill. The Carson school has as much merit as either one of the others.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the board of county commissioners of Ormsby County, Nev., for damages to the public road caused by the breaking of the dam belonging to the Indian school at Carson City, Nev., the sum of $70 from an unexpended balance of the appropriation "Indian school, Carson City, Nev., 1907," not required for other purposes.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the last paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. MANN. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will ask the Clerk to read a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the item.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 15, 1908.

THE CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to inclose herewith, for insertion in the Indian appropriation bill for 1909, an item covering payment to the board of county commissioners of Ormsby County, State of Nevada, of $70 for damages to the public road caused by the breaking of the dam belonging to the Carson City Indian Industrial School, Nevada, and respectfully recommend that it be so inserted.

The superintendent of the school has called attention to the local conditions. He says that the damage could be neither foreseen nor prevented, and declares that the amount of repair work done by the county was such as to make the account presented an exceedingly reasonable one for the materials and labor used to rebuild the road. His recommendation is therefore submitted for your favorable consideration.

Very respectfully, JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD,
Secretary.

Mr. MANN. I see no reason why, because a road is damaged somewhere by an institution supported out of the General Treasury, that that particular land should pay for the damage. If it had been a private individual he would not have been expected to pay the damage. I insist on the point of order. This is a claim against the Government, if it is anything.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York wish to be heard?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NORTH CAROLINA.

CHEROKEE SCHOOL.

For support and education of 160 pupils at the Indian school at Cherokee, N. C., and for pay of superintendent, $28,220;
For general repairs and improvements, $500;
In all, $28,720.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move to strike out the last word. I will ask the chairman of the committee how it is that that appropriation has been reduced from $44,000 to $28,000 for the Cherokee training school?

Mr. MANN. It was $28,320 last year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. It was $44,800, I think, last year. The estimates show that amount.

Mr. MANN. No; $28,320.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it the same as it was last year?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. HACKNEY. The gentleman from Illinois is mistaken. It was $44,000 last year.

Mr. SHERMAN. The total appropriation last year was $44,000. There was an item appropriating $15,000 for the construction of a boys' dormitory. That was why the total was larger than it is this year. The same number of pupils were appropriated for last year as this year.

Mr. CRAWFORD. One hundred and sixty?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; but we gave that special appropriation of $15,000 for the construction of new buildings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Do you give all that was estimated for this year?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; this is what has been estimated for.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have been hoping that some provision would be made for a partition of the lands of these Indians. It has been recommended by the superintendent, and they have lands there that are absolutely worthless and unprofitable, as it is used.

If it were now divided among them there would be 50 acres per capita, and a fund has been recovered from the United States in a recent suit which gives them $400 per capita. I think it would be a suitable time to divide these lands among them.

Mr. SHERMAN. It goes without saying that if the gentleman from North Carolina will introduce a bill to that effect the committee will give it consideration. Of course it would not be appropriate to put such an item in this bill.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I understand. I merely want to inquire whether it is the purpose of the Government to make citizens of them.

Mr SHERMAN. It is the policy of the Government to make citizens of all Indians.

Mr. CRAWFORD. These Indians are now civilized, they speak the English language in the main, they have churches and cemeteries, and they are amenable to the laws of the State.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What tribe is it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. The Cherokees. Known as the "Eastern Cherokees."

Mr. MANN. How many of them are there?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Fifteen hundred. They have a reservation and schools, and I think it would be a good idea in the future to divide the lands among them and let them have the responsibility of citizenship.

Mr. CAMPBELL. How many acres of land have they?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Sixty-three thousand acres.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do any of them exercise the right of voting?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; and have for years.

Mr. SHERMAN. How do they have the right to vote? They are not allotted Indians.

Mr. CRAWFORD. They have been left there and have been absorbed, so to speak; they have been voting for twenty years.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am glad to know that you allow somebody to vote down there. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAWFORD. There has been too much voting, and we have been eliminating. Under an amendment to the constitution of 1900 these Indians were disfranchised; prior to that, however, a decision of the Supreme Court, in which they were held to be the wards of the nation, disfranchised them. Since the amendment to the constitution they have not been entitled to vote, except such as can read and write.

Mr. HINSHAW. Do they pay taxes?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No; they do not.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That land is not now taxed?

Mr. CRAWFORD. No. I want to say that the Indians, in my judgment, ought to be put on their own responsibility. They go to the Carlisle and Hampton schools and elsewhere and then come back and are not much improved; they are lost among their people. I think we ought to encourage them to work and establish homes. My observation is that those who have gone to Carlisle and other colleges come back, and we have more trouble with them in the courts than with those who remain and are educated at the home school. That is the result of it; they do not obey the law, as a rule. I have often defended them in the courts. They ought to be obliged to work and put upon their own resources, and then they would become good citizens. I am sure many would.

They are in need of these lands, and they need the money to improve the lands. Not long since the Government consented to a sale of about thirty-odd thousand acres of their lands, and they got the money for it, $250,000, which is held and controlled under the supervision of the Government. They want the money and they want the $600,000 that is held for adjustment of claims. I would like for this committee to inaugurate some method by which a division or partition of the lands could be had.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. How do these Indians make use of this land? What do they do with it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. Nothing; they have a little patch, a little garden, and a cottage, and they live in their little homes.

Mr. MANN. Sixty-three thousand acres of land and fifteen hundred people; a little cottage and a garden wouldn't cover very much. What is done with the balance of it?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is forest and timber land.
Mr. MANN. They keep it for hunting?
Mr. CRAWFORD. No; the hunting is not worth anything. The Government has consented to the sale of some of it. Thirty-odd thousand acres were sold last year for $245,000, which has been held by the Government for their use, an indefinite kind of use. So long as there is any money in sight, so long as they have the hope of getting money, they will not do anything.
Mr. CAMPBELL. Would the gentleman be in favor of discharging them as wards?
Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; that is just what I want to do.
Mr. HINSHAW. Has the gentleman introduced any bill to allot the lands in severalty?
Mr. CRAWFORD. No.
Mr. HINSHAW. Has anybody else introduced any such bill?
Mr. CRAWFORD. No; it has been recommended by the superintendent of schools in his report to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.
Mr. HINSHAW. Does the gentleman think that the Indians would take care of themselves and become good citizens if they had the lands allotted and the money divided?
Mr. CRAWFORD. I think so; many of them would.
Mr. HINSHAW. They have sufficient civilization?
Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes.
Mr. CARTER. Are they full-blood Indians or mixed?
Mr. CRAWFORD. Full blood and mixed. Most are full blood.
Mr. SHERMAN. Let me call the attention of the gentleman to the allotment act:

That in all cases where any tribe or band of Indians has been or shall hereafter be located upon any reservation created for their use, either by treaty, stipulation, or by virtue of act of Congress or Executive order, setting apart the same for their use, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized, wherever in his opinion any reservation, or any part thereof, of such Indians is advantageous for agricultural or grazing purposes, to cause such reservation, or any part thereof, to be surveyed or resurveyed if necessary, and to allot to each Indian located thereon one-eighth of a section of land.

Why is not that broad enough to cover the gentleman's Indians. Why is not the better course under that provision for the gentleman to pursue, to call upon the administrative officers of the Government to examine into this question and see if these lands ought not to be allotted?
Mr. CRAWFORD. I do not think this is a reservation in that sense.
Mr. MANN. Is this agricultural or forest land?
Mr. CAMPBELL. Forest.
Mr. SHERMAN. Is it all forest land?
Mr. CRAWFORD. Yes; a large percentage is forest land. It is valuable on account of the timber. This is not a reservation in the sense that the law designates, in that it was purchased by money belonging to these Indians out of a fund that had accumulated in the Treasury of the United States after the treaty of 1835 and subsequent treaties, and the Government used that money and bought the lands known as the "Qualla Reservation," and located them on the reservation. Prior to 1895 they lived promiscuously through this section, but the Government purchased all the lands of the white people inside this particular boundary, and paid for them, and moved the whites out of this reservation, some 75,000 acres—100,000 acres at that time.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to suggest that, in my judgment, the best plan for him is to formulate a bill covering the condition of the Indians and allotting the lands among them, and providing that if one Indian gets a valuable piece of land and another gets a piece of land that is not so valuable, then that the distinction be made, as we have done in a great many instances in the West, that the one receiving the land which is less valuable shall receive more acreage. I think that a bill along that line is proper.
Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman means a partition proceeding?
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. No; let Congress do it by act. The gentleman will find several acts, especially in Oklahoma and Indian Territory, of a similar nature.
Mr. CRAWFORD. I wanted to ascertain whether there is to be any definite policy on the part of the Government in regard to the future of these Indians.
Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I can suggest to the gentleman that in the Creek lands in Indian Territory he will find legislation along that line.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.
The Clerk read as follows:

For support and education of 100 Indian pupils at the Indian school, Bismarck, N. Dak., and for pay of superintendent, $18,200;
For general repairs and improvements, $2,000;
In all, $20,200.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I desire to reserve the point of order to this provision. Is this a new school?
Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Is it a nonreservation school?
Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Is the gentleman going to recommend that we provide another nonreservation school?
Mr. SHERMAN. It has been provided for, and we are simply appropriating for its maintenance this year, for the education of children there. The school is there.
Mr. FITZGERALD. And no children in it?
Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is just completed.
Mr. FITZGERALD. Will they need any children in view of the fact that the Commissioner thinks that half a dozen others should be abandoned?
Mr. SHERMAN. I think there will be no trouble in filling the school with 100 pupils.
Mr. FITZGERALD. There is no trouble in filling any school that will be built, even if one was built in every State in the Union. There might be some trouble, but they would find the pupils. Does the gentleman think that we should start in now with this as a new school in view of the fact that we have already adopted a provision looking toward discontinuing the schools that have been in existence for some time? Will this not only add another difficulty to the abandonment of these nonreservation schools?
Mr. SHERMAN. Well, but the school is there. We have made the mistake, if mistake it be, of providing for a school there, buying a plant, erecting buildings, making provision for the education and maintenance of a limited number of pupils there. Now, the plant is there. The question is, Shall we utilize what we have expended our money for?
Mr. MANN. The plant is there, but the school is not there.
Mr. SHERMAN. The plant is there, but no pupils have ever been educated there; it is a new plant.
Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman believe, in view of the recommendation of the Commissioner, it is advisable to open a new Government reservation school for the purpose of turning it over to the State or somebody else?
Mr. SHERMAN. I should think it would be better to use the plants we have until we dispose of them.
Mr. MANN. The Commissioner says it is not advisable to use the other plants we have if we can get rid of them.
Mr. SHERMAN. Of course, the Commissioner says so, and I am fond of the Commissioner; he is a fine man, and I called his attention to this inconsistent proposition that came to the committee from the Department. He sends to us through the Treasury Department and through the head of his own Department, the Secretary of the Interior, estimates that all of these schools be continued, and then he sent to us a report in which he most vehemently inveighs against their continuance.
Mr. MANN. And then he winds up by saying, if the gentleman will pardon me, that there are certain difficulties in doing away with all of these schools (page 29 of his report)—

Because the Government has built up a system which changed conditions have rendered no longer effective or good, there is no reason why it should continue pouring out its money in the same interest when it can put this money to better use elsewhere. This is poor economy, and worse progress.

Now, why, in the face of that, did we open a new school?
Mr. SHERMAN. The school was estimated for. I presume the estimates originated in the Indian Bureau; they certainly passed through the hands of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of the Treasury and reached us, and that is why the item is in the bill.
Mr. MANN. Oh, I understand while the distinguished gentleman from South Dakota——
Mr. SHERMAN. North Dakota.
Mr. MANN. The distinguished gentleman from South Dakota was a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, there were several items put into the bill for the benefit of the Dakotas which might have well been left out, but is that a reason why, when the Commissioner of Indian Affairs reports against these things, we ought to proceed further with the iniquity, as he would call it.
Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I do not characterize it by such a term as that; I do not consider it an iniquity. I do think that the creation of several of these schools was ill-advised. I have believed for some years that we ought not to extend this system of nonreservation schools, and I have opposed the creation of new school plants, sometimes successfully, and, as I recollect it, sometimes unsuccessfully, and I think this is one of the instances in which I was not successful in my opposition. I have felt for some little time that we had all the nonreservation schools needed, even for a continuance of that system, and therefore I have opposed the creation of new schools, but this one is here——

Mr. GRONNA. As I understand it, the Commissioner has not recommended against this particular item, has he?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, he has not recommended against any particular item, except in the hearing before the committee he did specifically state four or five schools could be readily dispensed with.

Mr. GRONNA. I also find in the report that the Wahpeton School last year had $35,300, and this year $20,200, so that by allowing this $20,000 for this school the appropriation will not be any larger for the State than it was last year.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is in error about the amount allowed for the support of the school last year. For Wahpeton the amount allowed for the support of the school last year was $18,300, not $30,000.

Mr. GRONNA. I mean it was $18,000 for maintenance, $2,000 for general repairs, and $15,000 for specific purposes.

Mr. MANN. That is what it was last year. The extra amount was for a specific purpose last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. In view of the statement made, I move to strike out the paragraph, commencing line 18 down to and including line 24, page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, strike out all of lines 18 to 24, both included.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me, from the statement of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs have given an illustration of how not to conduct a great Department of the Government. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] states that in the regular estimates submitted to Congress estimates were submitted for all the nonreservation schools. The report of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs recommends that most of them be abandoned. The Secretary of the Interior, in his report which I have, says, speaking of Indian schools, that—

> The educational work among the Indians demands most earnest consideration by Congress. The Commissioner has shown clearly his reasons for recommending the discontinuance of almost all the nonreservation schools. The experiment of placing Indian children in schools far removed from their natural surroundings has not been a success. The amount of money spent in such schools would be of very much greater permanent advantage if expended on the reservation for the purpose of teaching the boys and girls how to do things which they naturally will have to do as men and women.

Yet, in spite of the fact that the Commissioner has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the head of the Department of the Interior that practically all of the nonreservation schools, some twenty-seven in number, be abandoned, yet they are asking $22,000 to start a school at a plant in which pupils never yet have been instructed. The movement was initiated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to commence the discontinuance of these nonreservation schools. They must be discontinued some day, and yet Representatives from every State in which these nonreservation schools are located immediately protest against the commencement of the policy. Within the past six years to my knowledge the action of Congress in allotting lands among the Indians has made inadvisable the sending of the Indians from their allotments to the nonreservation schools. I am convinced from some information that I obtained in a visit to a number of reservations that the money spent in the reservation day schools is of much greater advantage in the development and civilization of the Indian than the money spent in these nonreservation schools. I could speak of some instances. I met an Indian from Carlisle at Asbury Park. He was a member of the Carlisle Indian band. He was 27 years of age and he had been twelve years in the Carlisle school. He was taking special courses in music and football, and I undertake to say that in a great many of these schools, despite the fact that Carlisle has done excellent work, there are Indians in these schools who are there not for the benefit that they will derive from the course of studies, but they add materially to the means of advertising the schools. This Indian was an Indian from my State, from the Seneca Reservation, and he had 60 per cent, at least, of white blood in him. Yet the Government was paying for his maintenance and supposed education at Carlisle.

I believe that it would be a great mistake to start this school. It will pay the Government to let it stand there idle until after an investigation it may be determined what can be done with it. I believe it would be a great benefit to the Government if by any means the State of North Dakota would agree to accept the entire plant for nothing and use it for public school purposes. We would be relieved of an institution that will be useless to us, and the money that will be spent there can well be spent to better advantage elsewhere.

Mr. GRONNA. I hope this amendment will not prevail. This school has been built. The buildings are there, and they have a sufficient number of pupils to attend school. I can see no reason why an appropriation should not be made for this school as well as the other schools in the State.

Mr. MADDEN. Do I understand the gentleman to say that he hopes the House will allow authority for the construction of the school?

Mr. GRONNA. It has already been constructed.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say it had not.

Mr. GRONNA. This is for the maintenance.

Mr. HINSHAW. How close to Bismarck is this proposed school?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know exactly. About a mile; it is very close to Bismarck.

Mr. HINSHAW. And how close to the school is the Indian reservation?

Mr. GRONNA. Not very far from there. I understand a few Indians are living on the Fort Abraham Lincoln Reservation, and at Cannon Ball a large number of Indians have their homes.

Mr. HINSHAW. And that is not far from Bismarck?

Mr. GRONNA. No; and a large number from the Standing Rock Agency will attend this school.

Mr. HINSHAW. And will that afford a hundred pupils?

Mr. GRONNA. From the best authority that I have; yes.

Mr. HINSHAW. Where are the Indians on the reservaton now being educated—the young Indians?

Mr. GRONNA. Nowhere, that I know of, except at the reservation schools.

Mr. MADDEN. This is not on the reservation?

Mr. GRONNA. No; but it is not a great distance from the reservation.

Mr. MADDEN. They have some schools on the reservation that will do what is required to be done, have they not?

Mr. GRONNA. No; not what is required to be done.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not have another school on the reservation?

Mr. GRONNA. It has been deemed expedient and for the best interests of the Indians to have this school at Bismarck.

Mr. MADDEN. Is it intended to teach them the higher branches of education in this school, the same as in a high school?

Mr. GRONNA. This institution will be like all other nonreservation schools. It will afford the same opportunity to the students. Every facility is there for the education of 100 pupils.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, you mean, really, that the scholars are to be educated outside of the reservation?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I thought it was the policy of the Indian Office to abolish all the nonreservation schools as rapidly as they could be abolished.

Mr. GRONNA. Well, I do not know as to that.

Mr. MADDEN. Is not that recommended by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not believe that the Commissioner of Indian Affairs has recommended that that course should be pursued with reference to this particular school.

Mr. MADDEN. As I understood, the chairman of the committee said that he endeavored to prevent the establishment of this school, but that he was run over, notwithstanding his opposition.

Mr. GRONNA. The gentleman is mistaken; this school has been established.

Mr. MADDEN. Did I understand the chairman of the committee that that was the case?

Mr. SHERMAN. I think the gentleman understands me correctly. I had opposed for several years the establishment of nonreservation schools, and this was one that was established, and I opposed it with the others.

Mr. MADDEN. And they established it notwithstanding your opposition?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. And your opposition was based on what you thought was good business judgment?

Mr. SHERMAN. That was what I said, substantially.

Mr. GRONNA. But this does not include the construction of the building.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. GRONNA. It is simply for maintenance.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thought I had made that very clear. The buildings are there; every facility is there for the accommodation and education of a hundred pupils.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. How far is the schoolhouse from the reservation?

Mr. MADDEN. But there is $18,000 for maintenance and $2,000 for repairs.

Mr. SHERMAN. We always provide a small general fund from which little additions can be made, such as a board sidewalk or any little repairs necessary.

Mr. MANN. Do I understand the urgent deficiency bill, which has just come over from the Senate conferees, makes an appropriation to deepen the well for water at that place?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, I did not know that was in the deficiency bill.

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, perhaps I will be permitted to say a word in connection with this amendment, in view of the fact that I am on the committee and of the fact that I was somewhat instrumental in having this school established. The school is a new one. It is true that the chairman of the committee opposed its establishment, but the school is there, and properly so, and it ought not to be put in the class of what are termed nonreservation schools, because it is surrounded by Indian reservations, all of them very close at hand, and there is no question but what this school will be overflowing with voluntary pupils and that it will be far better for their education than sending them three, four, or five hundred or a thousand miles away to strange surroundings. They are practically in sight of their homes and where their relatives can reach them and they can visit their homes.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Are there any schools on the reservations?

Mr. MARSHALL. There are day schools on each one of the reservations.

Mr. STAFFORD. What superior advantages has this nonreservation school over the reservation schools for educating the Indians?

Mr. MARSHALL. The same advantage over a day school that a high school would have over an ordinary district school.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it intended to make this a technical and higher education school, rather than an ordinary grade school?

Mr. MARSHALL. This school will, of course, teach among other things the higher branches. In addition the pupils learn the white man's ways of living and are taught the domestic arts.

Mr. MADDEN. It costs $167 on nonreservation schools and $50 on reservation schools, does it not?

Mr. MARSHALL. That depends whether it is a day school or boarding school.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly not. They all receive the same in the reservation schools as the nonreservation schools; but this is a boarding school, and the gentleman understands that it costs more than $50 at a boarding school.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, certainly, to board the pupil.

Mr. SHERMAN. And this is a boarding school.

Mr. MADDEN. How much does it cost per annum?

Mr. SHERMAN. One hundred and sixty-seven dollars is the limit, and you must understand that the $167 not only clothes and feeds and houses and keeps him, but furnishes the use of books and all that sort of thing.

Mr. MADDEN. How much of this $167 does the pupil pay?

Mr. SHERMAN. Not any.

Mr. MADDEN. Then, why is it that we should not only feed and clothe him, but house him and furnish him with books?

Mr. SHERMAN. We clothe and feed and educate him and furnish him with books because the Indian was here upon this soil before the white man came [applause], and because we have always believed and have always maintained that a moral obligation existed that we should always do what was necessary for the civilization and betterment of the Indians who are growing up and for the care and burial of those who are going out of the world. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MADDEN. What is the net result?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. MADDEN. I want to ask the gentleman this question.

Mr. GRONNA. I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that the Indians on these particular reservations are an educated class of Indians. I could show the gentleman letters from some of these Indians that would surprise him.

Mr. MADDEN. What becomes of them after they become educated?

Mr. GRONNA. There are many of these Indians who go to farming. They are farming on the Devils Lake Indian Reservation, a few are on the Fort Abraham Lincoln Reservation, and on many other reservations in the State, and they are good farmers at that.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think we are justified in establishing boarding schools and paying $167 per annum for each pupil when we can educate them in all the branches that will make them as intellectual as they are required to be for farming purposes or for other purposes on the reservation as we can in the boarding schools?

Mr. MARSHALL. Mr. Chairman, this question of whether the Government should feed and clothe and house and educate these Indians does not enter into the question as to whether the schools should be reservation or nonreservation schools. It has no bearing on the amendment. There are many schools just exactly like this one, reservation and nonreservation, where Indians are fed and clothed and housed and cared for in every way, and justly so, as the chairman of this committee has so well said.

Mr. MADDEN. Let me ask you this question, then: Are there any such schools on the reservation that are within 2 or 3 miles of this proposed school?

Mr. MARSHALL. There are no such schools on the reservation that are nearest to this particular school, but there are many such schools on reservations in the United States and some on reservations in our State, some of which I have visited.

[The time of Mr. MARSHALL having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. MARSHALL. There is some logic in the arguments of those who oppose the nonreservation schools. I am not altogether in sympathy with the maintenance of a certain class of nonreservation schools, where the Indians are taken entirely away from their environment into another climate and conditions that are wholly strange to them. But here is a school surrounded by reservations near at hand. In taking an Indian to Bismarck, he is, to all intents and purposes, at home amid familiar scenes. His relatives and friends can visit him, and he can occasionally return home, for that matter, and it would be an outrageous thing to refuse to maintain a school as well located as this, the Government having just expended a hundred thousand dollars or more, on any such argument as would apply against the ordinary nonreservation schools. Along with its other advantages of location is coupled the important fact that Bismarck is the capital of our State, and the young men and women have before them constantly the object lesson in government—by no means a small factor. There are few schools more wisely located than the Bismarck school, and it is the plain duty of Congress to support it well. I therefore hope, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent of the House to take a very few moments to speak of a matter which is personal to myself and I think somewhat in the nature of a question of personal privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to address the committee on a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MANN. For how long?

Mr. DOUGLAS. For five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, there occurred an incident to-day in this building, but not in this Chamber, which seems to call for a word from me, not only, perhaps, on my own behalf, but on behalf of others. A distinguished gentleman from my own State read in the presence of a distinguished body assembled in this building certain letters which had passed between myself and a man at Athens, Ohio, whom I had recommended to the President for appointment to be postmaster at that place. How the distinguished gentleman came by those letters I do not know, and therefore I do not characterize it. How he happened to read this correspondence, which was private so far as I was concerned, I do not know, and so I will not characterize that. But perhaps because he did not have all the letters—I trust and believe that this was so—he failed to read one of them, which I ask may be read at the Clerk's desk. The person to whom the letter is addressed is the man in Athens of whom I have spoken.

The Clerk read as follows:

DECEMBER 10, 1907.

C. H. BRYSON, Esq., Athens, Ohio:

MY DEAR BRYSON: Your letter dated December 7 came to hand yesterday, and I confess that I am a little embarrassed about answering it, for although it is addressed to me, it seems something like an inspired attack upon the President and designed for publication.

Really, my dear Bryson, you hardly treated my letter of December 5 fairly, and do you not make a mountain of a molehill?

The whole of the paragraph of my letter from which you quote is as follows:

"Mr. Loeb said to me that of course the President had no disposition whatever to criticise your views, but that he saw no reason for appointing men entirely out of sympathy with his policies to public office, or something to that effect."

I then added:

"Now, my judgment is that you had better come to Washington to see me at once, and let us disabuse the President's mind of any such idea."

In other words, I felt sure, knowing the facts, that you were not out of sympathy with the President's policies, and I asked you to come here in order that we might disabuse the President's mind of such an impression.

As I said to you in a subsequent letter, I had not seen, nor have I seen, the newspaper articles and interviews which I understood had been called to the notice of the President, so whether you quete them fully or not I can not say; at the same time I feel very sure, from what I know of the manliness and fairness of the President and what I have seen of his generosity in regard to the opinions of others as to men and measures, it could not have been simply your quoted opinion in regard to Taft or FORAKER, or that Taft could not carry Ohio under "present complications," or that you favored Senator FORAKER'S return to the Senate that alone occasioned the President's action.

In regard to the statement that you quote as having been recently sent by you to the Cincinnati Tribune in regard to the President's policies, it is possible that this had not come to the attention of the President, and it was this and other matters that I desired to call to his attention if you had come and given me the opportunity.

With all you say concerning the desirability of continuing the Republican party in power, especially in the interests of the laboring men and others, I need hardly say that I quite fully agree, and doubtless the President would also agree. At the same time I do not at all agree with you either that Taft could not carry Ohio or that he could not, if nominated, be elected by an overwhelming majority in the electoral college.

However, I am not called upon in this connection to defend the President generally, or his policies, or to demonstrate the strength of Judge Taft before the people of this country. At the same time there is a remark in your letter which seems to me so patently and notoriously incorrect that I can not refrain from simply referring to it. You say: "The President wants no strong men. There is no place in his code for them." With such men about him as Root, Taft, Cortelyou, Garfield, and a host of others, devoted to him personally, holding up his hands in maintaining the interests of the people in every way and in every quarter, it is idle, if not preposterous, to say that he does not want strong men about him. No President in our time has had such faculty for selecting and winning the devoted allegiance to himself and to his work as President Roosevelt.

In conclusion let me say that while I thank you for your very kindly and truthful way of treating any differences between ourselves, present or past, in regard to our choice for the Presidency, I think the more kindly and simple way for you to treat my letter of December 5 was just as it was meant, and that was to give you a friendly opportunity to do what we were both interested in doing, since I had sent your name unsolicited by you to the President, to come here and correct what seemed to be a mistaken impression concerning you at the Executive offices.

Meanwhile I remain, very sincerely, yours,

ALBERT DOUGLAS.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Chairman, this correspondence was read in connection with certain criticisms of the President and of his alleged disposition not to appoint men to office unless they favored a certain man for the Republican nomination for President. I simply want to say that having received the letter to which this letter just read was a reply and in which the writer, Mr. Bryson, insisted that, while he favored rightly the policies of the President, he had not been in favor of the nomination of Mr. Taft, but had been exceedingly friendly to another distinguished gentleman from Ohio; I say upon receipt of that letter I went to see the President, and not finding him I talked to Mr. Loeb, the secretary of the President, and frankly communicated to him the substantial contents of the letter read by the distinguished gentleman at the other end of the Capitol, and in spite of that and with a knowledge of that, the President nevertheless sent Bryson's name to the Senate and he was confirmed and is now postmaster at Athens, Ohio. [Applause.] I say I think it was due to more than myself to make this explanation, because, in my judgment, the whole incident, from beginning to end, illustrates—not the disposition of the President to wage hostile war upon men who are not of his way of thinking, but rather with the same generosity and broadmindedness which I spoke of in the letter just read, to appoint men who are, as I then thought this man to be, and still trust him to be, a man in every way fit to attend to the business as postmaster at Athens, Ohio. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LONGWORTH having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3024. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Maj. Gen. Oliver O. Howard, retired, to be lieutenant-general United States Army;

S. 3388. An act to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch; and

S. 627. An act to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of the Apaches, Kiowas, Comanches, Wichitas, and affiliated bands who have been collected in the reservations set apart for their use and occupation, $25,000.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 14, page 33: "That section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 5, 1906, entitled 'An act to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation in Oklahoma Territory,' is hereby so modified and amended as to read, 'That the money arising from the sale of said lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of said tribes of Indians, and said deposit shall draw 4 per cent interest per annum; and the principal and interest shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct.'

"The funds derived from the sale of the land as provided in the act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 550) shall be deposited and expended in the same manner."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order on the amendment that it is a legislative provision.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will reserve the point of order until the gentleman makes an explanation.

Mr. FERRIS. I have just sent to the desk an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill which I am sure needs and deserves the attention of this committee. It is offered in the interest of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians of my district in Oklahoma. I offered it, believing this committee had a true desire to avoid any omission in this bill that would work a hardship to the real beneficiaries of the measure. This matter was for the first time called to my attention yesterday by the chief of the Comanche tribe of Indians, the chief of the Kiowa tribe of Indians, and an educated Indian that accompanied them to interpret and assist them.

While it seems to be true that this matter has never been urged before the Indian Committee in a proper way, still the matter was referred to them by a letter from the Secretary on December 11, 1907, dealing with the matter quite fully. A copy in full is herewith set out at length:

[Senate Document No. 88, Sixtieth Congress, first session.]

DISPOSITION OF MONEY ARISING FROM SALES OF LAND IN KIOWA COMANCHE, AND APACHE INDIAN RESERVATIONS IN OKLAHOMA.

Letter from the Secretary of the Interior with respect to the disposition of the money arising from the sales of land in the Kiowa, Comanche and Apache Indian reservations in Oklahoma.

December 11, 1907.—Referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 10, 1907.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the following acts passed by the Fifty-ninth Congress, first session, relative to the sale of the lands of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians in Oklahoma:

"Act March 20, 1906 (34 Stats. L., 80).—An act for the establishment of town sites and for the sale of lots within the common lands of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians in Oklahoma.

"Act June 5, 1906 (34 Stats. L., 213).—An act to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory.

"Act June 28, 1906 (34 Stats. L., 550).—An act giving preference right to actual settlers on pasture reserve No. 3 to purchase land leased to them for agricultural purposes in Comanche County, Okla."

The act of March 2, 1906, provided that the land should be surveyed into lots, blocks, streets, etc., and after appraisal to be sold at public auction to the highest bidder—"the net proceeds of the sales shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, with interest to be paid them at the rate of 4 per cent per annum or shall be paid to them per capita, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The act of June 5 and 28, 1906, relative to the sale of 505,000 acres of grazing and wood lands provides:

"That the money arising from the sale of such lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of said tribes of Indians, and said deposit of money shall draw 4 per cent per annum; and the principal and interest of said deposit shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in such manner as Congress may direct."

The United States Indian agent for the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians has recommended that the acts of June 5 and 28, 1906, be so amended that the principal and interest may be expended for the Indians in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests, which recommendation meets with the approval of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

If the two acts referred to are so amended, they will then conform with the act of March 20, 1906, in so far as each relates to the disposition, by the Secretary of the Interior, of the proceeds from the sale of the lands. For the period ended June 30, 1907, there has been received from the sale of the lands under the acts of June 5 and 28, 1906, the sum of $846,397.93, but no receipts under the act of March 20, 1906, from the sale of the town lots, had been deposited in the Treasury. You will see that although the Indians now have a large sum in the Treasury to their credit, it can not be used until the Congress has so directed or the law as it now exists is amended.

There is attached hereto an item modifying and amending the acts of June 5 and 28, 1906, which is transmitted to the Congress for insertion in the Indian appropriation bill for 1909.

Very respectfully,

JAMES RUDOLPH GARFIELD, Secretary.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE.

ITEM.

That section 2 of the act of Congress approved June 5, 1906, entitled "An act to open for settlement 505,000 acres of land in the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indian Reservation, in Oklahoma Territory," is hereby so modified and amended as to read: "That the money arising from the sale of said lands shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States and placed to the credit of said tribes of Indians, and said deposit shall draw 4 per centum interest per annum; and the principal and interest shall be expended for the benefit of said Indians in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may direct."

ITEM.

The funds derived from the sale of the land as provided in the act of June 28, 1906 (34 Stat. L., 550), shall be deposited and expended in the same manner.

You will be interested to observe that the only change made in existing law is that it empowers the Secretary of the Interior to distribute the funds belonging to these Indians rather than require them to procure an act of Congress each time that necessity demands a distribution thereof. It only affects the money that belongs to these identical Indians under existing law. The urgent necessity for this amendment was presented to me yesterday. On yesterday the chief of the Comanche tribe of Indians, Quanab Parker, the chief of the Kiowa tribe of Indians, Apheatone, and an Indian educated at Carlisle school, from Oklahoma, named Lone Wolf, came here as a delegation to present this matter. They gave me this series of facts that, I think, will be interesting to this committee. They tell me that heretofore money has been available for distribution among them to the amount of $50 per capita each six months, that the last two payments, by reason of their money not being available to them under existing law, were cut down from $50 to $30, and at this time there is within their reach only $13 per capita. They bring this situation to my attention, and I take it that I am doing right in bringing it to the attention of this committee.

They say that their credit and expenditures were based upon the amount they had received in the past. They expected to receive $50 at the last payment, six months ago, which was in September, and $50 each at the next succeeding payment, which is now due. Those payments were cut by reason of the fact that the two funds, one of which contains $1,500,000 and the other $870,000, approximately, were not available except by act of Congress. Congress at that time did not have this condition of affairs called to its attention and it did not at that time for some reason make sufficient appropriation for these Indians. That left an amount to them which according to their regular quota they had been receiving. Last fall the hard times came and merchants refused to extend credit to the Comanche and Kiowa Indians. The Indians had expected to receive $50 each and in lieu thereof they received only $30. That left them in debt and the winter months coming on and their stock thin in flesh, and spring is now coming on and their payment is due. They need the money to buy the necessaries of life; they need the money to buy farming tools and agricultural implements, seeds, and to pay their honest debts.

That being true, these people who are not educated and able to come and present this matter to the chairman of the committee in the manner that it should be—those Indian citizens who have not been able to call the attention of their representatives to the matter in time as it should be, so it could be submitted to the committee, come here at this late time, diffident and backward as they are and uneducated as they may be, and now ask that this Congress permit them to have their money as they have heretofore done and to let it come through the Secretary of the Interior. The only effect that my amendment has is that we let the Secretary of the Interior pay it to them as he thinks proper and right, and inasmuch as there is only $13 apiece to pay them at this semiyearly payment, now it is wholly insufficient. The Secretary has written a long letter on this situation. I will not consume the time of the committee to read it all, but I will read his conclusion, so that you will readily see it is necessary and that it is an important matter. He says:

The United States Indian agent for the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians has recommended that the acts of June 5 and June 28, 1906, be so amended that the principal and interest may be expended for the Indians in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may deem for their best interests, which recommendation meets the approval of the Commissioner on Indian Affairs. If the two acts referred to are so amended they will conform with the act of March 20, 1906.

I may say that relates to their town-lots sale, and there is no money in that fund at all—

In so far as that relates to the disposition by the Secretary of the Interior of the proceeds from the sale of lands for the period ending June 30, 1907, there has been received from the sale of the lands under the acts of June 5 and June 28, 1906, the sum of $846,397.93; but no receipts under the act of March 20, 1906, from the sale of town lots has been deposited in the Treasury. You will see that although the Indians now have a large sum in the Treasury to their credit, it can not be used until the Congress has so directed, or the law as it now exists is amended. There is attached hereto an item modifying and amending the acts of June 5 and June 28, 1906, which is transmitted to the Congress for insertion in the Indian appropriation bill for 1908.

That is the identical amendment I sent to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman may be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, because this is a matter that comes home to my people. I am familiar with the situation. I live within 10 miles of the Indian chief who is now here. They are all within my district and within my county, practically all of them. Now, summing this matter up, it amounts simply to this: It merely lets the Secretary of the Interior make these payments to those people as they need them and obviates the necessity of having Congress pass a bill every time these uneducated but honest and unsuspecting people want a little payment of this money, which is their own. Now, I hope it will not be the disposition of the chairman, by reason of it coming up in an irregular way, to raise the point of order, thereby making this committee guilty of an omission of which I do not believe they desire to take advantage.

I again submit perhaps it was not presented to the committee as it should have been done. I do submit it was referred to the committee at least back in December of last year, so I am not blaming the committee or trying to censure them for not including it in the appropriation bill, neither do I desire to lay the blame at my own door or at the door of any of my colleagues, for it is a matter that these people did not call to my attention at the time the Committee on Indian Affairs was making up the appropriation bill. That their education and business attainments would not permit them to properly bring it before you, I confess is true, Mr. Chairman, so I ask now in the interest of these people that Congress permit this money, their own money, if you please, to be paid to them through the Secretary of the Interior, who knows and is in closer touch with their wants and necessities than this Congress is to-day; that at times, particularly when this Congress is not in session, the Secretary of the Interior can do justice, and properly so, to these people in the disposition of their own money. I desire again to say I hope the chairman of the committee, even though it comes here irregularly and perhaps was not properly presented to his committee in a regular way, will not take advantage of the matter. These people have come a long way to present this important matter to the American Congress, and I submit if not presented in shipshape their status affords ample opportunity for a dispensation of any harsh or rigid parliamentary rule. The Indian Office asks for this relief, a matter which the Secretary of the Interior asks for and approves; a matter which I, as their Representative in Congress, living within 10 miles of the chief of that tribe and in the middle of the entire tribe, ask for on my own responsibility to have this right accorded to the Secretary of the Interior, to the end that justice may be done. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I dislike exceedingly to invoke the rule against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma. It is almost painful to do it after listening to his earnest and eloquent appeal in behalf of these Indians, but the proposition, Mr. Chairman, that his amendment permits is a distribution of a fund which is measured by millions and it is a matter which has not yet received the attention of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I think I would not be justified, Mr. Chairman, in charge of this bill, in withdrawing the point of order, because I am sure, Mr. Chairman, the committee have the right to expect me to protect them as a whole in all of these matters of such great consequence as this——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the chairman please let me suggest one thing?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman, although I was in the middle of a sentence.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I am very anxious these Indians should have the relief they are asking for, and I desire to ask if the chairman will not consent to a change of the amendment so we could limit the amount say to fifty or a hundred thousand dollars and relieve them of their present pressing wants.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee would not feel justified in withdrawing the point of order against an amendment which involves the possibility of so great an expenditure. I am willing to do this much, Mr. Chairman. I am entirely willing that this matter—it is almost time for the committee to rise—to go over until the morning with the point of order pending against it, and in the meantime to consult with the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs and see if the majority of them will authorize me to agree upon some amendment to accomplish the end which the gentleman from Oklahoma desires.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Before the gentleman does that I desire to call attention to this fact. The original act provided that this money should be expended as Congress directs. The Secretary of the Interior simply asks us that a slight amendment be passed to take that power away from Congress and place it in his hands. The Committee on Indian Affairs will not be able to make any agreement that will permit that to be done on this Indian bill. I want to call the gentleman's attention to this fact. I recollect being in Oklahoma and investigating claims of $450,000 that were held there by traders against the Osage Nation, who traded with the nation with the anticipation of the money being collected under certain distributions. About half of the claims, as I recollect, were repudiated by Congress, and I shall insist that the Committee on Indian Affairs take plenty of time to determine in what manner the three or four million dollars to be realized from the sale of their land should be distributed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly. I agree with the gentleman. My thought in suggesting that it go over until to-morrow morning was not to permit the Secretary to have authority to disburse this entire fund, running into the millions, but that we might reach an agreement by which the Secretary might be authorized at the present time to distribute perhaps $50,000 or $100,000 of it. That was all that I had in mind.

Mr. FITZGERALD. There is nothing in the letter which shows any necessity, except a desire of the Department to have this control which Congress, when it deliberated upon this letter, refused to give it.

Mr. MANN. I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] after he consults the members of his committee about withdrawing the point of order, he had better consult the opinion of the House upon the subject, too.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course, Mr. Chairman, every Representative has the same right with every other Representative as to raising a point of order on any proposition. But I was raising the point of order here as representing the committee rather than as an individual, which I would do about any amendment of any consequence on this bill, of course. After that, of course, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] or my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] could raise a point of order, and, if either of them say now that it will be impossible for us to bring in any modified provision which they will consent to having incorporated in the bill, I will not ask unanimous consent to have it go through.

Mr. MANN. Let me ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] if it would not be feasible for the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] to present a bill and have it considered by the committee and reported to the House, covering this question?

Mr. SHERMAN. It would be feasible, most certainly; and let me say in that connection that the Committee on Indian Affairs have had at least two meetings since they reported their appropriation bill, at which this matter could have been presented, and they could have passed on the subject and instructed the chairman or some other member of the committee to offer a proposition as a committee amendment.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will yield for just one word, I think I suggested the reason for that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, the gentleman did.

Mr. FERRIS. And the very object of legislation, I believe, is to reach contingencies and Indian frailties, and it is one of those frailties that I do not hold anybody responsible for, and neither do the Indians.

Mr. SHERMAN. But the gentleman's proposition is so awfully broad. It is not simply to permit the Secretary to give to each of them now $50, but his amendment provides that the Secretary can distribute all the interest and all of the principal.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to say as to his suggestion as to taking it over until to-morrow, if he will let me bring those Indian chiefs before him and present the matter to him, I think he will join with me in presenting it to this House much more forcibly than I was able to do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, with a point of order pending, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. PERKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that the committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15219—the Indian appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS ON HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report by the Acting Secretary of State covering a note from the Imperial German ambassador by which is communicated the acceptance by the International Congress on Hygiene and Demography of the invitation extended to it in pursuance of the joint resolution of Congress approved February 26, 1907, to hold its next session at the city of Washington in 1910.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 10, 1908.

AMERICAN PASSPORTS IN RUSSIA.

Mr. CAPRON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to introduce a privileged resolution from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and I ask that the resolution, together with the communication of the Department of State and the regulation, be printed, and I desire to give notice that I will call it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. MANN. Can we have the resolution reported, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. CAPRON] desire to have it printed in the RECORD?

Mr. CAPRON. It was the desire of the committee that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The resolution and the report?

Mr. CAPRON. The resolution and the letter from the Department of State.

The SPEAKER. The report covers the letter from the Department of State.

Mr. CAPRON. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Can we have the title of the resolution reported, so that we can have some idea of what it is?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

House resolution 223.

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he hereby is, requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, the correspondence relating to negotiations with the Russian Government concerning American passports since the adoption of the resolution by the House of Representatives relating to that subject on the 21st day of April, 1904; and also a copy of the circular letter issued by the Department of State to American citizens advising them that upon the Department receiving satisfactory information that they did not intend to go to Russian territory or that they had permission from the Russian Government to return, their application for passport would be reconsidered; and also a copy of the notice accompanying such letter issued by the Department of State, dated May 28, 1907.

The letter and notice are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, February 8, 1908.

The Hon. ADIN B. CAPRON,
Chairman of the Subcommittee, Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of February 5, bringing to this Department's attention a resolution introduced in the House of Representatives February 4 by Mr. GOLDFOGLE, of New York, asking that the Secretary of State be requested to communicate, if not incompatible with the public interests, copies of correspondence with the Russian Government concerning the validity of American passports since the adoption by the House of Representatives of the resolution of April 21, 1904, on that subject; also a copy of the circular letter and notice issued by the Department to American citizens who desire to proceed to Russia.

In the volume of Foreign Relations of the United States for 1904, page 790, may be found the beginning of the correspondence between this Government and the Russian Government when the resolution of April 21, 1904, was submitted to that Government.

It is not deemed compatible with the best public interests at this time to communicate the subsequent correspondence.

I inclose a copy of the printed circular or notice now in use and which, before the introduction of the resolution, had been substituted for the former circular, to which some objections were made.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

ELIHU ROOT.

RUSSIA.

Notice to American citizens, formerly subjects of Russia, who contemplate returning to that country.

Under Russian law a Russian subject who becomes a citizen of another country without the consent of the Russian Government is deemed to have committed an offense for which he is liable to arrest and punishment if he returns without previously obtaining the permission of the Russian Government.

This Government dissents from this provision of Russian law, but an American citizen formerly a subject of Russia who returns to that country places himself within the jurisdiction of Russian law and can not expect immunity from its operations.

No one is admitted to Russia unless his passport has been viséed, or indorsed, by a Russian diplomatic or consular representative.

ELIHU ROOT.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, January 25, 1908.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

JOINT COMMISSION ON POST-OFFICE.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a preliminary report from the Joint Commission appointed by Congress in reference to investigating the business methods of the postal system, with the request that it be printed and referred.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Preliminary report of the Joint Commission on the business methods of the postal service under act of Congress approved March 2, 1907.

Mr. OVERSTREET. This is simply to be printed and referred under the rules.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman object to its being printed in the RECORD?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, this is a very voluminous report. It submits the report of the expert accountants, and it is presented at this time to make public the investigation had thus far.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire it to be printed and recommitted?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, it will be printed, under the rules of the House, with a limited number of copies. I have no request to make at this time for additional copies.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman desires to have it referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It was submitted for reference and to be printed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. How does it come in? It is not privileged.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is for the purpose of giving information to the House. It is a preliminary report.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman has no right to make that report in that way, unless it is privileged under the rules, and I have been trying to get the attention of the Chair to make that objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to make the report.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is what I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And have it published as a document?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I made the request simply for the purpose of making it public.

The SPEAKER. And that it be printed and referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That was the request I made. In order to permit gentlemen to hear me again, I renew it. I ask unanimous consent to submit a preliminary report from the Joint Postal Commission on the business methods of the Department, and ask that it be printed and referred. Now, under the rules when such a document is reported, there are a limited number of copies printed—I think about 1,600—and if there should be a demand at a later day for a greater number of copies, provision could be made by either a joint resolution or an order to reprint, but at the present time the only purpose is to have it printed and referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the document is referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3024. An act to authorize the President of the United States to appoint Gen. Oliver O. Howard, retired, to be lieutenant-general United States Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 3388. An act to correct the military record of William A. Hinsch—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 627. An act to encourage the holding of an Alaska-Yukon-Pacific Exposition at the city of Seattle, State of Washington, in the year 1909—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

REDUCTION OF SKILLED LABOR IN NAVY-YARDS.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy inform the House of Representatives why a considerable reduction is being made in the skilled labor force employed at the Washington Navy-Yard and at other navy-yards of the country.

The report (by Mr. Foss) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the resolution (H. Res. 227) requesting the Secretary of the Navy to inform the House of Representatives why a considerable reduction is being made in the skilled-labor force employed at the Washington and other navy-yards of the country, having had the same under consideration, report as follows: In line 1, after the word "Navy," insert the words "be requested to." In line 2 strike out all after the word "Representatives." Strike out all of lines 3 and 4 and add the following: "If not incompatible with the public interests, what reduction, if any, has been made in the skilled-labor force employed in the Washington and other navy-yards and the reason therefor."

When so amended, the committee recommend that the resolution do pass.

Mr. FOSS. I call for the adoption of the report, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman make that as a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendments will be agreed to, and the resolution as amended agreed to.

Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order upon that proposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Too late.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not understand the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. I raise the point of order on this resolution, that it is evident it is not privileged.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I think it is too late to make the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point of order is too late.

Mr. MANN. I made the point of order as soon as the resolution was read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; the Speaker said that without objection the amendment would be adopted and the resolution agreed to, and so declared it.

Mr. DALZELL. The resolution asks for the Secretary's reasons, does it not?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state that the resolution was reported as a privileged resolution, and so announced by the gentleman from Illinois, and it had to be read to find out what it was. Certain amendments were reported, and then the Chair stated that, without objection, the amendments would be considered as agreed to, and the resolution as amended agreed to; but the Chair is of the opinion, under the conditions, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is in time if he desires to make his point of order upon the resolution.

Mr. MANN. The resolution is not a privileged resolution. Very plainly, both the original resolution and the resolution as amended——

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. The resolution provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall give the reasons why he does certain things, and that is not privileged. It is not calling for information as to facts. The first part of the resolution is privileged; the latter part is not, as I take it. He might write a book under that request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest that the matter go over until after the reading of the Journal in the morning. The Chair would like to examine the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the matter going over, but I do not expect to be here to-morrow morning, and for that reason I have brought it in this evening. If it is a privileged resolution, it must be reported within this time.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. WALDO. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he strike out the request for reasons, and make it read that the Secretary be requested to state the facts for such reduction, and he will get what he wants, and it will be privileged.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This does not ask for an opinion; it asks for reasons, and the reasons must be facts. Therefore this is privileged. It is not what the Secretary may imagine. The resolution calls for the facts upon which the discharges of these men were based.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman from New York is anxious for some reasons to be given which will enable him to make a speech, I suppose.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I doubt his ability to give reasons, but he can state the facts.

The SPEAKER. Without intimating an opinion as to whether the point of order is or is not well taken, the Chair would prefer that the matter go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. FOSS. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, pending the point of order, asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me very bad practice to ask a Department to give the reasons why they do so and so. There is a method of communicating with Congress. They can communicate the facts; but if we start out asking each officer of the Government why he does thus and so, we enter upon a very bad practice, and therefore I object.

CHURCH CLAIMS IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I have filed the report of the Committee on Insular Affairs on the bill H. R. 16143, the Catholic Church claim bill for the Philippine Islands; and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES], who is not here to-day, asked me, in his absence, to request five days' leave for the minority to file their views.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks five days' leave to the minority upon the bill referred to to file their views. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEASING OF CERTAIN MINERAL LANDS.

By unanimous consent the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3967) permitting the Secretary of the Interior to lease certain mineral lands, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED:

The Speaker announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 4048. An act granting an increase of pension to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows of such soldiers and sailors.

S. 2929. An act to authorize the Idaho and Washington Northern Railroad to construct a bridge across the Pend d'Oreille River, in the State of Washington.

COURT OF APPEALS, DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on the Public Lands was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 16090) relating to jurisdiction on appeals in the court of appeals of the District of Columbia in cases relating to public and Indian lands, and for other purposes, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HINSHAW. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 1 minute p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for construction of certain works in the Light-House Establishment and recommending legislation for an increase of limit of cost—to the Committees on Appropriations and Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Chief of Ordnance recommending legislation in relation to mileage of ordnance officers—to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for installation of a card index system for the records of the Pension Bureau—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for certain works in the Light-House Establishment not heretofore authorized—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a report as to rents received from property on square No. 143 in Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for completing light-house on Staten Island and raising the West Bank Light—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the superintendent of the Washington, Alexandria and Mount Vernon Railway Company, transmitting the report for the year ended December 31, 1907—to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of reappropriation of certain balances to the credit of works in the light-house department—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting a report as to rents received from property on square No. 324 in Washington, D. C.—to the Committee on Ways and Means and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the sloop James, Robert Palmer, master—to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Perry Rennoe, administrator of estate of Reverdy A. Rennoe, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. SULZER, from the Committee on Patents, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15841) to amend section 4896 of the Revised Statutes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 695), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. BYRD, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12773) granting to the city of Woodward, in the State of Oklahoma, lot 2, in block 48, for park and other public purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 693), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. PARSONS, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. OFFICERS IN THE CIVIL WAR.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the War Department has caused to be printed two very interesting memoranda prepared in the Military Secretary's office, War Department, one being a memorandum relative to the general officers in the armies of the United States during the civil war, 1861–1865, and the other being a memorandum relative to the general officers appointed by the president of the Confederate States in the armies of the Confederate States, 1861–1865. There is considerable demand for these pamphlets, and as the supply has been exhausted I ask that each of them may be printed as a Senate document.

Mr. CLAPP. We can not hear what the Senator says.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks unanimous consent that two pamphlets presented by him be printed as a document. One relates to the general officers of the United States Army during the civil war and the other to the general officers of the army of the Confederate States.

Mr. CULBERSON. I ask that they may be printed separately.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is that they be printed separately. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. DIXON. The bill (S. 208) for the survey and allotmeut of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all the surplus lands after allotment, was reported by me with amendments from the Committee on Indian Affairs on the 6th instant. Serious errors occur in the printed bill, and I ask for a reprint.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECORDS OF UNITED STATES HISTORY.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Library:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the American Historical Association be requested to include in its next annual report to the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution a statement of the gaps now existing in the published records of the United States history and a plan for so directing the documentary historical publications of the Government as to supply these deficiencies.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 14382) to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SALARIES IN THE EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith for the consideration of the Congress estimates for salaries in the Executive Departments and establishments prepared by the Committee on Grades and Salaries under the Executive order of June 11, 1907.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, February 11, 1908.

SURVEY OF ST. AUGUSTINE HARBOR, FLORIDA.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution on the Calendar, providing for a survey of the harbor of St. Augustine, Fla., and the entrance thereto, etc.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. BRYAN on the 31st ultimo and reported by Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas, from the Committee on Commerce, on the 10th instant, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey of the harbor of St. Augustine, St. Johns County, Fla., and the entrance thereto through the North and Matanzas rivers and the Matanzas Inlet, with a view to determining the formation of a channel of minimum depth of 16 feet and a width of 300 feet from the city of St. Augustine across its outer bar to the Atlantic Ocean, and the cost of construction of necessary jetties, breakwaters, and dredging in order to accomplish said purpose.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

SURVEY OF NEW SMYRNA INLET, FLORIDA.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution on the Calendar providing for a survey of New Smyrna Inlet, Florida.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The concurrent resolution was read and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to cause an examination and survey to be made of New Smyrna Inlet, in the county of Volusia and State of Florida, with a view to deepening the same, and to submit estimates therefor.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President, let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Calendar, under Rule VIII, will be proceeded with.

SNAKE RIVER DAM, WASHINGTON.

The bill (H. R. 7618) to authorize the Benton Water Company, its successors or assigns, to construct a dam across the Snake River, in the State of Washington, was announced as first in order on the Calendar.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask that the bill may go to the Calendar, under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from Idaho.

BOUNTY LAND FOR SURVIVORS OF FLORIDA SEMINOLE INDIAN WAR.

The bill (S. 1407) to extend the provisions of the existing bounty-land laws to the officers and enlisted men, and the officers and men of the boat companies of the Florida Seminole Indian war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over. Let it go to the Calendar under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It will go to the Calendar under Rule IX at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN subsequently said: I ask that Senate bill 1407 be restored to the Calendar under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I ask that the bill may be now considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to extend the provisions of the existing bounty-land laws to include the officers and enlisted men and the officers and men of the boat companies who served during the Florida Seminole Indian war of 1856 to 1858, inclusive, and to the widows of such persons.

Mr. KEAN. Now let us have the report read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

The Secretary read in part the report submitted by Mr. TALIAFERRO on the 27th ultimo, the entire report being as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1407) to extend the provisions of the existing bounty-land laws to the officers and enlisted men and the officers and men of the boat companies of the Florida Seminole Indian war, have examined the same and respectfully report the bill back and recommend that the bill do pass.

A precisely similar bill (S. 5924) was introduced in the Fifty-ninth Congress and was favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Pensions and was passed by the Senate, but no action was taken on the bill by the House of Representatives. The report made in the Fifty-ninth Congress is adopted by the committee, and is as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5924) to extend the provisions of the existing bounty-land laws to the officers and enlisted men, and the officers and men of the boat companies, of the Florida Seminole Indian war, have examined the same and report:

The purpose of this bill is to include within the benefits of existing bounty laws the officers and enlisted men of the Florida Seminole Indian war of 1856–1858, and the officers and men who served in boat companies during that war, and also their widows.

The present laws provide bounty land of 160 acres for services of at least fourteen days, or participation in battle, in any war in which the United States was engaged between 1790 and March 3, 1855. No provision is made for any war since March 3, 1855.

A brief statement of the several bounty-land acts and what service is required to give title thereunder, and also of the number of military land warrants issued by the Pension Bureau up to June 30, 1904, is contained in the Annual Report of the Commissioner of Pensions, dated August 1, 1904, page 15. That statement is as follows:

SEC. 19.—BOUNTY-LAND WARRANTS.

It is a part of the duty of the Pension Bureau to issue military bounty-land warrants under the laws governing the same.

There have been several acts of Congress granting land as bounty for military service, but at present these acts are all obsolete except three—

Act of February 11, 1847 (9 Stat. L., 123).
Act of September 28, 1850 (9 Stat. L., 520).
Act of March 3, 1855 (10 Stat. L., 701).

The two above acts of 1847 and 1850 are practically obsolete now, there having been but six issues under them (840 acres) in five years.

Service to give title to bounty land must have been for at least fourteen days or in a battle prior to March 3, 1855; and if in the Navy or Regular Army must have been in some war in which the United States Government was engaged.

SEC. 20.—EPITOME OF BOUNTY-LAND HISTORY.

In the next section is submitted a report showing the total number of bounty-land warrants of all classes issued since the Revolutionary war, and the number of acres represented. Warrants issued directly from the General Land Office under special acts of Congress and on account of the Virginia military land grants satisfied by the United States after the cession of the Northwestern Territory, which aggregate a very large number of acres, are not of record in this Bureau, and are not included in this report.

The Revolutionary war and war of 1812 bounty-land acts expired by limitation June 26, 1858. These wars are included, however, in the act of March 3, 1855. The act of March 22, 1852, was superseded by the act of 1855.

The act of February 11, 1847, and supplemental acts provide 160 acres for enlisted men of the Mexican war who enlisted for a period of not less than twelve months and served out the term of their enlistment, unless sooner discharged for disability; 40 acres for those who enlisted for less than twelve months. Beneficiaries: First, soldier; second, widow and children; third, father or mother; fourth brothers and sisters.

The act of September 28, 1850, provides for officers in the Mexican war and officers and enlisted men in all other wars from 1790 to September, 1850. Beneficiaries: First, soldier; second, widow; third, minor children; fourth, father or mother; fifth, brothers and sisters.

The act of March 3, 1855, officers and enlisted men, and, under certain conditions, nonenlisted persons who served fourteen days or were engaged in battle in any war between 1790 and March 3, 1855, are entitled to 160 acres; and section 2425, Revised Statutes, provides that when a warrant for less than 160 acres has issued under any prior act an additional warrant shall issue for such quantity of land as will make in the whole 160 acres.

In explanation of any discrepancy which may exist between this and former reports as to the number of warrants issued under the act of March 3, 1855, it is stated that in former reports it appears to have been assumed that the number of the last warrant represented the total number of warrants issued.

The Commissioner of the General Land Office, in his report of outstanding warrants which have never been presented for location, appears to have assumed the same thing. A careful examination shows, however, that for various reasons 127 serial numbers have not been used and that the last serial number is just that much in advance of the number of warrants actually issued.

According to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office for the year ending June 30, 1902, there were then outstanding 19,680 warrants for 2,227,000 acres.

SEC. 21.—TOTAL ISSUE OF BOUNTY-LAND WARRANTS.

The following table gives the total number of military bounty-land warrants issued up to July 1, 1904:

The report of the Commissioner of Pensions, dated August 28, 1905, page 18, shows that the number of bounty-land warrants issued during the year ending June 30, 1905, was 41, and during the five years preceding that date, 151. His report of total number of land warrants granted up to July 1, 1905, is as follows:

"BOUNTY-LAND WARRANTS.

"During the past fiscal year 41 military bounty-land warrants were issued, granting 6,320 acres of land. The number of warrants issued during the last five years was 151, granting 22,680 acres.

"Service to give title to bounty land must have been for at least fourteen days, or in a battle prior to March 3, 1855; and, if in the Navy or Regular Army, must have been in some war in which the United States Government was engaged.

"This table does not include warrants issued directly from the General Land Office under special acts of Congress and those issued on account of the Virginia military land grants satisfied by the United States after the cession of the Northwestern Territory, which are not of record in this Bureau."

Since March 3, 1855, there has been no additional legislation authorizing grant of bounty-land warrants, and no provision has been made for those who fought in the early Indian wars subsequent to that date. The Seminole Indian war, for which this bill proposes to make provision, was fought by Regular and Volunteer troops under direction of United States military authorities. That the services rendered by these troops were as arduous and important in results as the services of troops in any of the Indian wars prior to March 3, 1855, for which provision is made by existing laws, is undoubted, and there is abundant evidence thereof.

It appears from the official records that hostilities in the Seminole Indian war of the late fifties began December 20, 1855, with an attack on an exploring party under the command of Lieut. G. L. Hartsuff, Second Artillery, by a party of Indians. The war was declared closed in a proclamation of Col. Gustavus Loomis, Fifth Infantry, commanding Department of Florida, dated May 8, 1858.

The report of the Secretary of War for 1856 contains the following remark concerning the Seminole Indians:

"These Indians have within the past year given repeated evidence of their hostility, and the Department has made the necessary arrangements to carry on a vigorous campaign against them during the present season. As large a force as the demands of the service in other quarters will permit has been concentrated in Florida for this purpose, consisting of four companies of the First Artillery, ten companies of the Fourth Artillery, the Fifth Regiment of Infantry, and a limited number of volunteer militia."

In his annual report for the year 1857 the Secretary of War said:

"The Indian war in Florida claimed the attention of a strong force, composed mainly of the Fifth Infantry and Fourth Artillery, during the spring and early part of the summer. This war has been prosecuted with all the vigor which the character of the country and that of the enemy would admit of. The country is a perpetual succession of swamps and morasses, almost impenetrable, and the Indians partake rather of the nature of beasts of the chase than of men capable of resisting in fight a military power. Their only strength lies in a capacity to elude pursuit.

"Exigent affairs in the West demanded the removal of those two regiments from Florida to the Territory of Kansas; but they have been replaced by volunteers, and the pursuit of the Indians has been continued by the latter troops up to the present time. The services rendered by these volunteer troops have been spoken of in terms of merited commendation in the reports of officers in command."

The Adjutant-General, in his report for the year 1857, said:

"The exigencies of the service in Kansas and Utah compelled the Department to withdraw the Fourth Artillery and the Fifth Infantry from Florida at a time when the operations being prosecuted by these regiments appeared to give good promise of a speedy and succcessful termination of the campaign against the hostile Seminoles, in which they were engaged. The companies of the First Artillery in Florida and the volunteers which, on the transfer of so large a portion of the Regular force to other duties, it was found necessary to call into the service of the General Government have been actively employed during the past season. The hiding places resorted to by the Indians have been penetrated, and hostile parties have in several instances been so closely pressed by the troops as to barely escape capture."

In respect to pensions, the officers and enlisted men of all of the early Indian wars and their widows have the same status. The first Indian war service act, approved July 27, 1892, provided for the Black Hawk war, Creek war, Cherokee disturbances, and the Florida war with the Seminole Indians from 1832 to 1842. The second Indian war service act, approved June 27, 1902, extended the provisions of the first act to practically all of the other various early Indian wars down to 1858, inclusive. The troops who were given pensionable status under the first act—of July 27, 1892—had title to bounty-land warrant under the act of March 3, 1855, they having rendered service in a war prior to that date, and there are but few of them who have not availed themselves of the bounty of the Government in this respect. Many of those also who were given pensionable status by the second service act—of June 27, 1902—also obtained bounty land for their service, the only exception being those who rendered service subsequent to March 3, 1855.

By no parity of reasoning can this discrimination be defended, particularly with regard to those who fought in the Seminole Indian war of the late fifties, in whose behalf this legislation is proposed. Those troops performed their part worthily and with equal valor, and their recognition for similar benefits is but just and equitable.

The services of the officers and men of the boat companies for which this bill also makes provision were exceptionally arduous and hazardous and, under the conditions obtaining in Florida, absolutely necessary.

These companies were recruited for service in the everglades, bays, and swamps of Florida. They were armed and equipped as soldiers and acted under orders of a Regular Army officer. The rules and regulations applicable to them were those in force with the regularly enrolled soldiers of the United States. They were thoroughly acquainted with the country, and without their effective aid the war would have been greatly prolonged, the service of the Regular troops proving futile in the tracking and pursuit of the hostile Indians. They were the men able to track the Indians to their strongholds in the everglades; they served as guides, boatmen, trailers, and their service was hazardous in the extreme and subjected them to hardships and exposures unusual even in that region. Wagon masters and teamsters who were employed under direction of competent authority in time of war in the transportation of military stores and supplies were given title to bounty-land warrants by the act of March 3, 1855, and the services of the officers and men of the boat companies of the Seminole Indian war are eminently more worthy of recognition.

No definite statement can be made of the number likely to be benefited under the provisions of this bill. In January, 1900, the Commissioner of Pensions estimated the number of survivors of the Seminole war, from 1842 to 1858, as 1,002 and the number of widows at 700. That was six years ago, and in the very nature of things their number is considerably less now. It is about fifty years since this war was fought; its survivors are old and gray, and their numbers rapidly diminish each succeeding year.

The Florida boat companies numbered about 300 officers and men, and it is safe to predict that there will not be as many as 100 beneficiaries from them under this bill.

In money this legislation will cost the Government nothing. It simply extends the existing bounty-land laws to a few worthy soldiers, who settled once and for all the Indian troubles in Florida and won for peaceful habitation a large part of that territory. It has been only within a few years past that they have been rewarded with pensions, and it but seems fitting and proper that they should be put on the same footing as to bounty land as the survivors of the other early Indian wars.

Your committee commend the legislation as just and equitable and recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Perhaps the Senator from Florida can give me the information I desire on this subject without having the entire report read. What I desire to know is how much land will it take and what is the scope of the bill?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The report ought to show what the Pension Bureau has to say on the subject. There are some twelve or fifteen hundred of these pensioners in the State of Florida. The bill seeks to put them in the exact attitude of pensioners of every other Indian war.

The act of 1855 gave to the survivors of the Indian wars land bounty up to that period, and the bill seeks to continue it so as to take in the period from 1855 to 1858.

Mr. KEAN. And it would take about 140,000 acres of land?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I do not know exactly, but possibly.

Mr. KEAN. Would it take 250,000 acres?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. No; I should say not 250,000 by any means, but possibly 150,000 acres.

Mr. KEAN. If fifteen hundred people get 160 acres each, it would take 240,000 acres.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The lands, I understand, come from Florida.

Mr. KEAN. Are they all in the State of Florida?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I understand they are all in the State of Florida. That is my understanding.

Mr. KEAN. If the land that is to be taken is confined to the State of Florida, of course I have nothing to say on the subject.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. That is my understanding.

Mr. HOPKINS. The Senator had better offer an amendment of that kind.

Mr. KEAN. Will the Senator from Florida agree to amend the bill so as to provide that the lands shall be taken in the State of Florida?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. I did not catch what the Senator said.

Mr. KEAN. That the lands shall be taken exclusively in the State of Florida.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. That is my understanding of it. There are over half a million acres of Government land in the State of Florida, and they would hardly go out of the State to extend these bounty-land laws to pensioners when the land was in the State.

Mr. KEAN. Then, would it not be as well to amend the bill so as to provide that the land shall be taken entirely within the State?

Mr. TALIAFERRO. The bill in its present form passed the Senate in the last Congress. It is now in exactly the form it was in at that time. I hope the Senator will not insist on an amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I think it ought to be amended so as to take the lands in the State of Florida.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KEAN. I move to add as an amendment the following proviso:

Provided, That the lands so taken shall be in the State of Florida.

Mr. BACON. On the matter of public lands, I should like to ask the Senator from New Jersey if he knows of any instance in which heretofore there has been such a limitation upon any such grant of land to a particuler State?

Mr. KEAN. I think in Arkansas, in Louisiana, and in other States.

Mr. BACON. It has been done in former instances?

Mr. KEAN. I think so.

Mr. BACON. Is the Senator sure of it? The Senator says he thinks so, but if he has any definite information I would be glad to have him furnsh it.

Mr. KEAN. The only definite information would be obtained by looking up the actual statutes, but I think it has been done.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator has definite knowledge of the fact that such has been the practice, then I can see no reason why it should not be followed in this instance, but if it has not been done heretofore it seems to me that there should not be a difference made in this case.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. There has been no provision of this sort incorporated in the other land-bounty acts giving lands to the survivors of the Indian wars. If these men are entitled to the land in Florida, and it should be possible under this act for them to get it elsewhere, I see no reason why there should be any exceptions made against them and that they should be confined to one State when others have been permitted to get land in another State.

I am not contending that they will go to another State, but even if that should prove to be the case I see no reason why there should be a discrimination against these men, and I hope the Senate will reject any amendment looking to a discrimination against them. The purpose of the bill is to put them on a footing with the survivors of other Indian wars. Nothing more is asked, and nothing less should be extended to them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I assume, of course, that these survivors are entitled to the relief proposed to be given by the bill, because it has undoubtedly gone through the scrutiny of the Pension Office and through the committee's scrutiny. I think the Senator from New Jersey, upon reflection, will see that it would be unjust to offer an amendment; that it would be not only unjust to these survivors, but unjust to other States having public lands within their borders.

We are all of us seeking, as far as we can, to put the lands in our States in private ownership, in small holdings, and I know, as far as the State which I in part represent is concerned, we will gladly welcome the taking of 160 acres each by a good many people, whether survivors of the Indian wars or not, within the confines of the State.

Mr. KEAN. But these are not homesteaders.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Even if they are not homesteaders, a man who has 160 acres of land makes some beneficial use of it, whereas, if it is not taken by anyone, no beneficial use whatever is made of it. I think the Senator will see the manifest injustice of throwing a restriction around it.

Mr. KEAN. I will not insist on the amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws his amendment.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINING TECHNOLOGY BRANCH.

The next business on the Calendar was the joint resolution (S. R. 35) to provide for a mining technology branch in the Geological Survey.

Mr. KEAN. Let that go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL BANKING LAWS.

The bill (S. 3023) to amend the national banking laws was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let the bill go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar, under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Illinois.

STEWART & CO. AND A. P. H. STEWART.

The bill (S. 3843) for the relief of the legal representatives of Stewart & Co. and A. P. H. Stewart was announced as next in order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask that the bill may go over under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go to the Calendar, under Rule IX, at the request of the Senator from Illinois.

O BAH BAUM.

The bill (S. 4103) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the amount due O bah baum, and pay the same out of the fund known as "For the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PETER FLEMING.

The bill (S. 1893) granting an honorable discharge to Peter Fleming was considered as in the Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of War to grant an honorable discharge to Peter Fleming, late of Battery E, Third Artillery.

Mr. KEAN. Ought not the bill to be amended so as to provide that no pay, bounty, or other allowance shall accrue?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey move that amendment?

Mr. KEAN. I do. I move to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT RILEY MILITARY RESERVATION LAND.

The bill (S. 3157) to authorize the War Departemnt to transfer certain land belonging to the Fort Riley Military Reservation to the State of Kansas was considered as in Committee of the Whole.
